KREISKY DISCUSSES ENERGY, FOREIGN POLICY PROBLEMS

AU291344 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 29 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Thomas Chorherr report on interview with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky on domestic and foreign policy issues in Vienna--no date given]

[Summary] Vienna--In view of the dramatic development in the energy sector, the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] will undertake a new initiative in the fall to have the mothballed Zwentendorf nuclear powerplant put into operation. "In his DIE PRESSE interview, the government chief drew attention to what he called 'terrible problems' in the energy supply sector which, he said, make it necessary to reconsider the situation. According to Kreisky, the coal deliveries from Poland could not be implemented to the extent originally agreed upon, deliveries from other countries would involve higher transport costs, nuclear power is much cleaner than coal as a fuel, there is growing resistance from ecologists against additional hydropower projects and the costs of these projects are constantly increasing."

In the chancellor's opinion, the competitive situation of Austria's industry is deteriorating because the share of energy costs in total production costs are continually rising and in the long run there will be no getting around a discussion of the nuclear energy problem. Kreisky warned nuclear power opponents that the other side also could mobilize emotions, but he left no doubt about keeping the promise that the law banning nuclear energy production in Austria would only be abolished with a two-thirds majority in parliament.

Kreisky pleaded for the earliest completion of the Rhine-Main-Danube canal in view of its eminent importance for fuel transport costs. He took a dim view of the general economic prospects but expressed the hope that sooner or later a prosperity phase would spread from the United States to Europe.

Kreisky also commented extensively on foreign policy questions. The facts that Foreign Minister Pahr was elected chairman of the UN Kampuchea conference and that he, Kreisky, was chosen as cochairman of the North-South summit meeting to be held in Mexico in October can be regarded as recognition of our country's international position, the chancellor said. He added: "'For the first time, leading statesmen from 22 countries will talk about the North-South problem and they will do so without just reading statements prepared in advance. There will be an opportunity for Thatcher to inform us of her views and President Reagan, as I have gathered from the letter he wrote me, will give us his opinion. And with a little bit of luck, there will be a climate which, although not lacking a certain tension, will also be conducive to the forming of friendships. The world needs such an event especially in these times.' Kreisky said that the only regrettable aspect is that the Soviet Union sees no need to attend the meetings: 'But this time, I think, that will be to its own detriment.'

"The chancellor described Austria's relations with its neighbors as good, but added: 'Only in the CSSR there are a few people who think they know all the answers.' The Hodic case, he said, overshadows the relations with Prague. He said he still does not believe that this man was planted as an agent: 'No agent would move out the way he did!' Perhaps the man 'who is no giant as far as character is concerned has been turned round,' the chancellor said."

In this interview, Kreisky commented for the first time on the personal danger reportedly threatening him from radical Palestinians, emphatically rejecting the narrowminded view that he would not be threatened now if he had not meddled in Middle East affairs.

"I claim credit for the fact that for years I have familiarized my colleagues in the West with the Palestinian problem." "This problem is the key to the whole Middle East problem. I had a mission to fulfill which I regarded truly as a matter of conscience--and that is known in the world." As to the question of his being personally endangered, he said that no one was safe in life, not even a famous pop star.

The chancellor is worried about the developments in Lebanon: "'Should there be an open Israel-Syria confrontation tomorrow, then it also will be a confrontation with Syria's ally, the Soviet Union,' he said, adding that there was nothing the superpowers would like less than a confrontation in the Middle East that might touch off developments which could no longer be controlled." Regarding his own role, he said that he had never regarded himself as a mediator because a mediator must enjoy the confidence of all sides. "And I am a thorn in the side of all extremists, that goes for the Palestinians as well as for the Israelis. Nevertheless, I will continue to advocate my views because it is contrary to my world outlook when young people again and again fall victim to intransigence and doctrinairism!"

In connection with the term intransigence, Kreisky mentioned Israeli Prime Minister Begin. "Only 2 years ago, everyone sneered at my frankness regarding this man. I said at that time that he lacked the greatness to recognize the full dimensions of As-Sadat's policy. Today, the world knows that I was not wrong. This is being felt primarily by Israel's friends and eventually it also will make itself felt for the people of Israel!"

In conclusion, Kreisky commented once more on his personal situation, arguing that being a prominent figure involves the overcoming of some feelings, including personal fear--which has nothing to do with courage. He added: "Were the times today safe and good, I should find it easier to retire. As it is, I am going to carry on."

NEW AUSTRIA-CZECHOSLOVAKIA TENSIONS EMERGE

AU292018 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Text] New tensions have emerged between Austria and Czechoslovakia. The Prague party paper RUDE PRAVO, in a sharp article today, charged Austria with taking no action against the anti-Czechoslovak activities of emigres in Austria. After the affair involving CSSR agent Hodic, the stiff sentence passed on regime critic Rudolf Batek in Prague yesterday and after the CSSR's refusal to transport postal packages from Austria to Poland, this newspaper article has been the most recent item thus far in an evident exacerbation of the climate between Prague and Vienna, above all if one thinks of the visit to Austria by state-party head Husak, planned for this fall. The Foreign Ministry in Vienna has not yet responded to the newspaper article. However, several organizations in Austria today sharply protested the verdict--7 and 1/2 years prison--passed on regime critic Rudolf Batek.

This morning in Vienna, slogans in support of Charter 77 and Rudolf Batek were sprayed on the Czechoslovak Embassy building.

EXPERT ADVOCATES CONCERTED ACTION AGAINST DOLLAR

DW291225 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 29 Jul 81 p 13

[Article by Prof Wilhelm Hankel: "Reagan's Economic Policy--a Sort of U.S. Gaullism"]

[Excerpts] People in the Federal Republic have hardly taken note of, or even understood, two developments which are unparalleled in U.S. postwar relations with Europe: To begin with, it is the "second" and real election victory of a President whose program wasn't considered serious even by most of his friends in the business world. This program is one of financing massive increased state expenditures on unproductive armaments by drastically cutting the social budget, which is not particularly lavish anyway, to avoid jeopardizing the desired balanced budget. After 200 days in office, however, President Reagan is as popular as have been few of his predecessors.

What is not understood, in the second place, is that the declared precedence of combatting inflation over social security and full employment is but a code for a far more ambitious and fundamental objective, that is, safeguarding the new U.S. "leadership" in the world not only with arms but also economically or, to be more specific, monetarily--by means of an "eternally strong" U.S. dollar. Few people know that President Reagan, the former governor of California and Hollywood actor, is a learned economist and knows more than many of his adversaries and partners about the interactions among military, political and economic strengths. His target is not the Soviet Union--a military giant and economic midget--let alone the Federal republic, which has failed to derive political profit from its economic strength even in Europe; his model is not Roosevelt but rather De Gaulle who wanted to crown and safeguard the leadership role pursued for France in West Europe with a strong franc (equal to the German mark).

The question which concerns the entire West is this: Is President Reagan aware of the risks of his policy, risks which are not just of an economic nature? The risks for the United States itself are obvious. The concentration of government spending programs on the military-industrial complex will even further and more profoundly disrupt the U.S. economic cycle. While the arms industries and their suppliers prosper, the rest of the branches will become further depressed. Moreover, the small budget reserves will be used up by arms policy before the end of this year.

Thus, in view of the inevitable followup requirements of the arms and arms conversion programs already adopted, a budget gap of as much as $10 billion or more is already taking shape for the 1982-83 fiscal year. It doesn't matter which ideas the administration might develop: inflation and unemployment will go up, not down. The relief to currency policy--meaning the high interest policy--by means of a financial policy aimed at a balanced budget, as conjured up in Ottawa, will not materialize either this year or during this term of President Reagan.

Granted, the United States is not England or France. But nobody dares visualize what might happen among the disillusioned unemployed people in the slums of New York, Chicago, Buffalo and other industrial centers in the event of a continuation or even aggravation of the crisis. In comparison to what could happen, the events in Liverpool and Brixton in 1981 and in Paris in 1968, which swept De Gaulle, no less, out of office, might merely be harmless gusts of wind.

The removal of the U.S. dollar as the "binding" currency system, a decision made at Bretton Woods in the spring of 1973 (6 months prior to the oil price escalation by OPEC), as an act of European self-awareness--a move which the protagonists of that time might secretly regret now--actually made the "disturbing" upward surge of the U.S. dollar possible. To this extent, also from the U.S. viewpoint, it is somewhat ironic that by his strong dollar policy, President Reagan is doing exactly wha short-sighted Europeans demanded of his predecessor and fellow party member Nixon 8 years ago, namely, to remove the U.S. dollar from European support actions. The Europeans, who at the time wanted to dissociate themselves from the inflation imported through the weak dollar, must now defend themselves against depression imported via the strong dollar which forces them into a highly undesired high interest policy. Was the exchange worthwile?

Definitely it was not and it would be naive to believe that it would be easier to conclude a currency agreement or even an interest rate agreement with the incumbent administration than it would perhaps have been with the Carter administration which Chancellor Schmidt did not particularly like. For the time being, Reagan's neo-Gaullism leaves but one option: European self-help. Its core is (or would be) the European currency system (ECU) created 2 years ago. Instead of a unilateral or bilateral policy of intervention against the dollar by the so-called European currency system currencies, it allows a joint intervention policy: a concentrated floating of all European currencies vis-a-vis the U.S. dollar which is considered to be too strong. This would lead to a better distribution and mitigation of the devaluation pressure of individual European currency system currencies, for instance, of the German mark vis-a-vis the dollar, without entailing internal tensions within the European currency group. With respect to interest rate policy, Europe could disengage itself from the U.S. level and wage its own crusade against investment lethargy, crisis escalation and unemployment--whatever the intentions of U.S. economic, exchange rate and interest rate policies might be--after the model of "happy" Japan which, relying on its secure domestic and foreign markets, has been drastically underbidding the U.S. interest rate level for quite some time, without any negative effect on the external value of its yen. In fact, the opposite has been the case.

CHEYSSON RULES OUT EXTRADITION OF BANI-SADR

LD292100 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Now that the religious extremists are all-powerful in Iran, former President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr has, in his turn, requested and obtained political asylum in our country. As you will hear, the first words he said to French journalists this morning were very political ones. If I am here, he said, it is to help my people resist the dictatorship of the ayatollahs.

Apparently, Bani-Sadr's statements have not been greeted favorably by the Quai d'Orsay. An official from the Foreign Affairs Ministry went to see him a short time ago in Cachan to ask him to be a little more discreet. Bani-Sadr immediately canceled the news conference he was to hold this afternoon.

For the moment, the French Government is turning a deaf ear to Tehran's threats. There is no question of extraditing Bani-Sadr. External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said so very clearly, speaking to (Annette Ardisson):

[Begin recording] There is no extradition for political motives, for political offenses or for political crimes. Once again, there isn't one rule for the Basques, one rule for the Iranians, one rule for the Cambodians: The attitude we adopt is a general one. We only extradite for common law crimes, recognized by us as common law crimes. There is a general French position which is that France recognizes the right of asylum for political refugees. Bani-Sadr requested asylum; asylum was granted to him on the condition, of course, that he abstain from all political activity in France and coming from France. This is a general rule and is not only for Bani-Sadr. There are other political refugees: Coumba from Central Africa, a number of Basques, Cambodians and others. There is a general rule: There is no Bani-Sadr rule. And if he doesn't make any political statements, Bani-Sadr is free in France. But if he makes a political statement, he will be contradicting the commitment he made and even signed this morning. [end recording]

PCF'S GREMETZ CRITICIZES REAGAN MONETARY POLICY

PM291451 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jul 81 p 4

[Report on French TV statement by PCF Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz]

[Text] PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz was questioned on the 1300 hours news program yesterday about the big seven capitalists powers' conference just held in Canada.

He emphasized that "the Ottawa summit fully illustrates the depth of the crisis facing the capitalist world and the obstinate refusal, to say the least, on the part of Reagan to modify in any way his monetary policy, the high interest rates and the domination of the dollar. In short, he is showing his determination to make other countries and nations bear the brunt of the pernicious effects of his economic policy. This is totally counter to the interests of our country."

Recalling the satisfaction expressed by Reagan, the PCF Central Committee secretary said: "He found great understanding among his partners and full support for his international policy, which may properly be described as one of confrontation, a policy which turns its back on detente.

Reagan seeks to control commercial transactions and international cooperation between countries, both with socialist and developing countries. This is an extravagant claim and it also ignores the interests of our country and international cooperation. With its desire for change, expressed so widely on 10 May, France has every interest in developing broad cooperation internationally and with the socialist countries, both with the developing countries and with all countries of the world, on the basis of mutual interest. At the same time, it has every interest in pursuing a broad, active policy of detente, peace and disarmament."

OFFICIALS HOLD TALKS WITH CONGO'S SASSOU-NGUESSO

AB281505 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Today is the third day of President Sassou-Nguesso's official working visit to France. This visit is devoted to holding talks with French officials, politicians and businessmen. On this third and last day of his visit, his schedule still remains tight, the most important item being his meeting with President Francois Mitterrand, who received him in audience at the Elysee this morning at 1030. This private discussion was followed by a working lunch during which each head of state was surrounded by his close associates. We are sure that the talks centered on an exchange of views which we suppose was fruitful.

Since his arrival in the French capital, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso has had a very heavy schedule at the Triangle Hotel and the audience with the president took advantage of the opportunity presented by the recent changes in France in the past few months to review bilateral cooperation and to further strengthen it. The meeting at the Elysee also falls within this context. The common desire to strengthen this cooperation exists both in Paris and Brazzaville. In short, the Congolese and French delegations are meeting in Paris to achieve this objective.

This is what the secretary general of the French Communist Party, George Marchais, declared after his 1 hour audience with President Denis Sassou-Nguesso. Before this, the head of state recived Edem Kodjo, the OAU secretary general. The head of state this afternoon will receive the managing director of the ELF-Aquitaine oil company, Albin Chalandon, and French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson.

Presidents Address Newsmen

AB291650 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Presidents Francois Mitterrand and Denis Sassou-Nguesso expressed their feelings of satisfaction yesterday at the Elysee, at the end of a 3-hour face-to-face talk at state level. The French president was the first to address newsmen:

[Begin recording] We have just ended a long conversation which continued during our lunch together. This talk with the president of the Republic of the Congo enabled me to appreciate some facts as they are presented and also to have some exchanges which I believe are beneficial to our two countries. The talk also enabled me to review with several ministers a series of projects in the most interesting fields. We can say that our talk was held in a very cordial and friendly manner and it's just normal that we think about the past and the present, that is [words indistinct] I must speak the truth and express my happiness at receiving the president of the Republic of the Congo at the Elysee. [end recording]

Replying, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso recalled the Congo's interest in and expressed his happiness about the change which occurred in France. Then the head of state expressed his satisfaction over his Paris talks.

[Begin recording] You know that we have already made our views known over the changes which occurred in France and we have already welcomed the victory of the French left. We have already had the opportunity to state that this new situation should bring about a happy development in the relations between France and the Congo. We have just had fruitful talks with the president, with members of the government, and we think that these talks clearly demonstrate the views we have already expressed. With the president himself and the French authorities, we said that the ties between France and the Third World countries should be given a new orientation and we have just noted that. We think that together we will work toward peace, the development of our countries and freedom for the people of the world. We can say that we are satisfied with our talks. [end recording]

FRENCH MINISTER TRIES TO 'CLEAR AIR' ON TERRORISTS

LD292030 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Summary] Interior and Decentralization Minister Gaston Defferre talked with his Spanish counterpart, Juan Jose Roson, in Madrid today in a difficult atmosphere resulting from Spain accusing France of being too lenient on Basque refugees in France and from France's recent refusal to extradite Basque terrorists to Spain.

In an attempt to clear the air, Defferre proposed that a squadron of mobile riot police should be permanently stationed along the common border; the submission of all Basque refugees who exceed the right of asylum to the French authorities; and, finally, with the exception of border departments, the confinement to their residence of certain separatists who have sought refuge in France and who are reputedly dangerous.

Communique Issued on Talks

LD292032 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Spanish-French communique issued in Madrid after 29 July talks between Spanish Interior Minister Juan Roson and French Interior Minister Gaston Defferre--read by unidentified Spanish Interior Ministry spokesman--live]

[Text] Following the visit to Paris by Spanish Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo and the talks he had with the French President Mitterrand and Premier Mauroy, Interior and Decentralization Minister Defferre today visited Madrid at the invitation of Spanish Interior Minister Roson.

The two ministers jointly studied the problems within their jurisdiction in the framework of Spanish-French relations and they examined in particular the problems of terrorism in the respective countries. Roson explained the importance for Spain, and the defense of its democratic regime, of an effective struggle against terrorism, and its justification in a system which fully assures the protection of the rights of man, the political freedoms of citizens and the pluralistic representation of different political options. He also stressed the importance that the Spanish people and Government attribute to the solidarity of other democratic countries, and especially to the cooperation of France, in the struggle against terrorism.

For his part, Defferre said that he fully understands the importance which the struggle against terrorism has for the defense of democracy in Spain and he conveyed the resolute decision of the French Government to give the Spanish authorities all its support in the belief that this struggle is compatible with respect for the principles of human rights to which the French Government is fundamentally bound. Defferre informed the Spanish minister of the specific measures which are already in effect or which are to be set in motion by the French Government to ensure better control of the border and of the illegal activities which have been carried out on French territory.

The two ministers (?agreed) that this first meeting should be confirmed at the level of the leaders of the two administrations in August to coordinate the action by the two governments.

REPORTAGE ON 10TH COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

Lertxundi Hits Carrillo Report

[Text] Roberto Lertxundi, secretary general of the Communist Party of Euskadi, today launched a fierce attack on the report delivered yesterday by Santiago Carrillo.

He first gave a positive evaluation of the first part of the report but then went on to attack harshly Carrillo's view of a new [word indistinct] of the party. As far as this is concerned, he said, we have regressed since the last party congress. Speaking of the period of the transition, he said that the Communists have made some mistakes. He criticized the support given by the Communist parliamentary group to the antiterrorists because the way in which it is being applied in the Basque country is violating human rights rights, Lertxundi said. He also spoke out to forestall some rumors to the effect that he might leave the party. Roberto Lertxundi told the plenary session: Nobody is going to leave this party. In the vote on Santiago Carrillo's report, the majority of Euskadi Communists will abstain. A certain stir was caused in the auditorium also by the speech made by (Antonio Romero), secretary of the rural branch of workers' commissions, speaking on behalf of the Andalusian majority, who attacked the party's intellectuals, accusing them of lack of militancy. As he spoke, a number of them left the hall. So, this lively and sometimes merciless debate on Carrillo's report continues [words indistinct].

Delegates Appeal for Unity

NC291656 Paris AFP in English 1646 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 29 Jul (AFP)--The delegates to the 10th Spanish Communist Party Congress here today launched an appeal for unity and conciliation to prevent the possible break-up of the party. Most of the representatives of the different regional organizations criticized the "intractable" and even "Stalinist" tone of a report by Secretary General Santiago Carrillo in which he menaced party "fractionalists" with expulsion.

The Basque representative, Roberto Lertxundi, was particularly applauded when he shouted: "The doors of the party must be opened to welcome back brothers who have left, not to shove others out." Lertxundi also said that Basque Communists would respect party discipline and accept the decisions of the 10th congress, provided that no one was expelled from the party for his or her ideas.

While a majority of delegates are aginst formal recognition of the various groups in the party, which the Eurocommunist "innovators" want, they do wish a large measure of democracy within the party and complete freedom of expression. Mr Carillo's report will probably be approved by the congress, but with many abstentions. A large majority of delegates approved Mr Carrillo's Eurocommunist strategy in the first part of his report, but could not swallow the kind of party proposed in the second part, which excludes, they claim, real liberty of expression. Marcelino Comacho, secretary general of the pro-Communist worker commissions union and very close to Mr Carrillo, conceded later that the party chief had gone too far in his attacks on the innovators, and that he would have liked him to have used a more conciliatory tone. Most of the representatives of the 1,213 delegations did not hide the serious weaknesses of the party: a wide gap between leaders and the members, and between intellectuals and workers, besides the loss of "the feeling of brotherhood" that characterized the party in the past. Tomorrow the delegates will discuss their leaders' ideas and put the secretary general's report to a vote.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUMED; STATEMENTS ISSUED

NC292030 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held this evening. A communique mentions that a general exchange of views took place during the meeting, from which it emerged that for the time being neither side wishes to add anything to what it has previously been declared in connection with the practical measures and the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem. The communique adds that during the next meeting, which will take place on 5 or 12 August, the territorial aspect of the problem will be discussed.

In a statement before today's meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, said that in the talks he had in New York with Mr Waldheim he had received instructions on ways to deal with the new phase of the inter-Cyprus talks. The new phase, he added, will be very constructive.

When asked what he meant by the term very constructive, Gobbi said: When I say constructive I mean new developments, new proposals, new discussions and a more courageous approach to the problem. Replying to a question on the date for the submission of the Turkish proposals, Gobbi said he is not sure, but added that on 5 August a meeting will be held on the Cyprus problem's territorial aspect and that he hopes everything will develop as foreseen.

Regarding the content of the Turkish proposals, Gobbi said that he has an idea of the proposals. Replying to a question on what he bases his optimism regarding the progress of the dialogue, Gobbi said that perhaps on the idea he has about the proposals' content. Finally, replying to a question on whether the UN secretary general has in mind the possibility of a total settlement of the Cyprus problem, Gobbi said that Waldheim has certain ideas and recommendations. However, he added, for the time being these new ideas and recommendations have not been propounded.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative at the talks, Mr Ioannidhis, stated that he has been informed that at the next meeting, Wednesday, 5 August, the Turkish Cypriot side will submit its proposals on the territorial aspect. Mr Ioannidhis said in reply to a question that he does not know the content of the Turkish proposals. Replying to a question on whether the proposals the Turkish press had published are constructive--provided they reflect the truth--Ioannidhis said: We are holding secret talks. If the proposals the press has published are the same as those to be submitted at the talks, then their publication was not constructive.

Replying to another question, Ioannidhis said that with the meeting on 5 August the seventh round of the inter-Cypriot talks would be completed. He added that the procedure to be followed in the future would depend on the content of the Turkish proposals. We hope, he said, that we shall have constructive proposals so that we may conduct a constructive dialogue.

The Turkish Cypriot side's representative at the talks, Mr Onan, declared that the date for the submission of the Turkish proposals will be fixed during today's meeting and added: On the day the proposals are submitted, I shall show you the map too, but not its content. Onan made it clear that he will submit a map for all of Cyprus and not for certain areas. Replying to a question on whether the map will be a map for a united Cyprus, Onan said: do not forget that we seek a federal solution. I assure you our intention is not partition.

Replying to another question, Onan said that the Cyprus problem's territorial aspect is linked with the constitutional aspect and that both sides have agreed on this.

DENKTAS BRIEFS GOBBI ON HIS ANKARA CONTACTS

TA281206 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] President Denktas today briefed the United Nations special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, on the points reached in Ankara by the president with regard to the Cyprus problem and on a plan for a comprehensive peace in Cyprus. Mr Gobbi returned to the island yesterday after consultations in New York with United Nations Secretary General Waldheim. The meeting, which lasted nearly an hour, was also attended by the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks, Mr Onan, and his advisor, Mr Ertekun.

In a statement afterward, Mr Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot side had been making every possible sacrifice for the beginning of comprehensive negotiations. He announced that tomorrow's session of the intercommunal talks will take place as planned and will deal with practical measures.

DENKTAS DENIES RUMORS OF NATO BASE IN NORTH

TA291255 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Text] President Denktas has categorically denied rumors to the effect that a base would be granted to NATO in the Karpas [Karpasha] area. In a statement to the TURKISH NEWS AGENCY, TAK, Mr Denktas said a base was out of the question because Cyprus would remain an independent and nonaligned country.

Referring to the package of proposals he recently brought from Ankara, Denktas said they were not contrary to the legislative assembly resolution of 5 November 1976. He gave an assurance that the new proposals would be presented to the assembly as soon as they were finalized.

KHARAVYI: TURKEY BOLSTERING DENKTAS' AUTHORITY

NC261103 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 28 Jul 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Commentary" column: "It Should Be Seriously Borne in Mind"]

[Text] According to news agency reports, the Turkish military government of Ankara is intervening with determination in order to bolster the shaking authority of Denktas over the Turkish Cypriot community. This Turkish-Cypriot politician barely managed to survive as "president" during the recent "elections" and managed this only with the vote of the colonists from Turkey. His party suffered a crushing defeat. Neither terror, chauvinist demagogy nor the propaganda support from the colonists were able to gain the confidence of the Turkish Cypriot community and turn it toward the Denktas circles. Now it is proved that only with the support of foreign intervention and pressure is it possible for these forces--which only a short time ago were all-powerful and could silence any opposition voice--to remain in control of the Turkish Cypriot community.

It is obvious that important changes are taking place within the Turkish Cypriot community. Chauvinism, intercommunal hatred and partitionist trends are all weakening. The forces that support rapprochement, peaceful coexistence and understanding between the two communities are gaining in strength to such a degree that the domestic aspects of our problem could be settled on the basis of a solution agreed upon by the Cypriots themselves. This very evident truth has vast significance for the future of the intercommunal talks and for the developments of the Cyprus issue. In no case should this be underestimated or even ignored by our own side. On the contrary, this should become a basic factor in laying down our strategy for the purpose of achieving a solution through negotiation on the basis of the jointly accepted summit agreements.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN ON KARAMANLIS' LONDON VISIT

NC271936 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] The government spokesman has made the following statement:

The interpretation made by some of the press on the cancellation of President Karamanlis' visit to London is arbitrary. If there were a political reason for this cancellation, neither would the prime minister, who will attend the wedding at the request of the president of the republic, have gone to London.

FRENCH DEPUTY MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

News Conference

NC281952 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Andre Chandernagor, minister delegate to the foreign minister charged with European affairs, gave a news conference at the Grande Bretagne Hotel at 1330 today. Among other things, Mr Chandernagor said that France is in favor of expanding the EEC as long as the Community first achieves greater domestic cohesion. If this does not happen, he stressed, then the EEC by expanding will dissolve. He also said that only if there are new needs would an increase in the member states contributions be necessary.

In answer to a question on the Middle East, he said that the Camp David agreement constitutes progress. The PLO is a significant representative of the Palestinian people, but it cannot be recognized as the only representative before the principle of self-determination is implemented. France, he added, has common views on these issues with the Greek Government. On Cyprus, Mr Chandernagor said that the middle solution is the intercommunal dialogue under UN auspices. It must succeed, he said, because the developments since 1974 are unacceptable.

The French minister said that he could not reply on certain issues. This could possibly be considered interfering in the domestic affairs of our country. He clarified that his meeting with Mr Papandreou took place within the framework of politeness that earlier aquaintanceship imposes. Our relations with Greece, he added, are determined on the state level, irrespective of government changes.

RALLIS, PAPANDREOU EXCHANGE COUNTERCHARGES

NC282046 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 28 Jul 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] The government and the official opposition party yesterday exchanged strong countercharges. Rallis charged that PASOK "with its policy program will change the social structure and will dangerously create an uncertain development for the country;" Papandreou charged that the government with "its orchestrated attack is eliminating the calm political climate and undermining the political dialogue."

Specifically, Prime Minister Rallis yesterday, in closing his round of meetings with New Democracy deputies for the better organization and the intensification of the pre-election campaign of the governing party, stressed:

--The New Democracy program is designed to secure the safe course of the Greek way of life by safeguarding the democratic institutions and immutably defending our national interests and rights. On the contrary, if the PASOK proposals are implemented, serious dangers will be created for the country. Its social structure will be altered and the country's development will be dangerously uncertain.

The prime minister also stressed his certainty that the New Democracy will have a wide margin of victory at the forthcoming elections, as indicated by combining the so-called "undecided voters" with the classes of the governing party, a fact stressed by many deputies from all districts in the country.

In summarizing the outcome of the meetings with New Democracy deputies, Rallis pointed out the following:

--The effort to enlighten the people is a primary duty, because they must be fully briefed so they can make a responsible selection.
--The response that New Democracy has obtained guarantees that the great front will receive the majority vote, and even a larger one, at the elections. Thus it will form a self-supported government, which is necessary for implementing the New Democracy government's program for the next 4 years.

A self-supported New Democracy government is also the guarantee of a government political stability. This is particularly necessary with the present difficult international conditions.

"Thus," Rallis concluded, "the great election victory of New Democracy will also guarantee that the country will escape a dangerous wavering and uncertainty in the party's course."

The PASOK chairman's statement reads as follows:

"It has been noticed recently that New Democracy officials, with Prime Minister Rallis in the lead, have escalated a multifront, orchestrated attack against PASOK that is undermining the political dialogue and eliminating the calm political climate.

"It is very obvious that by attempting to create tension, polarization and bogeys the New Democracy officials are trying to create a convincing alibi to overcome their party's decay and division, and to promote the reconstitution of the so-called 'National Rightwing Front' within the embodiment of the junta-royalist rightwing. However, behind the aggressive tone, backstage movements and rumour mongering lie defeatism, insecurity and New Democracy's fear of facing and adjusting to the apparent election results. However, the Greek people know and have already decided and will compensate New Democracy at the ballot box in according with the 'deeds and times' of a complete and continuous 7 years of governing. PASOK, with its 7-year course and its policy program, has shown with deeds that it has the guarantee for normal conditions, peace, democracy and the country's economic development. The Greek people know it and correctly value it."

A government source, in reply to Papandreou's statement, said: The PASOK chairman has been warned that his attacks will not go unanswered. On 24 July, on the anniversary of the restoration of democracy, he thought that he could attack New Democracy.... The necessary reply was given to this attack. Appropriate replies to every attack that aim at provoking aggravation will also be given in the future.

PAPER COMMENTS ON TURKMEN'S TERCUMAN INTERVIEW

NC291747 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Editorial: "Provocation and Distortion"]

[Excerpts] All that Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen said in his interview with a Turkish paper on Greek-Turkish relations and the Cyprus issue is interesting. These statements are interesting not in themselves but more from their "contradistinctive" point of view, that is, the mentality and all else that they reveal and indicate contrary to what has already been said.

Mr Turkmen said that there are certain problems between Greece and Turkey which are not easy to solve. Certainly they are not easy to solve because it is a matter of Turkey's designs and claims on Greek territories, islands, seas, seabeds and airspace; or it is a matter of disputing Greece's legal and vested rights based on international laws and treaties. The responsibility is exclusively borne by Turkey. Because it is Turkey alone that, since 1974, has suddenly disputed the legal and other status of the Aegean basin.

The Turkish minister also added that it is very important that an atmosphere of trust and dialogue be created between the two countries and claimed that Turkey..."is doing whatever depends on it in this direction," whereas "in Greece we do not see a corresponding stand." Mr Turkmen has a poor idea both about the awareness and comprehension of the public to whom he addressed himself. Because he himself knows better than anyone else that the reality of the situation is just the opposite. It is sufficient to recall--merely as the most recent occurrence--the successive, consecutive and deliberate Turkish provocations of last April and early May which involved repeated violations of Greek airspace by the Turkish Air Force.

It is obvious, however, that these statements are intended for domestic consumption, on the one hand, and to serve, on the other hand, as "arguments" and "alibis" for the well-known "claqueurs" of Turkey on either side of the Atlantic. At the same time, Mr Turkmen also spoke about the Cyprus issue and said that within the next few days the Turkish side will submit for the FIRST [capitals denote boldface] time concrete proposals on the constitutional and territorial aspects of the Cyprus problem at the intercommunal talks which are being held--or rather dragged on--in Nicosia. The Turkish minister admits that for 7 years now and after so many "rounds" of intercommunal--by euphemism--talks, the Turkish side has not submitted any proposal, but just now it will.

Why? Has anything substantive changed in Turkey's stance and goals? We are afraid the answer--negative--is directly included in Mr Turkmen's additional statement that "Mr Kiprianou's propaganda activities in international forums will not be very successful." Ankara wants to prevent discussion of the Cyprus issue at the UN General Assembly and other international organizations, because their decisions are painfully felt by Turkey even though, thanks to its strong "patrons," it does not implement them.

So, we are afraid that, even if the proposals to be submitted appear negotiable, they will not have a practical continuation and will merely aim at preventing discussion of the Cyprus issue at the United Nations under the "pretext" that "constructive negotiations" are being conducted. This is so, because Turkey's true goals--territorial and population partition of Cyprus--have not changed since the grid of circumstances that created these aims has not (as yet) changed. So, we hope we will be proved wrong....

PART FOUR OF PASOK GOVERNMENT POLICY DECLARATION

NC261633 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 26 Jul 81 pp 7-9

[Completion of part four of PASOK declaration of government policy: sections 5, 6 and 7, respectively entitled "Social Program," "Quality of Life, Development," and "Levers and Methods for Change"--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] QUALITY OF LIFE, DEVELOPMENT

192. Environment and home are perhaps two of the most immediate problems faced by Greeks in towns and in the countryside. Naturally, they are not the only ones and they are not separated from a number of other great problems connected with the quality of life. Regardless of the immediate measures that will be taken for the protection of the environment, and naturally measures will be taken, they will not produce final results unless there is a correct town planning policy that will humanize the city and will revive agrarian settlements.

Above all, the dangers which threaten our cultural identity magnify the multilateral crisis through which our national area is passing. The regrouping of our national area is the first goal of independent economic, social and cultural development.

A. TOWN PLANNING AND THE ENVIRONMENT

193. In every manifestation of their daily life, Greeks are experiencing the results of a total spatial crisis which borders on a national calamity. The polluted atmosphere, town planning and traffic anarchy, noise, life in cities without trees, all undermine our physical and spiritual health. The landscape is thoughtlessly damaged, forests, beaches and the very few areas of trees are being turned into building plots. The coast is being turned into a basin for the pouring of sewage and garbage, and sea resources and natural resources are being destroyed. To crown it all, a poisonous cloud has established itself over the capital to threaten our very own life.

The destruction of the Greek environment shows the form of "development" that the right imposed, in pursuit of profiteering and serving the interests of the foreign and local oligarchy. Industries, services and labor potential have concentrated excessively in Athens, while in the Greek countryside, the labor and productive potential have been disorganized, and Greek regions have been dislocated and have lost their vitality. The dormant countryside has been accompanied by the suffocation of the cities and the now dangerous pollution of the environment.

194. For PASOK, the formulation of a complete zoning policy connected with the development model that is being sought constitutes a basic priority. The aims of the zoning plan--how the various economic, social and cultural activities will be distributed and given priorities--are coordinated with our broader goal of regrouping the national area and rebuilding the regions so that everyone can satisfy his basic economic, social and cultural needs within the area of the place he lives, that is, in every small society of the national area.

So that this goal may succeed, we will seek to fully develop local productive forces, guarantee the vitality of the environment and natural resources, demographically stabilize every region and have the people themselves under social control. For us, this is regional development.

Within the framework of this policy for regional development, priority will be given to guarantee a satisfactory level of life to problem areas, to substantive decentralization and to the revitalization of the countryside. In order to bridge the gap between the city and the village, we shall combine the development of a network of urban centers and agrarian settlements in the area toward a common agrarian-industrial direction.

Special development measures will be taken for villages that can develop into local centers of production and the serving of a province. Zoning laws will be radically revised and a national agency for a zoning policy on natural resources and the environment will be created. The staff activity of this agency will deal with decentralization and the operation of the various degrees of self-government and democratic planning.

ZONING--ENVIRONMENT

195. Immediate and radical measures are required in order to deal with the current environmental crisis. Above all else and right from the very first day, we will start with a long-term policy in an effort to prevent further deterioration and to establish firm foundations for the protection of the environment and the reverse the destructive trend followed until now.

PASOK's policy will be based more on prevention than on cure. Correct zoning for the new units or, in other words, siting on the basis of environmental criteria, and avoiding the squandering of natural resources and energy--primarily through recycling of raw materials--are the basic trends of our long-term policy. The harmonization of development with the environment, and the elevation of man himself as the regulator of the environmental balance inspire and lead our policy. Thus, the policy of decentralization and balanced development will deal with contamination on a long-term basis.

There will be an immediate decrease of pollution caused by industrial production through a batch of measures such as: mandatory installation of apparatus for purification of gases and liquid effluents, replacement of technologies which contaminate or pollute to an excessive degree, systematic control of the implementation of specific provisions, and strict sanctions.

Industries which strongly pollute or contaminate the environment will be removed for residential or congested areas. The permanent and basic solution of the traffic problem, particularly improvement in mass transportation means, and the total solution of the drainage problem will also contribute toward protection of the environment.

Creation of an "ecologic" conscience through objective education of the public will decisively support the policy for protection of the environment. The transfer of decisive responsibilities to local self-government will also transfer control and protection of the environment to its natural functionary.

An emergency plan will be implemented on certain acute problems such as atmospheric pollution--the cloud--coordinated with measures falling under general policy. Every measure that protects the health and life of the inhabitants will be enforced without hesitation. Protection of the environment is a right of the citizen but an obligation of the state.

TOWN PLANNING AND HOUSING

196. Unchecked profiteering and exploitation of land and housing followed the deliberately unplanned super-centralization in large urban centers.

The rightwing and large-scale capital served their interests by simultaneously cultivating the confusion that everyone is responsible for the state of our cities--from the large-scale industrialist, from the profiteer to the homeless "illegal" tenant. In our fatherland, housing has never been dealt with as a social benefit, but only as a commercial commodity. Despite any building boom of the past, the housing conditions of the people's masses continue to remain unacceptable. In the cities and particularly in the villages there are still households without basic services (no electricity, no running water, no drainage.)

The last earthquakes in Thessaloniki, in Athens and the other regions all added to this state of affairs. They also proved the lack of any vestige of an anti-earthquake policy.

OF THE CITY, THE VILLAGE AND PEOPLE'S HOUSING

197. A new institutionalized town planning framework will be promoted through responsible briefing and participation of people's organizations and through local plebiscites. It will strengthen town planning and preparation of regulatory rules. Within the framework of local self-government, an organization will be established in every town responsible for the development of town planning and for controlling the price and use of urban land.

A new housing law will provide for the economic and institutional strengthening of local self-government and the urban development organizations in order to create a land surplus. Levies on housing will be scaled according to the size of property and of land use while small property owners will be exempted from excessive taxation on land and money.

Measures will be adopted and incentives established for improving downgraded areas and to prevent the desertion of city centers. Illegal building will be incorporated legally within a humane town planning environment with the necessary social services and technical substructure.

Preservation of traditional housing will be coordinated to the possibilities of its development and with human conditions of life. Measures will be taken to protect national land, forests and the coasts.

198. Our strategic goal is for every Greek family to have its own residence in accordance with its needs.

Today our immediate goal is to guarantee satisfactory housing conditions for all, in the countryside and the city, without excessive cost.

Direct measures will be adopted to combat profiteering on land and building materials, to cleanse the cycle of planning-supervision-construction, and to protect the employed scientific and technical-labor potential.

We will also implement an organized anti-earthquake defense, a new flexible town planning organization, strict regulations and sanctions with materiel checks and checks on planned construction. Basic substructure plans will be made available with the supervision of the state. Representatives of local self-government will head the collective responsibility for the substructure projects (town planning, water supply, drainage, flood control) while anti-earthquake defense will be undertaken by a special organization.

Self-building will be assisted through low interest loans for all those who are truly in need of housing and of loans. At the same time, there will be promotion of specially organized housing programs in every municipality or region to facilitate the purchase of housing by individuals or by independent organizations, or for the rental of such housing (social housing program.)

At the same time, there will be effective rent control (duration of lease, rental, adjustment on the basis of the cost of living index, etc.) and guarantees for professional premises.

Special incentives will be adopted to encourage the acquisition of housing by Greeks established overseas, by emigrants and merchant seamen.

A staff organization at the national level will be established in order to implement these programs and in order to plan their financing. Town planning organizations at the large city level in the provinces, acting within local self-government limits, will also proceed to implement these programs. Homeowners will actively participate and the establishment of cooperative groups of construction workers will be encouraged within local self-government.

CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

199. Cultural development is inseparably linked with the need for a more general, radical change for our country and people. It is linked with the attainment of our national independence. To the "cultural" policy of the right, PASOK counters with a diametrically opposed line for the formulation, the maintainance and the enrichment of our national identity.

For us, cultural development means a harmonious and multilateral utilization of man's creative abilities. It means citizens capable of creating and able to enjoy the spiritual and cultural creations of humanity without the danger of losing their national identity. It means that from within their own forces the people form their values and way of life.

Genuine cultural development is the people's creation and cannot but rely on dialogue, freedom of expression and creation, free movement of cultural qualities and open cultural education.

200. The current cultural reality which the government of New Democracy is bequeathing to our country is marked by the deep crisis of our national cultural identity, the result of the policy which the right has followed for many decades.

The transformation of all material and spiritual qualities and values into merchandise, their subjugation to the law of profit, constitutes the principal criterion and goal of this policy. The entire cultural education has been left to the exploitation of private businessmen. For instance, in the entire country, there are only two public theatrical schools but more than 50 private ones, a state conservatory, a public ballet school and no school for cinematography and television.

The alientation of our cultural character through the invasion of foreign consumer and cultural models leads to ways of life that are foreign to Greek reality. A look at television programs and advertisements proves this truth.

Specifically the Greek countryside, although fed with these foreign models, is culturally languishing because it lacks any artistic activities that exist in Athens.

The concentration of our cultural infrastructure and the musical comprehension of our tradition and heritage intensify the crisis of our national identity, destroy the roots and whatever useful things our people have created through history. Cultural manifestations favored by the establishment are decorative elements for the embellishment of the country's display window. It is typical that the organization most heavily financed for cultural activities is the Greek tourist organization while the Ministry of Culture has the smallest budget among all ministries. (not even a half percent of the entire budget.)

As the traditional ways for expression and creation are quickly disappearing, a deep gap is opening between a small minority that has the facility of communicating with people of the intellect and the arts, and a people who remain passive spectators and consumers of cultural subproducts.

For many years the right has been appearing as the "guardian of tradition." It was only the jailer of our peoples' cultural expression.

201. In society we envision that the people will at last become the recipients and the advocates of modern cultural creation. The people will be helped to develop their own creative forces in order to give them the expression that befits their own sensitivity, the wealth of their ideas and feelings, the variety of their pursuits and their creative imagination.

Cultural independence within a national framework does not mean cultural self-sufficiency. The struggle for the enrichment of our cultural tradition and its adjustment to new social realities advances in tandem with international cultural creation. Relying on our own roots, we assimilate anything creative that modern cultural currents can offer to us.

Cultural polyphony and polymorphy, pluralism of ideas and viewpoints, and respect for creators' contributions constitute elements of our ideology and define our policy. Cultural decentralization, open cultural education and the consolidation of creators' work will constitute the new cultural reality with the people as participants and protagonists.

202. Our first goal will be the genuine cultural revitalization of the Greek region. We shall support the expression of local cultural values. In the village and the city, celebrations and festivities will be revived and original popular creations will be unleashed. At the same time, we shall help cultural communication among our country's regions. Through variety and polymorphy of expression a new cultural unity will be formed.

In municipalities, communities, and neighborhoods of large cities, cultural centers with the necessary infrastructure (libraries, record libraries, exhibition and lecture halls, athletic grounds) popular theaters and so forth will be created.

203. The establishment of an open cultural education is the foundation stone of cultural development. The creation of cultural life and movement presupposes the harmonious marriage of artistic education and upbringing. Cultural lessons will be integrated in all rungs of education, and at the same time senior schools of arts with pedagogic departments will be created for the manning of artistic education in all Greek schools. Specifically for the arts, which require long training, medium state schools will be established. Universities, conservatories, artistic schools, cultural centers and schools will be linked to social life. In addition to their educational task, they will be centers of artistic life and propagation of the arts through creative tasks (performances, concerts and so forth) and scientific tasks (research, collections, editions, recordings and so forth).

The operation of television and radio on new bases and the correct orientation of recreational and educational programs will decisively contribute to the correct and open cultural education of our people, an education that will also be based on the strengthening and elevation of the theater and the cinema.

204. Measures are envisaged within the framework of our cultural policy for the protection, preservation and utilization of cultural treasures, monuments, works of art and traditional settlements. Research in all sectors (archeological, literary) will be enhanced. A new scientific orientation and unitary planning will be required in the archaeological service, and, at the same time, the decisive role of foreign archaeological companies will be restricted. Museums will be increased. Their operation and organization will be adjusted to contemporary possibilities through the preparation of new programs and methods for their publicizing, maintenance and protection. Their true educational role in political life will be strengthened. In our effort to create the new cultural reality for our country, we shall preserve our civilization's traditional creative elements which are currently abandoned.

205. In conclusion, the basic goal of our cultural policy is to protect and encourage every true creator and to promote his work.

Immediate measures will include full abolition of every form of censorship on artistic and intellectual works and participation of the creators themselves in the administrative bodies of cultural organizations. Measures will also be taken to cleanse the distribution methods for creative products (e.g. exhibits, film production, records and tapes etc.)

The guarantee of salaries, pensions and social insurance for creators are provided for under the general government measures which affect every worker. We will, however, also adopt a series of specific measures to improve both the conditions of work of the creator, and his communication with the people.

Such measures, for example, are: assiting the distribution of books, publication of books, libraries, tax exemptions for the theater, the decisive strengthening of local cinematographic production, establishment of an organization to protect the copyrights of composers, verse writers, actors and others.

206. Our people's cultural movement, self-supporting, decentralized and with a mass character, is a form of struggle toward change. Through their daily presence and development, the people will also define the fundamental context of the values of the new society. Man's cultural liberation, like social and economic liberation, will be the work of the people themselves.

207. Our vision for an independent, democratic and socialist Greece is the vision of a society of free people based upon self-administration. It will be a genuinely democratic society, against bureaucracy, in which the citizen actively participates in all decisions which affect him. Change affects the institutions and forms of organization of our social life. It creates a new climate and a new way of life. It is a cause which affects every worker, the entire nation. It is a matter of daily effort and struggle. The democratic way toward socialism is exactly based upon such an effort and is inspired by the essence of this struggle.

PASOK's government will have the full responsibility to institutionalize and actively support the people's participation and to guarantee the people's consent and acceptance. Trade unionism, the mass movement in places where the people live, work and are educated, is a decisive lever for change.

State planning to implement and control development policy, in contrast to a lack of planning or bureaucratic centralized planning, will be the key for a new institutionalized policy.

Within the framework of fundamental decentralization, local self-government, self-administration at all its levels, will progress with self-sufficiency toward solution of local affairs, at the same time participating--through democratic planning--in the total economic and social development effort.

Through democratization, decentralization and the support of local self-government, through its incorporation in these decentralized levels, public administration will become the supporter of the people as well as a lever in the promotion of change.

In this way, over and above any strategic value of these institutions of change, public administration will also be cleansed through democratic administrative measures, and it will become creative and productive for the development and serving of the people and not of the oligarchy. Within this framework, the socialization of strategic sectors of the economy will also make its contribution toward this end.

LEVERS AND METHODS FOR CHANGE

DEMOCRATIC PLANNING

208. Democratic planning constitutes the guideline and regulating organ of our economic and social policy. It is the guarantee of unity in the aims of national goals, maintenance of general balance, and harmonious development of the economy; the link between the central government and local self-government as it is between our economy's state and private sector.

Democratic planning constitutes an organ of government policy and a method for its implementation, inseparably linked with the character, goals and the course of PASOK. On the one hand, it substantiates the people's active participation in choices and the implementation of development policy and, on the other, it establishes and protects foresight, prevention and democratic administration. Through their elected representatives, the people actively participate at all levels at all stages and in all processes, from planning the programs to the control over the projects that are implemented within the programs' framework.

209. A popular base, on which planning will rely, is the substantive content of change. Without decisive popular participation, planning could become an instrument for the pursuit of antipopular goals and the serving of privileged classes. With a popular base, planning supplies the answer to the needs and will of the people as expressed by them. The democratization of planning is an essential factor in the process of socialist transformation. This is so because such a process is nothing else but the implementation of planned structural changes, ultimately aiming to guarantee popular control over economic and social developments.

Popular participation in planning will begin from grassroots development organizations which, in cooperation with other planning organs and from within local self-government at the level of villages and cities, will publicize local aims and goals and the genuine expression of popular opinion on the country's more general development goals.

DECENTRALIZATION-LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

210. Our entire program is pervaded by the concept of decentralization and the role of self-government in all sectors of the country's social, economic and cultural life. PASOK considers local self-government one of democracy's three pedestals.

211. This institution has been suffocated by the right. Without substantive responsibilities, without resources, under devastating controls by appointed representatives of the central administration, the elected representatives, leaders in municipalities and communities, are struggling to respond to huge popular problems. However, in the place of state abandonment, local self-government has found support from the people themselves. Daily, the people have begun to establish a mass movement of support and claims around municipalities and communities. Popular participation and initiative are coming into being.

212. The basic goal of the PASOK policy is to acknowledge municipalities and communities and decentralized organs of democratic power in order to support the mass movement around local self-government and utilize its development potential.

213. Our basic aim is that every problem in a given area be solved by the elected representatives in that area, that is, to be solved at the lowest possible level of self-government. Decentralization is our basic democratic choice, in complete contrast to overcentralization, inordinate government growth and the current state bureaucracy; in complete opposition to every form of power monopoly by the central administration.

Decentralization is implemented by enhancing local self-government's political and social structures. Thanks to this enhancement, the people can decisively influence, through their active presence, local self-government's actions and programs. Through local self-government, inhabitants will decide what they judge to be best for the community in which they live, and will administer responsibly their affairs in the places they work and in things that concern them and their environment.

214. The PASOK government will give substance and significantly expand the current powers and authority of communities and municipalities, and will guarantee them administrative and economic independence. At the same time, it will proceed with the establishment of a second and third degree of self government at the level of province and region. Communities, municipalities, provinces and regions will acquire their own independent organization, technical manning and administrative machinery.

A new institutional framework and a democratic code for municipalities will consolidate the independent and democratic operation of communities and muncipalities. Local self-government's economic independence will be guaranteed through its own resources. These resources will be transferred from the central administration in conjunction with the transfer and substantiation of responsibilities. In the short term, there will be state support for local self-government to confront immediate problems. The regional program of public investment will become the responsibility of local self-government. At the same time, the establishment of municipal businesses will be promoted and strengthened.

215. Every level of self-government, within the framework of its independence, will creatively and responsibly carry out the part of the program that concerns it, while at the same time it will coordinate the proposals of the immediately lower level of self-government to the program. Furthermore, it will independently decide on the implementation of projects which by their nature cannot have repercussions on the balance of the region with a higher level of local self-government.

General goals and development frameworks will be defined at the country level, common directions will be charted, national specifications will be enacted, the implementation of projects of national significance will be decided, and the proposals of regional self-government will be coordinated and integrated in the program.

For the greater consolidation and independence of local self-government, the regional and provincial services of the plan will not administratively fall under the central government but under the local self-government of the corresponding level.

216. This concept will be gradually completed.

The draft law on local self-government, which will outline the progressive activation of the provincial institution, will be prepared as soon as possible. The nome will be the basic link between the central government and local self-government until the draft law on local self-government has been ratified. During the transition stage, the central government will retain responsibility for planning and control at the levels of region and nome. It will exercise these responsibilities through decentralized services.

The transfer of responsibilities from the center to the regions, if the service under which they fall does not change, in itself constitutes a technical act for the transfer of services. Its political significance depends on whom this transfer serves. For the PASOK government, decentralized services must undertake a new significant mission; they must be the advanced organs for a link and coordination between the central government and local self-government, with the duty not of raising barriers to the responsibilities and initiatives of the latter but of serving and helping it. The aim will be the integration of the decentralized services to the greatest extent possible in local self-government.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

217. Under the PASOK government, public administration will function under new conditions and directions, new institutions and new methods.

It is a fact that the success of the effort for the great change depends to a great extent on a public administration that is sound, contemporary and creative. In diametric opposition to the governments of the right, PASOK has the political will and the means to create the prerequisites for any effective public administration.

218. True, public administration is evidently the seriously ill patient of our country. It is, however, equally true that the disease is transmitted by those who administer and orientate the administration apparatus. The governments of the rightwing dare refer to the bad organization and operation of publi administration as an excuse for their failures, to attribute these failures to the public administration's personnel while responsibility is exclusively theirs. Public administration, like the public sector more generally, reflects the anxiety and the decline of the state of the rightwing. It is this state which has turned public administration from an organization in the service of the citizen, as it ought to have been, into a transaction organization and a brake to economic progress instead of it being a lever for such progress.

219. One of the first battles we will wage will be to strike against the unbearable and excessive concentricity of the state apparatus. We all know that the signatures of many ministers are necessary for the construction of even a minor road in the most distant village. This concentricity is a deliberately set up apparatus so that the administration can easily be controlled by the local and foreign establishment. Concentricity is not a chance phenomenon. It is historically related to our country's dependence on the policy which serves the oligarchy instead of serving the ordinary Greek citizen.

Another battle will consist of the blow against bureaucracy which is expressed, on the one hand, through the officials' fear of responsibility and, on the other hand, through the oppression and belaboring of the citizen. We all know how many certificates of all forms and types are necessary to have even the simplest and most understandable request considered.

We will proceed with determination and directly with eradication of partisanship which is the greatest scourge in the operation of public administration and with suppression of corruption. The undermining of a member of the administration, the reliance of his career to favoritism from the member of parliament, the party boss or the bribe from the private citizen or the businessman are the result of the partisan state of the rightwing.

220. Decentralization is our basic weapon. It will be a geographic decentralization as analyzed in the chapter on local self-government but also a vertical decentralization, in other words, the transfer of responsibilities from higher to lower levels, so that each official will have his own sphere of responsibility and his own decision. Revision of the organizations of public services will give each operational unit the ability to take immediate decisions for the solution of citizen's problems on the basis of priority of submission of the cases. This will end the phenomenon where dozens of signatures are required at all levels of the hierarchy for even the simplest certificate. This will enable the senior administrative echelons to devote themselves to staff and coordination tasks. All the various committees, apart from the absolutely essential ones, will, in conclusion, be abolished.

221. Simplication, to the greatest possible degree, of the context of administrative procedures will be an important factor in the improvement of the function of public administration.

Easily implemented and unified processes which will be systematically codified, will take the place of the chaos of regulations prevailing today which create overlaps, confusion and clashing authorities. Clarity and lucidity will be the characteristic of public administration operations.

Modern technical equipment, computers, microfilming, etc which is imperative not only for process simplification, better and faster communication or completion of cases but also for the collection, processing and checking of all facts necessary to establish requirements, goals and generally for the function of an effective administration, will be extensively used.

222. The democratization of public administration will decisively contribute to the improvement of its function. It will affect both the administration's relations with the citizens and the control of its actions at all levels. The democratization of public administration means that citizens will no longer be categorized as A and B according to their party affiliation. An element of democratization will be publication of public administration acts. The current mania for secrecy constitutes a means for covering up arbitrary acts and stems from the intention to keep officials as far away and out of sight as possible from procedures that concern them. Citizens will have access to all documents and information that concern them when these are not connected with defense, security and the country's foreign policy.

223. Our basic goal is to raise the employee from his formal and passive role to the role of the public functionary who acts responsibly, is remunerated satisfactorily and knows he is not wronged.

Just as there will no longer be A and B category citizens, likewise, there will no longer be A and B category public functionaries.

Democratization means the restoration of homegeneity in public administration. Categories of permanent, temporary, special, contractual and free lance employees cannot coexist. All will have the same possibilities for a career in the civil service. The PASOK government will take all measures to guarantee an unimpeded career so that the public servant will not be converted into a victim of the party boss, the deputy or the minister. Parallel to the restoration of homegeneity, public administration will acquire greater flexibility and ability to adjust and, consequently, a more open system concerning recruitment, appointments, transfers and promotions. At the same time, the legal and substantive prerequisites for the impartial implementation of the system will coexist. From the date of recruitment until retirement, the public servant must feel that he is secure, that the state treats him justly and that it offers him the possibility and the opportunities to advance to the hierachy's highest offices.

The current very low productivity in public administration is the result of the insecurity in which public servants find themselves and the unfair treatment to which many are subjected. To purge the administration, control over productivity will be strengthened together with the imposition of strict sanctions on those few employees who possibly may forget their mission and duty. The institution of outside inspectors will be established within the framework of this goal.

Systematic further training and accelerated education in the country's universities for the acquisition of specialities or for the reorientation of people engaged in the state machine will be organized. At the same time, special programs for study in administration and a corresponding postgraduate course will be promoted in higher education institutes.

SOCIALIZATIONS

224. Socializations are the basic lever for the radical reorganization of the economy and the implementation of the new strategy for economic and social development. At the same time, they constitute an element of our antimonopolistic and antidependent policy.

The socialization program of the PASOK government concerns key sectors of the economy and its implementation constitutes a prerequisite for the protection of the policy of change from the undermining of the local and foreign oligarchy.

We shall socialize: the credit system, the insurance companies, energy and utility businesses, mass transportation and communications, large export and import trade, large businesses for the exploitation of mineral wealth, large shipbuilding yards, steel industries, cement industries, fertilizer industries, the medicinal industry and all units that directly concern national defense.

For the sectors that currently are state controlled or nationalized, socialization means that the yardstick for their goals, organization, operation and administration will be serving the social aggregate and not the large private interests as is the case now. The element that will decisively contribute to the implementation of this goal is the participation of the workers and the representation of local self-government and social agencies in the administration of businesses.

PASOK policy precisely aims at passing the control of these basic sector levers into the people's hands to guarantee the society's desired pace of operation and to implement the long term aims of development strategy.

TRADE UNIONISM--MASS MOVEMENT

225. Trade union activity in working places and places of education is in the vanguard of the daily struggle for the purpose of improving life and achieving the change.

The mass movement also will be at the frontline of the battle for the consolidation and establishment of the great change after the PASOK victory in the elections. For PASOK, trade unionism constitutes a pedestal for democracy. The free participation of the worker and the employee, the farmer, the artisan, the scientist, the young man and woman, of every Greek citizen in the trade unionist activity constitutes an inalienable right. However, it also constitutes an indispensable prerequisite for popular sovereignty and lever for the change that leads to social liberation.

226. The labor movement that has offered so much to the struggles for national independence and democracy has endured the greatest attacks by the ruling class and the governments of the right. Persecutions, dismissals and antilabor stifling framework are accompanied by direct government intervention, by the government's trade union movement which adulterates and muzzles genuine trade union expression. At the same time, the right has deliberately created organizational chaos while it has imposed the current false leading group of labor bosses through deletions, nonregistrations of associations and other illegitimate interventions.

There are similar conditions in all sectors of trade unionist expression where the peculiarities of every area have determined the degree of government intervention and its results.

In every case, the mass movement has waged decisive fights, many times victorious but, above all, it has attained a high degree of self-knowledge. This self-knowledge and dynamism of the mass movement constitutes a guarantee for the future course.

227. PASOK's primary goal is the creation of all prerequisites that will allow genuine trade union representation for the entire working class. The genuine protection of free activity and the development of a class, politicized trade union movement without dependencies and guardianship from the state, the employers and the parties will be promoted instead of the current antilabor and antipopular institutional framework [laws 330 and 643 and so forth).

Uninterrupted development of trade union activities at places of work will be safeguarded and development of factory trade unionism will be supported. Trade union officials will be effectively protected by law in their trade union activities. Immediate measures will be taken to restore all those persecuted for trade union reasons. Free time will be guaranteed under institutional safeguards, for performing their trade union duties.

Participation of workers in decisions that affect them, creation of new institutions and organizations, will give new dimensions to the trade union movement that struggles for, claims and attains goals but also participates in the development drive.

Participation in the administration by special organizations that directly concern the workers such as social insurance funds, the labor hearth and the workers housing organization as well as operation of those organizations on new basis to serve the true needs of workers and employees also will be decisive.

228. There will be immediate disassociation of the GSEE [General Confederation of Greek Workers], the ADEDY [Supreme Administrative Committee of Civil Servants] and their member organizations from government trade unionism. And representation of the ODEPES [Organization for the Management of Labor Union Special Funds] and others that facilitate interventionalism will be abolished.

In addition, the records of organizations will be purged of all rubber stamp associations and antiassociations, as a first step and all real and truly existing organizations of the GSEE and the ADEDY will then be registered.

All necessary measures will be taken to restore the legal status of trade unions.

Adoption of these measures will facilitate the convening of extraordinary pan-Hellenic GSEE and ADEDY congresses for the election of genuine representative organizations of the country's working class and fulfillment of the mature trade union goal for a radical reorganization of the movement's organizational structure. Efforts dictated by the general demand of the working class for establishment of one association, of one federation, of one labor center, of one general confederation will be supported so that the trade union movement may escape the fragmentation and the organizational chaos which is its characteristic today.

Within the framework of unification and tightening of the trade union movement, an effort will be made in the future for a unified presence of organizations in the private and public sectors of the economy.

229. Additional training of trade union officials at all levels of trade union activity will be supported and trade union training for workers, without tutoring or dependence, will be promoted.

230. Collective negotiations and collective labor legislation are more generally identified today with intensive state intervention, legal rigidity and operational inefficiency. We will proceed to a radical reorganization, modernization, improvement, simplification and codification of the collective labor legislature, decrease of state paternalistic jurisdiction and strengthening of the institution of collective negotiations. The possibility of negotiating with second and first level organizations which are genuinely representative and adoption of the institution of voluntary arbitration will give a new dimension to negotiations and will promote without falsifications and delays the resolution of workers' problems.

TERCUMAN INTERVIEWS TURKMEN ON MIDDLE EAST

NC290930 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 27 Jul 81 pp 1, 14

[Report on interview granted by Foreign Minister Turkmen to TERCUMAN correspondent Nur Batur in Ankara; date not given]

[Text] In evaluating events in the Middle East, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that the Turkish Government characterized recent attacks by Israel as "an extremely grave development" and added: "We observe that Israel is pursuing a policy that undermines efforts being made to find a settlement to the Middle East problem. It is obvious that faits accomplis, attacks and intransigence cannot contribute to peace. The implementation of the UN Security Council's cease-fire resolution is of great priority. Following that, efforts must be made to adopt measures which will ensure internal peace in Lebanon.

"If the Middle East is to be rescued from being an open wound, it must be ensured that no force and violence are used. A common ground must then be found for negotiations by all the parties concerned for the purpose of finding a long-term political solution. Turkey's attitude toward the principles of such a form of solution is clear. First, Israel must withdraw from the territories it has occupied since 1967. Second, the rights of the Palestinians must be recognized and they must be allowed to participate in the negotiations. There are many countries like Turkey supporting this view. But Israel has so far refused to comply."

In response to a question on what dangers could create tension in the Middle East from Turkey's point of view, Turkmen said: "Every source of tension in our region is a danger to us. Stability in the region is upset, outside intervention in the area increases and the possibility of a hot war becomes greater. We are watching this situation with anxiety."

Referring to views that Turkey should take the initiative for establishing peace in the Middle East, Turkmen drew attention to the fact that the United States is adopting certain procedures toward the creation of common ground for talks, that the Soviet Union was suggesting a conference and that the EEC was making certain soundings between the Arab states and Israel."

Foreign Minister Turkmen then stated that the progress made in relations between Turkey and the Arab states since November 1980 were gratifying, and added that along with economic and trade relations, mutual confidence had also been strengthened.

Responding to our question whether "the settlement of the outstanding issues between Turkey and Greece could be expedited in view of the tension in the Middle East," Foreign Minister Turkmen said: "We all know that the solution of the problems between Turkey and Greece in a short time is not feasible. We probably can find solutions to some problems in a short time that would satisfy both sides. However, there are some problems that will prove difficult to resolve. Nevertheless, it is important to create favorable conditions for mutual confidence and a dialogue between the two countries. We have done what we could in this respect. But we do not see a consistent Greek attitude in this direction. At times they act in a manner that indicates that they attach as much importance to our relations as we do. But at other times they act with complete inconsistency. We are, however, determined to continue our reasonable and dignified policy. We believe that [both sides] should refrain from utterances and behavior that might spoil the atmosphere between the two countries."

Foreign Minister Turkmen stated that he did not expect important developments toward the settlement of the outstanding problems at the meeting he is going to have with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis in New York in September, but he added that the furtherance of the dialogue has proved useful to Turkish-Greek relations. Turkmen drew attention to the fact that Greece is on the threshold of general elections and added that an understanding on fundamental issues cannot be expected during this period.

When asked to comment on whether Turkish-Greek relations would be affected in the event of Papandreou emerging stronger from the Greek elections, Turkmen said: "We are watching Papandreou's utterances on Turkey. I see no reason at this moment to make any comment on these utterances. We shall wait and see who will come to power in Greece after the elections and we shall watch the attitude of the new government toward Turkey. It would be wise for us to adjust our attitude toward Greece accordingly."

Foreign Minister Turkmen expressed these views concerning the future of the intercommunal negotiations in Cyprus: "For the first time, the Turkish Cypriot side will be presenting tangible and constructive proposals on the territorial and constitutional issues during the next few days. From the Cyprus issue point of view, we are entering a turning point. If the attitude of the Turkish Cypriot side receives positive response, some tangible progress may be made in August toward the settlement of the Cyprus dispute. I do not think that, in face of the constructive attitude of the Turkish Cypriot side, Kiprianou's propaganda activities on the international platforms will be very successful. However, if the Greek Cypriot side adopts a negative attitude toward the Turkish Cypriot proposals and chooses to disrupt the negotiations, then responsibility for shutting out the possibility of reaching a comprehensive solution will rest on the shoulders of the Greek Cypriot side."

Foreign Minister Turkmen also attempted an evaluation of Turkish-U.S. relations in view of the present Reagan administration. Turkmen stated that particularly after the lifting of the embargo, there is liveliness in the relations with the new administration, and he added: "The general attitude and approach of the United States toward Turkey is extremely constructive. This attitude draws its inspiration from the solidarity in NATO. We appreciate the U.S. policy.

Turkey attaches great importance to this solidarity. Turkey is directing its efforts toward strengthening this solidarity. We are maintaining extremely important relations with the United States in the economic and military fields, both bilaterally and within the framework of NATO. We wish to see these relations rise to an ever higher level."

ENERGY MINISTER DESCRIBES OIL EXPLORATION WORK

TA251509 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Adana, 25 Jul (AA)--Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol said five foreign companies were currently prospecting for oil in Turkey, with a sixth due to start drilling in the Gulf of Iskenderun in September, and 15 others having applied for joint exploration with the Turkish Petroleum Corporation (TPAO). Bingol gave the figures during an inspection tour of drilling going on near the Adana-Ceyhan road in southern Turkey.

The Cukurova area around Adana was the second most promising region for striking oil after southeastern Turkey, Bingol announced. There were oil deposits in Turkey, experts were sure, but very deep drilling was needed. The current prospecting well had gone down to 3,400 meters at the moment, he added.

A total of 1,500 wells had been drilled by prospectors for oil so far, with 70 new wells to be drilled in 1981. Current daily production stood at 17,000 barrels.

VOTCP MARKS DEATH ANNIVERSARY OF DISK LEADER

TA230844 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Station commentary: "The Killers of Kemal Turkler and Their Accomplices"]

[Excerpts] Who ordered the killing of Kemal Turkler, the leader of Turkish Mine, Metal, Metal Works and Machine Industry Workers Union [Maden-Is], as well as the founder and first leader of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], on 22 July 1980, a Tuesday morning? Everyone knows that it was Turkes, the leader of the fascist Nationalist Action Party [NAP]. The indictment read by the military prosecutor in the NAP trial revealed that Turkes gave the necessary orders to this effect from his mansion in Yakacik, the summer resort in Istanbul.

It is the NAP and its leader Turkes that engaged in armed attacks on officials of the class trade unions in addition to killing Kemal Turkler. The fascist NAP has been the main tool used to terrorize the worker class and the working movement. Still, the trial against the NAP is progressing at a slow pace. Efforts are being made to slow the proceedings of the trial against the NAP--the main organizer of terror and the killer of numerous trade union militants, including Turkler, and thousands of other progressives. However, hundreds of thousands of workers affiliated with DISK and the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] want the killers of Turkler, and their accomplices, namely the blood-stained NAP and its gang leader Turkes to account for their crimes.

The terror against the working class has taken a new turn. A trial imposed by the collaborationist and monopolist bosses--that then supplied financial aid to the NAP--is underway against the DISK leaders. DISK as well as trade unions affiliated with it are being accused of being involved with terror while all they did was consistently defend the syndical rights of the working class. Those who support the death sentences demanded by the military prosecutor against 52 DISK officials are those who favor the continuation of terror along the lines of the NAP.

PEOPLE'S PARTY SPOKESMEN CRITICIZE CSSR

AU310930 [Editorial Report] Vienna WIENER ZEITNUG in German of 31 July carries a report citing Austrian People's Party [OeVP] foreign policy spokesman Steiner as saying: "Developments in the CSSR make it clear that, once again, political forces which are not interested in good neighborly relations with Austria are getting the upper hand, and for that reason provocations are committed against our country." The paper notes that Steiner rejected Prague RUDE PRAVO's latest attacks on Austria as "completely unfounded," and depicted the CSSR's attitude on the espionage activity of Dr Hodic as a "clear violation of our country's national sovereignty and thus as an activity that was directed against international law and against the Helsinki Final Act."

Austria must adopt a firm and unequivocal attitude toward the CSSR regarding this issue, Steiner said, according to WIENER ZEITUNG, and added: "Should the CSSR undertake more provocations against Austria, then it would seem most urgent to reconsider CSSR President Husak's planned official visit to Austria."

Vienna Socialist ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 31 July carries a SOZIALISTISCHE KORRESPONDENZ/ APA report headlined: Battek Sentence Violates Human Rights. The paper quotes Karl Blecha, deputy chairman of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] as having told a visiting Swedish Socialist students delegation that "the SPOe firmly condemns the sentence passed on Social Democratic CSSR regime critic Battek."

According to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG, Blecha called the trial a "violation of human rights" and a "flagrant breach of the Helsinki Final Act," and stressed that "arresting and sentencing people is no proper way to deal with socialist criticism." For this reason, the paper says, Blecha "appealed to the CSSR leadership to release Battek from detention." ARBEITER-ZEITUNG also notes that on Thursday evening in Vienna "Charter 77 signatories living in Vienna staged a silent march under the motto 'help overcome the repression against democratic forces in the CSSR.'"

The communist Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German on 31 July carries a commentary criticizing OeVP spokesman Steiner's attacks on the CSSR. In Steiner's opinion, the CSSR should simply put up with the "anti-CSSR activities of the emigrees' clique in Austria," with the "rude attacks by the Austrian radio and television service's 'East Europe experts,'" and with the "smearing of the CSSR Embassy in Vienna with swastikas," VOLKSSTIMME says. It depicts Steiner's statement as an indication that "in Austria forces are pushing into the foreground which want to bury detente--because that is what pleases Washington at the moment."

BRIEFS

COOPERATION WITH USSR--The Austrian-Soviet working group for patents and licenses within the framework of the joint Austrian-Soviet Commission for Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation held its 10th regular session in Vienna from 8-10 July 1981. The negotiations, which were held in a friendly climate, dealt with a program of cooperation between the Austrian Patents Office and the USSR State Committee for Inventions and Discoveries, based on the pertinent agreement between the Austrian Ministry of Commerce, Trade and Industry and this USSR state committee, and with an exchange of information on Austrian and Soviet inventions. Moreover, the sides discussed mutually protected inventions and mutually registered trade marks. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 29 Jul 81 p 2 AU]

CABINET DISCUSSES FEDERAL BUDGET PLANS FOR 1982

LD302200 Hamburg DPA in German 1610 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 30 Jul (DPA)--The federal cabinet decided in Bonn today on a package of DM240 billion made up of a reduction in spending and an increase in income, with the only tax increase being on tobacco duty, in order to restore health to the economy. In the words of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the government and the coalition have thus achieved their budgetary aims and expect positive results on the state of the economy and the interest rates from their decisions.

As Schmidt explained to the press, the federal budget for 1982 is to be restricted to the sum of DM240.85 billion (1981; 231.1) and borrowing to DM26.49 billion (33.8). The structural improvement of the budget amounts to DM18 billion. This is supplemented by DM6.1 billion from the profit of the Bundesbank.

The CDU/CSU opposition in the federal parliament, organizations and parts of the trade unions have severely criticized parts of these measures. CDU leader Helmut Kohl called them a "declaration of bankruptcy of the chancellor's policies."

No final decisions have been made on an additional program to strengthen investment and to reduce unemployment, according to the chancellor, and thus also on the tax increases on employees and businesses, which have been much debated in the coalition discussions between the SPD and the FDP. Nevertheless, the coalition wants to try to achieve clarity on this matter by the time of the federal cabinet's final decisions on 2 and 3 September.

Schmidt stressed that the coalition and the government had tried to "distribute the burden on all shoulders." No single part of the population has been exempted, but those who could carry more have been given a heavier burden. "I am very satisfied with the overall result," the chancellor said. In agreement with Bundesbank President Otto Poehl, who took part in the cabinet meeting, he expressed the expectation that the financial decisions would contribute to reducing the deficit in the German balance of payments, to strengthening the international value of the German mark, to going easy on the capital market, to lowering the high interest rates and thus also to giving the state of the economy in the Federal Republic useful support.

Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer, who today began talks to set up the exact federal budget, agreed to have a draft of the basic figures ready for the cabinet in September.

Schmidt Statement to Press

DW311012 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1550 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Excerpt from statement by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the press in Bonn on 30 July--recorded]

[Text] On the spending side, we will cut DM9.5 billion by law. Likewise, we have decided on savings in the budget procedure, that is to say, where it is important to reduce budget estimates. This will amount to another DM2.5 billion so that all this will add up to savings of DM12 billion.

We will attain an improvement by DM1 billion on the revenue side by cutting all sorts of subsidies or tax privileges. Added to this will be an increase in the tobacco tax effective 1 July next year by roughly DM1.4 billion so that the 1982 budget has been structurally improved by DM14.5 billion.

We have endeavored to spread out the austerity measures on as many shoulders as possible. If I see it correctly, this does not make an exceptionof any group of our people. Greater burdens will be imposed on those who also are capable of bearing greater burdens than others. This is a decisive aspect of what we are dong. I would like to emphasize this point to the press here as well.

Further Report on Statement

DW311029 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Excerpt from statement by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the press in Bonn on 30 July--recorded]

[TExt] As far as the extra levy is concerned, I will not withold my opinion. I think I told some of the colleagues about it yesterday or the day before following a meeting of the Bundestag faction. As far as I am concerned such an instrument is eligible only if it is not intended to fill up budget gaps or relieve the budget, it is eligible only if, and to the extent that, it serves potential extra economic development and structure improvements 'mprovements in the economic cycle and in employment. Though this has been disc...d, no decision has as yet materialized. The decision on thi is scheduled for 2 September, depending on the preparatory work which is under discussion here and how. To make myself absolutely and clearly understood: what is under discussion on general principles is a special levy which--were it to materialize--would be applicable to any and all groups of earners, to any and all incomes, be they small or large.

Defense Cuts Cited

[Text] Bonn, 30 Jul (DPA)--Labor Minister Herbert Ehrenberg and Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff expressed satisfaction with the discussion at the press conference with Schmidt. Ehrenberg, who has been given the task of making a comprehensive reform of health insurance by the cabinet with the aim of reducing costs, stressed that unemployment benefits are not to be cut and that an increase in the contribution toward health insurance would be avoided.

The cabinet considered especially carefully, as Schmidt explained, the unavoidable cuts regarding the Bundeswehr, faced with the burden on all the other groups. The defense budget is to be increased by the same amount as the overall budget, that is, 4.2 percent, the cabinet decided unanimously. Thus Defense Minister Hans Apel will only receive approximately DM1.7 billion instead of the DM3.9 billion which he wanted. According to Schmidt, Apel explained in detail to the cabinet how he will deal with this.

In Schmidt's view, this defense budget will cover the security policy needs of the Federal Republic sufficiently, even if there will be difficulties. There is risk regarding the fuel costs of the Bundeswehr, since new rises in the price of oil have not been planned for.

DIE WELT Commentary

DW311050 Bonn DIE WELT in German 31 Jul 81 p 2

[Ruediger Moniac article: "The German Three Percent Pledge Is Broken"]

[Excerpt] The coalition's savings decisions, as incomplete as they may be, are absolutely clear on one point: The financial foundation of the Bundeswehr threatens to crumble. The SPD and FDP decided to tie down the defense budget's growth rate to the increased overall budget for 1982 at a nominal 4.2 percent.

This shows that the Bonn government coalition no longer has the political strength of securing the country's defense capability in the framework of NATO. The armed forces are being made subject to social budget considerations. Schmidt and Genscher are yielding to the increasing display of power by their parties' leftwings. Hans Apel, who after circumstantial excuses has become aware of the dangers arising for the army and tries to prevent them, stands helplessly in between.

Prior to the budgetary consultations, the Bundeswehr inspectors belonging to the "military leadership council" had explained to the defense minister once again that the armed forces would need at least DM2.4 billion more next year to procure what is needed most for the maintenance and renewal of the armed forces. The generals, who have made a habit of reducing the financial demands commended by military considerations in an almost excessively emphasized attitude of compromise, termed this amount "rock bottom." Now this amount is not even achieved. What is lacking is the amount of at least half a billion marks, if not more.

A number of consequences result from this: First, the gap extending between the Federal Government's claim of persuing a reliable defense policy and its implementation can no longer be overlooked. Second, it can be taken for granted that the United States, which, notwithstanding all irritations, time and again was pursuaded of the Federal Republic's loyalty to the alliance, will begin to doubt the reliability of the Germans. Bonn breaks its three percent pledge. As a result, voices may be heard again in the United States (as before in the Mansfield era), recommending military withdrawal from Europe. Third, the economizing imposed on the Bundeswehr affects essential parts of the armed forces.

SOLIDARITY SUPPORTERS SEND LETTER TO CPSU

DW301317 Bonn SOZIALDEMOKRATISCHER PRESSEDIENST in German 14 Jul 81 pp 6-8

[Undated open letter of reply to the CPSU's letter to the Polish leadership prior to the PZPR party congress by "Solidarity supporters in the Federal Republic," signed by Heinz Brandt, journalist and former editor of the trade union paper METALL; Peter Brandt, college teacher; Ingeborg Drewitz, writer; Ossip K. Flechtheim, college teacher; Helmut Gollwitzer, college teacher; Jakos Moneta, former chief editor of METALL; and Peter von Oertzen, member of the SPD Executive Board]

[Text] To the CPSU Central Committee:

We, who as trade unionists in an appeal for "Solidarity with Solidarnost" have come out against any revanchism that might call the Oder-Neisse border in question and who hope to avert the deployment of additional NATO missiles in West Europe, are deeply shocked by your letter to the PZPR Centaral Committee.

You yourselves state "quite frankly" that "some tendencies in the development of the Polish People's Republic, especially in ideology and in the economic policies of the former leadership, have caused you concern for several years now." True, you discussed this with "the top levels of the (Warsaw) leadership." Yet you fail to say why you withheld your concern from the Polish people, from the Polish workers class, from the trade unions and from the members of the PZPR. You did this even though you surely are aware that it is an important principle of Leninist policy to tell the people the plain truth. Even now, you don't say what the nature of your concern was and what caused it!

You talk about concessions made to "antisocialist forces and their demands" under whose pressure the PZPR "yields to its internal counterrevolution which receives support from foreign imperialist centers." Do you really think it is possible that following the PZPR's rule of more than 30 years, more than 80 percent of the entire workers class, who set up an autonomous organization for themselves in "Solidarity;" millions of small farmers who formed an autonomous federation; and hundreds of thousands of students who were born after the social transformation in Poland and now have created for themselves organizations which they themselves determine--do you think it possible that these have moved over into the camp of counterrevolution?

And all this is supposed to have happened in a country where 99 percent of the people elected the PZPR candidates in secret ballot a short while ago? But if--which is obviously the case--the establishment of these autonomous organizations represents a protest against the former policy of the PZPR, which you yourselves are condemning, aren't elections which only allow the option to vote for one single party a farce? Doesn't this experience rather say that it would be better to register several parties on the basis of the collectivist conditions of ownership stipulated by the constitution so that the people and the workers class "might freely decide which of the proposed roads to socialism they prefer? Wouldn't errors committed be recognized and corrected much more quickly that way?

After all, you cannot have forgotten the fact that following the October Revolution, only those parties were banned which had taken the side of the counterrevolution with arms, or which supported counterrevolution. Have you forgotten that Lenin always stressed that the civil democratic liberties would be restored after the victory of the revolution and that they would even be enhanced by the direct democracy of the Soviets in which the workers class was supposed to exercise its rule.

Just a few days ago the French Communist Party, which is one of your most loyal followers and which has the longest record of absolute obedience to you, concluded an agreement with the French Socialist Party, in which it expressly undertakes to advocate "the guarantee and enhancement of liberties, the development of the rights of the workers and the democratization of public life." Can you explain to us why the French workers class and why the French people are allowed to enjoy such guarantees by the Communists whereas the Polish people are not? Why are our colleagues of "Solidarity." male and female, suspected of being counterrevolutionaries when they don't demand anything more in the workers state of Poland than what the new Socialist-Communist government in France guarantees the workers class in that country?

You talk of the support by "foreign imperialist centers" without, regrettably, naming names. Do you seriously believe that the Polish workers class, the overwhelming majority of the colleagues of Solidarity, are prepared to sell out to private capitalists the enterprises which they with sweat and tears and even with the blood of the sacrifices they made on your side in the campaign against the Nazi army after the attack on the Soviet Union? [sentence as published] And even if this really were the case--and we fail to see even the slightest hint of this--wouldn't this mean a devastating verdict for the PZPR's rule of more than 30 years?

You say: "If Poland were deprived of the protection of the socialist community" (why, by the way, should you want to deprive it of this protection?) and "if enemies of socialism were to come to power, the greedy hands of imperialism would immediately reach for it" and "nobody" could then "guarantee the independence, sovereignty and borders of Poland as a state."

Yet, there are only three states with common borders with Poland, and all three of them--together with Poland--are members of the Warsaw Pact. These are the GDR, the CSSR, and the Soviet Union. Why should their hands be "greedy" to call Poland's borders in question?

You warn the PZPR that the battle will not be decided to its advantage "as long as the press, radio and television are not working for the PZPR but for its enemies." But haven't all these information media been available almost exclusively to the PZPR for 30 years without ultimately succeeding in preventing millions from rebelling against PZPR policy? Does the communist party have such little confidence in its own arguments that it shrinks from facing open and free discussion in the Polish media?

You claim that an extremist wing of Solidarity joined the professional trade union to drag the workers into a criminal plot directed against the people's power, but in the "discussion theses" on the "directives for the activities of the independent, autonomous trade union Solidarity" you can find the following definition of position: "Being trade unionists, we have no intention of replacing the government and its tasks but of representing the interests of the working people. This is why we will defend the human rights, the civil rights and the rights of workers. At the same time, we do not evade responsibility for the destiny of our people and state."

You remind the PZPR leaders that they promised "to enhance the authority of the pillars of public order and of the army and to defend them against the ambitions of the counter-revolutionary forces." Yet, the material, armed, military power has indeed not been transferred to the workers class, to the autonomous organizations of the workers, farmers and students. It is still being held by the party and state leadership.

Hence, you obviously are just afraid that those who exercise this material power on behalf of the state and, above all, on behalf of the party might be contaminated by the moral force inherent in the gigantic movement of the Polish people for conquering its democratic rights (the right to freedom of speech, meeting, congregation, strike, and freedom of the press). The PZPR leadership always stated that the army, the police and even the secret police were taking the side of the people and existing for the protection of its rights. And this time they may in fact be right in saying so. Could it be that you are afraid of that?

You stress in your letter that S. Kania, W. Jaruzelzki and other comrades shared your viewpoint in the discussions they had with you. Aren't you afraid that you do them an ill service by your praise for them because you arouse the impression that these comrades merely embarked on a different tactical course to reach the same goal that you obviously have. Paralyzing the will of the Polish people which at long last would like to put into practice what Karl Marx deemed a foregone conclusion--that the emancipation of the workers is up to the workers themselves.

You complain about the growing anti-Sovietism in Poland. But didn't you ask yourselves how "anti-Sovietism" can emerge despite the joint victory over Hitlerite fascism, despite the gigantic industrialization process in Poland which also went to your credit, despite the grandiose options which the Common Market, the common planning of the CEMA states could have opened once democratic control from the basis would have tamed bureaucratic slovenliness, extravagance and organized irresponsibility? Isn't it perhaps attributable to the fact that wherever the workers class rose to conquer its rights to democratic liberties--such as in East Berlin in 1953, in Hungary in 1956, in the CSSR in 1968, in Poland and in several large-scale strike movements--it was Soviet threats, Soviet soldiers, Soviet tanks and Soviet intrusion which destroyed their hopes for socialist democracy?

If you think that we, who are posing all these questions to you, are counterrevolutionaries as well, then please explain to us why it happens that the greatest communist parties of the capitalist world--such as those of Italy and Spain and now also that of France--join us in condemning any intervention in Poland on your part. The common platform of the French Communist and Socialist Parties reads in part: "Both parties have dealt with the development of the situation in Poland and they desire that this country and its people may by themselves wind up the process of economic, social and democratic renewal which they have triggered."

This is exactly what we also want, and we hope that you will live up to what you write in the final passage of your letter: "We will not allow socialist Poland to be touched nor will we desert a fraternal country in misfortune." We expect you not to let this fraternal country be touched by your own armies and you may rest assured that if the process of democratic renewal of a socialist Poland will, in fact, be completed, socialism will again become to the workers class in the capitalist states what it once meant: a great hope and the goal of its aspirations and struggles.

We share your fear of the terrible consequences of the mad nuclear armament and, therefore, in conclusion, we would like to draw your attention to the devastating consequences which an invasion of Poland by Warsaw Pact troops would have for the world peace movement, to the propaganda weapons which you thereby would provide to all reactionary forces in the capitalist states. Ultimately, however, this would also considerably intensify the dangers threatening yourselves.

We would welcome it very much if you could give us an answer which we will publish no matter what it might be like.

We set our hands hereto with socialist and trade union greetings as members of "solidarity with Solidarnost."

POLL SHOWS POPULARITY DECLINE FOR SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

DW310944 Bonn DIE WELT in German 31 Jul 81 pp 1-3

[Peter Philipps dispatch]

[Text] Bonn--The SPD is on rock bottom as only 34 percent of the citizens would vote for the Social Democrats. In contrast, the CDU/CSU opposition has profited from its relatively cohesive appearance. If the Bundestag were to be newly elected next week, it would attain the absolute majority with 50 percent of the votes. The FDP at the moment has a share of 9.2 percent while the Greens might for the first time gain Bundestag seats with 5.7 percent of the votes. This is the result of a public opinion poll among 1,300 FRG citizens carried out by the Allensbach Institute for Public Opinion Polling in May for the journal CAPITAL.

To 59 percent of the people interviewed, the SPD at the moment is a party which "promises much that it cannot fulfill." On 35 percent, it makes an "impression of internal dissension." In contrast, 51 percent are convinced that the CDU/CSU has "outspokenly proficient politicians."

Despite the decreasing SPD rating, however, the "popularity of Helmut Schmidt is nearly undiminished." According to Allensbach chief Elisabeth Noelle-Neumann, it was always true, from Adenauer over Erhardt up to Brandt, that whenever "the party's rating dropped that of the chancellor dropped as well." As many as 48 percent of the people interviewed are still satisfied with Schmidt. Thirty percent would elect Helmut Kohl chancellor.

According to Noelle-Neumann, "an economic pessimism never observed since the beginning of public opinion polling" coincides with the poor SPD ratings. In May, 44 percent of the people interviewed believed that the Federal Republic's economic development would go even further down in the next 6 months. Just 13 percent took a bright view of the economic future. The development of the next several yesrs is anticipated with skepticism by 41 percent.

Yet, despite these feelings which Allensbach terms the "sounding board for political tensions," certain political tendencies do not find any support in the Federal Republic of Germany. Thus, no "increase in anti-Americanism" can be noted. Noelle-Neumann says: The "great, unshakable friendliness toward the United States" remains unchanged. Of the people interviewed, 55 percent desire the continuation of the alliance being made the basis of German foreign policy whereas just 31 percent came out for neutrality--this rating increasing to 45 percent, however, among the people below 30 years of age. Fifty-six percent of the Germans even wish to work toward an "even closer cooperation" with the Americans. For comparison: In an Allensbach poll of May 1973, this rating still amounted to a mere 36 percent. Only 28 percent, however, are inclined to back the foreign policy of the United States without reserve.

Yet, even though the basic attitude toward the United States is positive in the Federal Republic and, as Noelle-Neumann put it, even though the Germans regard "the Americans as cousins," there is "no indication of Nibelungen loyalty:" only 28 percent of the people interviewed wanted to back the foreign policy of the Western leading power without reserve. A great majority of 65 percent prefers to make up their minds "from case to case," this being 9 percent more than a year ago.

At the same time, however, "confidence in the leadership role" of Washington has increased from 34 to 42 percent after the change in the presidential office from Carter to Reagan. And in reply to the question whether the United States is "again heading for Cold War and making the world insecure," 53 percent of the people interviewed said no and only 27 percent said yes.

The followers of the Greens alone seem to be "anti-American to a high degree:" 26 percent of them dislike the Americans.

A "peace movement" also cannot be defined by opinion polling: while in 1976 and 1979 as many as 52 percent considered it most important to avoid war, this rating has now dropped to 48 percent. Simultaneously, the number of those who accord the defense of democracy priority number one rose from 23 percent (1979) to 27 percent.

Noelle-Neumann stressed yesterday that the "fear of being incapable of defense" can be observed today as maintaining the same intensity as it has been showing since the 1950's. While 46 percent see a superiority of the East, only 6 percent perceive greater military strength in the West.

Correspondingly, nearly 80 percent advocate the Federal Republic's NATO membership and 53 percent approve of the NATO dual decision "all in all." But only 39 percent welcome the potential consequences of a counterarmament with medium-range missiles in West Europe while 35 percent reject these consequences.

The Allensbach pollers hit upon a phenomenon when they compared their own data with a poll made by the Gallup Institute among Americans. Noelle-Neumann: "In part, basic American feelings fundamentally differ from German feelings." Thus, in the United States, 89 percent answered in the affirmative the question: "Should authority be given greater respect in the future?" In Germany, only 53 percent were receptive to this and 30 percent took a negative stand. And answering the question whether work should become "less important" in life, 69 percent in the United States said no as against a mere 42 percent in the Federal Republic.

PAPER ON U.S. SUBSTITUTES FOR SOVIET NATURAL GAS

DW301535 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 30 Jul 81 p 8

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Late and Little"]

[Text] In Washington, Haig loudly voices the hope that the German-Soviet natural gas deal will not get underway. The Americans want to make compensation offers, as announced already by Reagan at Ottawa, so as to talk the Germans out of their intention.

The accompanying commentary conveyed out of the American mouth that this came too late and was too little can hardly be contradicted. Reagan's commendable undertaking of curing his country of economic dirigism, in this particular case, certainly has been too successful. For since everything is to be left to private initiative, the energy supply of the United States now develops in a way which completely disregards any considerations related to peace strategy as well as to war strategy. The search for increased supplies from indigenous sources (such as oil shale and liquefaction of coal), which at the same time could be for the benefit of the allies (inasmuch as the market would be unburdened), is no longer supported by the state. The attempt at talking the Europeans over to cheap American coal will not be very successful. For on the one hand, they already provided themselves with it, while on the other hand, they are aware of the limits of this possibility. Washington will have to go to much trouble to offer something enticing. This, however, doesn't alter the fact that doubts remain.

PRESS REACTS TO REAGAN'S CONGRESSIONAL SUCCESS

DW310841 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 31 Jul 81

[From the press review]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE notes: In Germany, efforts are being made to protect the proliferated state of benefits against gross retrogression by hiking taxes again after all. In the United States, in contrast, the President's daring proposal of making a try at tax reduction wins victory beyond the party limits. Despondent Europe which no longer draws a clear differentiating line between providence and effeminacy is facing a United States which resorts to the old virtues of its ancestors, definitely including their hardness toward themselves and toward others.

Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG states: U.S. President Reagan has accomplished what the German chancellor must yet achieve in a struggle of some time. Reagan has prevailed with his economic and financial crisis management program and may now wait and see whether it will prove its worth. The manner in which Reagan won Congress and the public over to his side commands admiration. It is a different question whether the radical change in course railroaded through by the Republicans will bear the desired fruit or whether it will merely end up in the intensification of the social differences in the United States which already are gross enough.

The Essen NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG comments: Reagan's victory means two things: To begin with, nobody doubts the President's dominant role in both the administration and Congress. Secondly, Reagan now has railroaded through his entire economic program. This marks a historical turning point: The New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt with emphasis on the concern over public welfare is dead. The men backing Reagan's policy advocate the classical position of leaving the initiative to the individual rather than to the state.

HERNU LIKELY TO VISIT MURUROA NUCLEAR TEST AREA

NC301915 Paris AFP in English 1809 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 30 Jul (AFP)--French Defense Minister Charles Hernu's inspection tour of French Polynesia, announced today by the Army Information Office, will probably take him to the Mururoa nuclear testing center, according to scientific authorities here.

Mr Hernu leaves Thursday night for Polynesia where, according to scientific authorities, a summer series of underground nuclear tests may be about to begin. This possibility, however, has not been confirmed by the Defense Ministry.

The last explosion in the 300-meter (900-foot) deep facility in volcanic rock was recorded on 7 March by scientific stations in Wellington, New Zealand.

Mr Hernu recently said that "for technological reasons, France should continue its studies and research on the neutron bomb, without necessarily going so far as to manufacture it."

The Mururoa tests, held thrice yearly, concern not only the neutron bomb. It was at Mururoa that the nuclear warheads of the new "M-4" missile were perfected, and where work on the miniaturization of medium-range missiles and warheads for Mirage 4 and Mirage 2000 warplanes by 1985 is going forward.

Mr Hernu's reported visit to the Pacific center is another sign of the French Government's interest in developing and modernizing its tactical and strategic forces.

President Francois Mitterrand showed the way last week when he visited the Ile Longue nuclear submarine base and announced that a seventh nuclear submarine would be put into service by 1990.

CONSTRUCTION OF 5 NUCLEAR STATIONS SUSPENDED

NC301730 Paris AFP in English 1433 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 30 Jul (AFP)--The French Government today decided to suspend construction of five nuclear power stations until parliament has debated the programme in the autumn.

The recently installed Socialist government also intends to consult the public about problems affecting safety and the environment.

Another nuclear power plant project at Plogoff in Brittany was abandoned shortly after the presidential election in May. But work on some plants opposed by ecologists is to go ahead.

The decisions are in line with election promises by Socialist President Francois Mitterrand who said his government would complete plants under construction but would not start work on others until the programme had been debated.

The government, which favours "moderate" use of nuclear energy, wants to increase energy savings by such means as leaving air conditioning plants out of new buildings. It also hopes to develop other energy sources such as solar, biomass and wave-power systems.

It is a delicate matter for the government as the centre-right opposition has used the nuclear question as a spearhead for attack with warnings that the Socialists are endangering France's future independence on energy questions.

Defeated President Valery Giscard d'Estaing frequently noted that he had given France one of the most developed nuclear power programmes in the world. His programme envisaged that 70 percent of the country's electricity would be provided by nuclear plants by 1990, and that this output would be equivalent to the nuclear power production of Japan, West Germany and Britain combined.

The conservative daily LE FIGARO estimated today that by 1990 France could fall 50 percent short of Mr Giscard d'Estaing's projections for nuclear power production.

But the government's decision to suspend work on the five nuclear facilities is also opposed by the Communist Party which has four ministers in the leftist administration. The party newspaper L'HUMANITE commented today that "any delay in work already underway will endanger our technological advance."

The Communist-led CGT union federation also wants to see work continuing on the nuclear programme, if only to protect jobs. More than 2,000 people were employed on preparatory work for the suspended projects, and many more would have been taken on as construction went ahead.

GOVERNMENT SET TO EXPAND POLITICAL ASYLUM

NC301747 Paris AFP in English 1623 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 30 Jul (AFP)—France's new Socialist government will be extending asylum to any person "persecuted or in danger" in his country of origin, the French junior minister in charge of immigration said today.

Francois Autain, whose title is state secretary for immigrants, made this declaration during a visit to a suburban transit center for refugees from Southeast Asia.

These refugees would be admitted in greater numbers than under the previous government, the official said, in recognition of an emergency situation having developed in the refugee camps of Thailand overflowing with 200,000 Indochinese refugees.

But the same asylum now granted the Indochinese will also be granted to the persecuted from other regions of the world, and notably Latin America, Mr Autain stressed.

Recently, a humanitarian aid association, Terre des Hommes, had charged that there was a de facto ban on the admission of certain nationalities into France and notably of refugees from Haiti, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Zaire and Ghana.

Secretary Autain pledged today that France would henceforth be admitting any person choosing to come to this country because he has been "persecuted for his ideas, race or religion," in deference to a principle inscribed in the preamble to the French Constitution, he recalled.

FRENCH-ISRAELI TALKS CENTER ON EEC EXPANSION

PM301240 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] French-Israeli economic talks, centering on the EEC's expansion to include Spain and Portugal and its consequences for Israel, took place at the Quai d'Orsay on 23 July. The Israeli delegation, which was chaired by Eliashiv Ben-Horin, a senior Foreign Ministry official, was received by Jean-Claude Paye, director of economic affairs at the Quai d'Orsay. These talks were general and informative, the Quai d'Orsay stated, pointing out that since Israel has signed agreements with the EEC all negotiations on Community problems fall within Brussels' competence.

PCF OFFICIALS CONFER WITH GUADELOUPE COMMUNISTS

[Text] A delegation from the Communist Party of Guadeloupe, comprising Secretary General Guy Daninthe and Politburo members Claudie Chipotel and Enest Moutoussamy, had a meeting yesterday with Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz, Central Committee associate Jean-Charles Negre and Deputy Jean Brunhes.

The talks, which were held in a cordial and fraternal atmosphere, allowed a broad exchange of views on the new situation created by the victory of the left. The two delegations decided to strengthen cooperation and collaboration between their two parties in all fields.

LE MONDE SEES OTTAWA CONSENSUS ON EAST-WEST TIES

PM301255 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "East and West After Ottawa"]

[Text] You have to look a long way back into the history of international relations, to the postwar period, the good old days of the French-British-American tripartisanship which vanished in the mid-1950's, to find so much harmony between Paris, London and Washington, at least regarding relations with Moscow.

The most conservative leaders in the Western world agree on this. After Reagan, who told the NEW YORK TIMES: "Mitterrand said the same as I," Thatcher, speaking to the House of Commons, welcomed the French president's "passionate and robust" stance on defense and Paris' commitment to the Atlantic alliance. "This attitude is shared by the FRG," the "iron lady" added, seizing the opportunity to condemn her Labor opponents, the only socialists in Europe, she said, who want to avoid the "fundamental duty" to defend the country, flirt with neutralism and approach possible negotiations with the USSR "completely naked."

It is not surprising however that the Soviet APN and TASS news agencies should describe as "hypocritical" and "barren" the passages in the Ottawa final statement devoted to East-West dialogue, international terrorism and North-South relations. Nor is it surprising that L'HUMANITE is starting to gnash its teeth and stress that "U.S. leadership" is "uncontested" or that PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz should accuse Reagan of "turning his back on detente" and call for France to adopt a policy of "broad cooperation" with the socialist states.

It is true that Mitterrand adopted a particularly clear stance not only at the Ottawa table but in public. Discussing the eternal question which was at the heart of the Cold War and which is now behind East-West tension and the West's internal controversies, especially in the European leftwing parties--should we arm (in other words, in current terminology, restore the balance of forces) to negotiate or negotiate to avoid arming?--the president replied categorically: "Balance first."

Is he bluffing? Probably, but this is always how foreign policy is conducted. After Ottawa the West should not be long in discovering whether a firm line pays. Hitherto it paid off in the most difficult moments in East-West history: on various occasions in Berlin, during the German rearmament in 1954-55 and later in Cuba. In any case, since the program to "modernize" NATO's armaments was not being questioned, Reagan confirmed before the Ottawa summit that he is prepared to open "serious" negotiations with Moscow on the Euromissiles between "mid-November and mid-December."

The ball is now in the Soviet court but it will be noted that, despite criticism of the Ottawa summit, USSR Foreign Trade Minister Patolichev welcomed the conclusion of "big contracts" with the West on Thursday.

Since a firm line seems to be the new style in French diplomacy, it will be up to Mitterrand to implement it on all sides, if necessary toward Ronald Reagan's United States--and in this respect Ottawa's results are still vague--and toward Thatcher's Britain when the European Community's reorganization is examined.

PSI, L'UNITA DISCUSS BERLINGUER INTERVIEW

AU300845 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 30 Jul (ANSA)--The Italian Budget and Treasury Ministers will be spending August trying to link the demands of organized labor, the government and big business into a mutually-acceptable chain of events capable of holding down inflation.

Budget Minister Giorgio la Malfa and Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta were given the thankless assignment for the traditional Italian vacation month after three days of talks in Rome between Premier Giovanni Spadolini and labor leaders.

The upshot of the meetings was that the coalition government will have to give a "tangible" sign that it was willing to move at least part of the way on labor's demands for tax and utility rates breaks and lower prices if it wanted to set a ceiling on wage hikes.

The government-labor talks ended just in time to turn the Italian political stage over to the Christian Democrat Party (DC), which starts a two-day national council session in Rome today.

While the DC's highest decision-making body makes its entrance onto the center of the political stage, the rest of the arena was still in a flutter today over an interview that Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer gave Tuesday.

The PCI newspaper, L'UNITA, voiced surprise today at the virulent reaction the interview got from the Socialist Party (PSI).

The PSI smugly dismissed Berlinguer's remarks in its own press organ yesterday, branding the interview "cheap propaganda" and its message a product of "sheer sectarianism" and "an hallucinated vision of Italian politics."

With more finesse but nonetheless offensive, the Communist daily voiced regret that the Socialists had "lost another occasion for debate on problems and issues of utmost importance."

The PSI threw out the occasion by "nervously cutting off the dialogue opened by Berlinguer with a sequel of epithets," said L'UNITA.

The party newspaper also explained that Berlinguer's attack was aimed at "the Christian Democrat Party's occupation of the state and the asphyxia it has created in the democratic system."

The PCI simply "did not understand why (PSI Secretary Bettino) Craxi got so heated up over a stand like that."

The DC newspaper, IL POPOLO, chimed in today with the sarcastic comment that it did not understand "how Berlinguer could call on leftist parties to get together in an anti-DC alliance after saying that all the parties on the Italian political scene except his own were going to pieces."

Not to be left out, the Social Democrat Party (PSDI) daily L'UMANITA charged the Communists of "occupying the state" as much as the DC, with the only difference that it wielded its "hegemony" and "patronage" on the local level.

Republican Party (PRI) spokesman Adolfo Battaglia asserted that the Communists "shared some of the responsibility for the degeneration of many political parties."

In an article in today's VOCE REPUBBLICANA, Battaglia did however welcome Berlinguer's acknowledgement that there was no more sense pursuing a "welfare policy" now that Italy's spell with prosperity was over.

CONTINUATION OF 10TH COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

Carrillo Report Voted

LD301422 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] The vote on the report delivered by Carrillo on the first day of the PCE congress has yielded the result: 689 in favor, 64 against and 266 abstentions. So his performance at the head of the PCE in the last 3 years has earned 67 percent of votes in favor, approximately 7 percent against and 26 percent in abstention. This 26 percent in abstention corresponds to the "renewalist" sector which in this way is demonstrating its disagreement with the performance of Carrillo and his team at the head of the party during the past 3 years. Another interpretation of these figures could be an abandonment of the idea of monolithic views and of unwavering support for the PCE leadership.

In his speech this morning, Carrillo said he will be making no pacts with any of the sectors although he took a conciliatory attitude throughout and did not adopt an excessively hard line.

We can add that the first of the party theses has now been approved. This was the thesis relating to international affairs. In this sphere, the PCE advocates a Spanish foreign policy of nonalignment with military blocs and it declares itself opposed to joining NATO. The second thesis dealing with the period of the transition also was approved.

Carrillo Response to Vote

LD302112 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Correspondent Luis Pintor dispatch from PCE Congress in Madrid]

[Text] The plenary session of the PCE congress today approved the report on the activities and policies of the Central Committee which was delivered by Santiago Carrillo. Out of 1,019 delegates, 689 voted in favor, 64 voted against and 266 abstained. As expected, the negative votes were cast by the group known as the Afghans, out-and-out defenders of Soviet policies. The abstentions came from the renewalist sector, which favors official recognition of pluralism within the party. The degree of opposition to Carrillo's policies--approximately 32 percent--is something totally unheard of in the history of the PCE.

Closing the debate on internal matters, Carrillo once again underlined the PCE's Eurocommunist policies and his unmistakable will for democracy. On the great internal debate about currents of opinion and tendencies, Carrillo was quite definite: The PCE recognizes the right to unhampered freedom of expression, but when full decisions are to be made, everyone must go along with the policy decided on by the majority. He said: If we do not check these steps toward the organized setting up of tendencies, the party could destroy itself. The PCE cannot devote itself to internal battles unless we want democracy to go to hell--and those were his very words.

But at the same time as he was emphasizing his rejection of tendencies and of federalist ideas, Carrillo took a clearly moderate attitude toward the dissident groups. Thus, having affirmed that the only possible pact is one of respect for the majority view, he stressed that there should be no vengeance toward, or purges or bans of, opponents. This permits one to imagine that some representatives of the renewalists might be in the next Central Committee although almost certainly at a level less than the 30 percent they obtained in the vote.

Finally, the congress has begun examining the theses in plenary session. The first two, dealing with foreign policy and the role of the party in the political transition in Spain, have been approved unopposed, and almost the same thing has happened with the third, entitled "Unity of Action of the Left for a Government of National Cooperation," suggesting unity of all the constitutional parties in the old Communist proposal for a government of national unity.

More on Dissent Vote

NC301734 Paris AFP in English 1615 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 30 Jul (AFP)--The Tenth Congress of the Spanish Communist Party today adopted the political report of its secretary general, despite many abstentions by reformist members who said the proposed party structure allowed too little freedom of expression. A total of 689 of the 1,019 delegates who took part in the vote supported the report, while 64 voted against and 266 abstained. Thus a third of the congress registered dissent with the views of party chief Santiago Carrillo.

Mr Carillo said that minorities can say what they wish inside the party, but once a decision is taken, all members must show a common front. "In no other communist party... could debate have been as open as during this congress," Mr Carrillo asserted.

Party "innovators" said they would ask for a permanent public forum in the party press where all points of view could be heard.

Mr Carrillo, in rejecting proportional representation for the innovators on the Central Committee, and party federalization asked by Basque and Aragonese members, said he could lead the party if elected with the 67 percent that had voted for his report. "I'm not used to unanimity," he said. Mr Carrillo, who has led the party since 1960, is expected to be re-elected Friday.

Carrillo Pre-Congress Interview

PM301323 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 26 Jul 81 p 15

[Joaquin Prades interview with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo: "Whoever Fails To Observe Conclusions of 10th Congress Will Be Expelled From Party"]

[Text] Question: You face prospects of a very lively congress this year....

Answer: Well, yes, but the possible opposition to me is not my main worry. As far as I am concerned, there is something much worse than that, namely that, bearing in mind how fragile Spanish democracy still is, if we parties project a picture of internal power struggles, we run the risk of the public believing that the party system is worthless and that therefore democracy is no good. Because, obviously, it is not the same as such things happening in the rest of Europe, where they are accepted as normal within the system; here in Spain, on the other hand, where people become accustomed to a single party for 40 years, this is not so clear. We have achieved a good balance by basing political life on four major nationwide parties and two nationalist ones, but if we now return to a multiplicity of parties and minor parties, we will be embarking on a destabilizing trend. I believe that for a time, while democracy is becoming consolidated, there should be more lion tails and fewer mouse heads.

Question: When you mentioned a multiplicity of parties, were you actually thinking that the PCE could break up at this congress?

Answer: Well, that danger always exists. That is obvious; you only have to look at the example of Catalonia where no sooner was a platform established than a fight broke out. Such a trend always leads to disunity and therefore ruptures.

Question: But have things in the PCE reached the stage of what you call disunity?

Answer: I do not believe so. I do not believe there will be any rupture, by which I mean a breakaway by a sector of a party. However, it is quite possible that uncomfortable personal situations will occur after the congress, which would create situations of conflict.

Question: Might these conflicts be resolved by means of expulsions?

Answer: Well, in Catalonia the Executive Committee proposed the expulsion of nine people for the attack on Deputy Sole Tura. These are necessary measures, and if similar occurrences happen elsewhere, administrative measures will have to be taken.

"Transition Has Engendered Much Dissatisfaction"

Question: Do you believe that the 10th congress will end in blows?

Answer: No, I do not believe that it will come to that. But if it does, we would do the same as in Catalonia; and if there is a disciplined attitude toward congress decisions there will be no administrative measures. Voting in favor of particular currents does not constitute a violation of discipline, but to persist with one line after the congress has approved another is a different matter.

Question: So if the majority of the congress does not accept the existence of currents of opinion but the minorities continue to demand them, will expulsions occur?

Answer: Of course. Those who fail to observe the congress' decisions cannot remain within the party.

Question: The opposition that has arisen around you seems to reflect more a widespread dissatisfaction than a political option different from the one that you advocate. Why are these people dissatisfied with the PCE?

Answer: The fact is that the political transition has left many people dissatisfied. Indeed, there is a failure to question the substance of policies within the PCE. Now even the dogmatists have their own option, but to avoid this dissatisfaction, our party would have had to have as many deputies as the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE]. I can understand the crisis experienced by some people in our party during the transition; they, who had sacrificed themselves to the antifascist struggle, are not in parliament, whereas their contemporaries who spent the entire clandestine period without lifting a finger, are now socialist deputies. In short, it is a situation which I greatly deplore, but the PCE is what it is and, let there be no mistake; our progress will be slow.

Question: Is the PSOE waiting for these dissatisfied people who have not managed to become deputies?

Answer: Well, I don't know about that. Be that as it may, I do not believe that any Communist sector will be leaving. Perhaps some will leave individually.

Question: You said the other day that the present struggle within the PCE is basically sociological.

Answer: Yes, because there is a current that wishes to represent one sector of society and does in fact reflect a particular middle class social sector.

I do not deny that the members of this current are communists, but their political ideas are conditioned by the social environment in which they live. You journalists have discussed the outcome of the voting in which currents of opinion were approved at the Madrid [provincial PCE] conference, but failed to notice that 20 percent of the delegates were absent during the vote.

Question: Where were they?

Answer: At home, asleep. You can form your own opinion of what it means to introduce this vote at 0300 Monday morning after 2 nights of debate. If a worker has to be in his factory at 0700, why should the poor fellow suffer another night without sleep? I will not go into the matter of whether or not the extension of the debates was coincidental, but this is a fact, and I mention it because it could indicate the sociological representation that I mentioned before.

Question: Some professional people and renovating Eurocommunists are complaining that you used them during the municipal elections to see whether it was possible to attract the middle class vote, but since these votes went to the PSOE it now seems that you have abandoned them and that they do not interest you.

Answer: No. Not at all. That is not so. The proof of this is that I took no part in drawing up the electoral lists. If, for instance, the people complaining are from Madrid, I could tell them that their list was drawn up exclusively by Tamames and ratified by the Central Committee. Tamames included whoever he wanted and nobody interfered in their work. Moreover, if they believe that they are no longer of any interest to the party, they are very much mistaken, among other reasons, because I have never believed that they should not again stand as candidates at the next elections. Consider even the case of Eduardo Mangada (one of the renovating Eurocommunists). When Tamames left, leaving his post vacant in the council, it was I who suggested that the architect Mangada take over the post.

"Veterans Will Leave Central Committee

Question: Mr Carrillo, you say that things will be changed at this congress. What specifically will change?

Answer: First, the reduction of the Central Committee to 61 members will constitute a renovation of personnel. A door will be opened for the admission of young people and this will inevitably imply the departure of other more elderly people, though it will not necessarily depend on age. Moreover, it is strange that people have the image of a gerontocratic PCE, because apart from Simon and myself, all the party's other spokesmen are young--Sole Tupa, Tamames (until he left), Perez Royo, Curiel, Nicolas Sartorius and others. But the system of work will also be changed. At present, there are too many committees, and they will be reduced to four or five main areas, one of which will be exclusively devoted to organizing the work in the associations.

Question: The malfunctioning of the grassroots associations has been indicated both by yourself and by your opponents as the main error committed by your party since the ninth congress. What have been its repercussions?

Answer: The first result of this error has been a decline in membership. There are many members who still hold 1978 membership cards, not because they have left the party but because nobody in the association has taken on the task of renewing them. What has also happened is that the grassroots have not been very aware of what was being done higher up in the party, because in view of our country's level of education, the best form of information is by word of mouth and of course, since we do not have our own television service, one of our comrades should visit the local associations and tell people the reason for this or that political decision.

And discuss topics with people so they can express suggestions and anxieties. Such visits have been made, of course, but perhaps only once a year, and clearly....From now on all this will change. There will be much more interrelation between the grassroots and the upper echelons.

"I Am Not in Command"

Question: Why have you not tried to remedy this before?
Answer: I became aware of this some time ago and suggested, for instance, a detailed study to discover the real reasons for the decline in membership; but I am not in command, despite what journalists think, and although I insisted I was not heeded.

Question: But Mr Carrillo, I do not know whether people will believe that you insisted that something that you consider fundamental be done in your party but that nobody heeded you.

Answer: Well, it is true. I can understand that it is difficult to believe, because you have the idea that all I have to do is push a button and everybody jumps to attention. Well, no, that is not how it is. There are not many of us here and, moreover, we have too much work to do. And I can say something and for one reason or another it is not done.

Renovators With Stalinist Habits

Question: Does the present PCE still retain any Stalinist habits?

Answer: Well, yes, of course there are still certain habits, but the noteworthy point is that there are Stalinist traits not only among the dogmatists but even among the so-called "renovators," since in some Madrid associations some 40 percent of the votes were won by Euroocommunists and 51 percent by renovators, but not a single Eurocommunist delegate was able to attend the conference. That is Stalinism.

Question: One has the impression that the PCE is going to accentuate its character as a working class party, perhaps so as to define electoral areas.

Answer: No, that is an erroneous impression. At the Madrid conference not even 30 percent of the delegates were workers, even though 80-85 percent of our grassroots are composed of workers. For instance, the Madrid Secretariat has lost a worker (Simon Sanchez Montero, a baker) and gained a physical engineer (Adolfo Pinedo).

Question: Who in fact are the PCE's voters?
Answer: The workers, some intellectuals and the lower middle classes.

Question: The PSOE could give the same answer to that question.
Answer: Yes, but the difference is that the PSOE has a more rightwing sector than I have. I believe that the PSOE can play a major role in the transformation of Spanish society, but unless there is a truly strong Communist Party at its side, the PSOE will make no socialist transformations.

MINISTER TO RECONSIDER NATO EXERCISE PARTICIPATION

PM281522 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 26 Jul 81 p 5

[Tasmus Nielsen report: "Awaiting Norwegian Reply on Naval Exercise"]

[Excerpt] "We will reconsider the question of Danish participation in the 'Ocean Venture 81' naval exercise when I have received on Monday or Tuesday [27 and 28 July] my Norwegian counterpart's reasons for Norway's nonparticipation," Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE.

He continued: "It has been known for 3 or 4 months that naval forces from Latin American countries also would be taking part in the exercise so there is every reason for Norway to explain why it has only just withdrawn from the exercise," the Danish defense minister said. He did not want to predict what other motives the Norwegian Government might have for dissociating itself from the U.S.-organized naval exercise.

But according to the London newspaper the GUARDIAN, the Norwegian Government was alarmed by information given to the Norwegian Foreign Ministry by anti-apartheid groups. These groups said that the South African Navy will cooperate in the naval exercise's communications phase when the fleet is in the southern Atlantic.

OFFICIALS, NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON ZONE ISSUE

NATO's Luns, Politician

PM281517 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 26 Jul 81 p 5

[Excerpt] NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns said on Saturday [25 July] that NATO's central authorities have no idea of what the Nordic countries' prime ministers mean and want when they talk about "the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone." He added that NATO hasn't reached a decision on the nuclear-free zone and that NATO has still not received any official Nordic proposal to allow the question of a Nordic nuclear-free zone to be part of the disarmament negotiations between the East and West.

"Discussing the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries with the other Nordic countries is clearly within the range of present Danish security policy," Single Tax Party political spokesman Ib Christensen said at his party's summer meeting in Vejle yesterday. "The government should not give the Liberals and the Conservatives a right of veto in defense and foreign policy," Ib Christensen said.

[Editorial: "Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] The Norwegian Labor Party has succeeded in setting light to the international debate on detente with its proposal for a "nuclear-free zone" and Leonid Brezhnev with an "offer" in SUOMEN SOSIALDEMOKRAATTI has succeeded in creating suitable doubts about what the whole thing is basically about.

A Norwegian opinion poll supports the idea. Some 69 percent support a "nuclear-free zone" and 14 percent are against it. If the Norwegians had been asked if they presently are interested in world disarmament, there might have been a slim chance of getting 100 percent support.

However, it is large-scale disarmament which is the important issue here. The Nordic countries are already nuclear-free. This is the result of the policies of the Nordic countries. The Soviet Union can be quite sure that there are no nuclear arms in the Nordic countries.

It makes no difference at all whether this situation is formalized in as many treaties as you like. The Nordic countries would not have any more safety or security—it world rearmament continued unabated.

In addition, the nuclear-free zones are not a matter between the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union. But for NATO members Norway and Denmark, they must be a NATO matter, which could possibly be connected with general disarmament efforts. And in reality, this is all that has been said.

[Editorial: "They Are Outside"]

[Text] The Soviet APN has turned out the lights and stopped all further speculation on the debate on the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

There is absolutely no foundation for Willy Brandt's, the Finnish Social Democrats' or any one else's expectation that a deal can be struck with the Soviet Union. APN stated that the idea of nuclear-free zones is now ripe for realization, but speculation on the extent to which the Soviet Union would take part "have been artificially inflated." APN dismissed the idea that the Kola Peninsula could be included in a zone.

The Soviet Union's nuclear arms are part of the "global military balance" and do not affect conditions in the Nordic countries!

Well then, the whole matter has been cleared up—as it was before discussions began on such a diffuse foundation. The Soviet Union states that nuclear arms are a topic for discussion between the Warsaw Pact and NATO and Brezhnev's hints that this country was suddenly well disposed toward negotiations were a damp squib.

But to return to the Nordic countries—our isolated situation is not a problem. We do not have nuclear arms, we have never had them—and we do not want them!

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 26 July

PM281527 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE In Danish 26 Jul 81 p 10

[Editorial: "Set a Steady Course"]

[Text] We could hope that the last word on the nuclear-free zone was said with the prime minister's statement to the Folketing Foreign Affairs Committee this week. "We have no concrete plans on the slipway," Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said after the closed meeting, and this hopefully can be interpreted as a farewell to a Danish initiative on the matter. Of course the government has both the right and duty to take an interest in the deeper meaning in President Brezhnev's vague hints. But ideally it would be a long way from this to active consideration of a fundamental change in Danish security policy.

A nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries enshrined in a treaty would contain so many elements that neutralize the Nordic region that it would be synonymous with Denmark and Norway leaving the Western defense system. Perhaps it is precisely this which makes the idea attractive for those who dream of retiring from the world and making themselves comfortable on the sly. But a policy of neutrality is not a policy of security for a country with Denmark's strategic position at the exit from the Baltic. The country learned this during the last war, and the lesson was learned by the Social Democrats in particular. It was under Social Democratic rule that Denmark chose to secure its defenses in the Western alliance.

It was not a difficult choice for the large nonsocialist parties, but it was a decision of major importance for the Social Democrats. It brought and brings the party much honor that it chose the right policy, even though this involved a break with its own past. The awareness of responsibility this represented has been a contributory factor in making the Social Democrats the major government party for so much of the period since the last war.

This fact contains a commitment. The present Social Democratic leaders should realize that they should remain true to it.

It is a commitment to lead the party calmy and clearly with firmness and consistency in those questions affecting Denmark's security. This is by no means easy, for the Social Democratic Party is a broad party with many internal movements, and it might seem politically comfortable and justifiable to swim with the tide. But it is important for the country for the Social Democrats to hold a steady course in security matters. In the broad context we are a small country making a modest contribution to joint defense in proportion to our capacity. But this contribution would be further reduced if there were doubts about our intentions and suspicions about our willingness. It has been part of our strength in the eyes of the world that we have always united around our commitments in foreign and security policy. Let it be so again, and let it continue to be so.

CP LEADER CRITICIZES NATO NAVAL EXERCISES

LD271012 Helsinki International Service in English 0830 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] The chairman of the Finnish Communist Party, Mr Aarne Saarinen, this past weekend described as "provocative" NATO plans to hold naval exercises in the Baltic Sea this autumn. In a statement to the Communist and people's democratic newspaper KANSAN UUTISET, Mr Saarinen said that the provocative nature of the exercises has been increased by NATO's inclusion of naval forces from what he describes as a number of reactionary South American states. He regarded as positive the decision by Norway not to take part in the exercises. The Communist Party which Mr Saarinen heads is included in Finland's four-party central-left coalition government as a member of the People's Democratic League.

U.S., NORDIC VIEWS OF ZONE ISSUE OUTLINED

PM241101 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 18 Jul 81 p 2

[Jan-Magnus Jansson Editorial: "Rejection in Washington"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's rejection of the plans for a Nordic nuclear-free zone has attracted a good deal of attention. Nevertheless there is nothing especially surprising in the U.S. reaction. However, it would seem that the opportunity was taken to make the U.S. view clear in a more brusque way than in the past, something which indeed harmonizes with the new political leadership's tough general approach. However, the United States has at no time indicated that it would take a directly favorable view of the project, though the position hitherto has rather been discreetly negative. When Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund sought a clear answer, it meant in a way that the United States was provoked into expressing itself in plain language.

Instead of asking what causes the United States to take such a negative view of the zone plans, it would perhaps be more logical to pose the question: What could motivate a positive U.S. approach to it? In such an important issue every state can only be led by what is to its own advantage.

Politically the most important element in the plan for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries has so far been the fact that a treaty would prevent the deployment of nuclear weapons in Norway and Denmark. The Norwegian and Danish governments' standard argument that their countries are already nuclear-free hardly has much relevance here. Without underestimating the two countries' desire not to have nuclear installations on their own territory, it is obvious that unilateral declarations by two minor NATO allies would not carry the same weight as an international agreement, which would obviously be guaranteed by the superpowers. And precisely this, one could say, is the principal reason for the opposition in the West to an agreement. The option must be kept open.

A permanent denuclearization of the two small NATO nations would mean a limitation on U.S. freedom of action in particular. Washington is naturally asking what it would get in return. In this context Sweden can be ignored. It is unthinkable that Sweden would allow the deployment of foreign nuclear weapons and the Swedes are hardly likely to start constructing their own bomb. (It can also be pointed out here that all the Nordic countries have ratified the nonproliferation agreement.)

As far as Finland is concerned, the peace treaty of course forbids us to "possess, manufacture or conduct experiments with any form of nuclear weapon." This does not exclude the possibility, at least in theory, that some other state could place nuclear weapons on Finnish territory. This possibility would only dissappear if Finland were part of a Nordic nuclear-free zone. It is possible that the United States could see this strengthened guarantee of a nuclear-free Finland as a gain. But in all probability Finland plays such a small role in U.S. calculations that this would not compensate for the denuclearization of Norway and Denmark. The deployment of land-based nuclear weapons in Norway in particular could have a revolutionary effect on the situation in northern Europe.

In addition there are probably U.S. fears that the example could be contagious. The fact that the plans for a Nordic nuclear-free zone have been connected, by the Norwegian Labor Party in particular, with more wide-ranging arrangements in Europe is in many ways double-edged. It means that if the Americans heed the Nordic countries' arguments they could easily find themselves burdened with demands for the denuclearization of central Europe.

The report on the discussions between Haig and Frydenlund does not say how the Americans react to Brezhnev's offer to discuss "measures" in contiguous areas of the Soviet Union in connection with the establishment of a Nordic nuclear-free zone. The offer, which Brezhnev obviously repeated to Willy Brandt, is probably only of marginal significance for the Americans, who are more interested in the central nuclear arms balance. In any case it is really the only new feature in the discussion in recent months and should not be dismissed untried.

Finally, as a background factor in all U.S. thinking, there are the imminent negotiations with the Soviet Union on medium-range missiles. Haig said initiatives for a Nordic nuclear-free zone could "complicate" the missile negotiations. This should perhaps be understood to mean that the Americans are determined not to appear "soft" on any point but are intent on going to the negotiating table (if they go) with maximum determination to assert their position.

The question of the nuclear-free zones was also raised at the Socialist International meeting in Bonn. However, it was clearly only a marginal element in the discussion there. The international appealed to the superpowers to start negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe by November at the latest.

A few days earlier Europe's present most prominent socialist, President Mitterrand, stated in Bonn that the Euromissiles should be produced before a start was made on disarmament negotiations. It is difficult to suppress the reflection that what two Social Democratic government heads say to each other carries greater weight than what is said at an ideological forum like the international.

However, as far as the Nordic nuclear-free zone is concerned, it must be pointed out that the interests of the Nordic states should not be too divergent on this point. For Finland a nuclear-free north and Nordic detente as a whole are a national interest, and our country has been extremely consistent on this. Norway, our most important "opposite number," must also be interested in a situation in which in wartime it is at best possible to be confident that there will be no nuclear attacks and in peacetime the Nordic countries can remain a region of relatively low tension.

What Anker Jorgensen, Gro Harlem Brundtland and Mauno Koivisto stressed when they left Bonn--that the discussions on a nuclear-free zone will continue--is quite reasonable. The exact contents of Brezhnev's offer in particular should be investigated. But Finland should not hope for rapid developments. In the balancing act between the United States and the Soviet Union which is part of Norwegian politics, the United States is more important. Thus Norway will be wary of attitudes which might offend the United States and cause it to adopt a cooler approach to Norway's defense problems than in the past.

Of course, the fact that the Nordic nuclear-free zone has now primarily become an issue for the Nordic Social Democratic parties is a separate complication. From the diplomatic sphere in which Kekkonen introduced it, it has become a matter for meetings and demonstrations. This can be a strength but also a danger. The extremely cool reaction from the Swedish Foreign Ministry recently to the recent events shows this. And in Norway itself it is probable that a possible future nonsocialist government would be less inclined to pursue the idea of a zone than the present Labor Party government.

BRIEFS

PORK EXPORTS TO POLAND--Pork deliveries from Finland to Poland will begin this week. The deal negotiated by Finnish exporters in Poland last week covers a total of 3 million kg of pork. Of this amount, 2 million kg will be exported frozen and 1 million kg fresh. The exports to Poland will begin after the Polish purchasing organization has opened a letter of credit in a French bank or paid a part of the sum agreed on. The payment will be in dollars. The opening of the first letter of credit was confirmed today. It is believed that the pork exports will facilitate the marketing situation for beef. NUCLEAR ZONE CALLED 'MEANINGLESS CONCESSION'

PM270740 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 16 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Vacillation in the West"]

[Text] In a speech in New York, Secretary of State Alexander Haig has said that he hopes the United States and the Soviet Union will be able to start negotiations in the fall on the limitation of both defense alliances' nuclear weapons in Europe.

This was the first time a member of the U.S. administration has spoken out on this question, which is of vital importance for European security and stability.

It has been only a week since President Reagan let it be known that this was something that should not be talked about, and in doing to he gave fuel to widespread suspicions that the Americans were taking the whole question of arms control lightly and could not envisgage negotiations on the subject without linking them to other considerations of the Soviet Union's actions in international politics.

Assuming that the secretary of state will not be repudiated again by others in the U.S. leadership, what he said hopefully can be taken as an indication that the U.S. administration has finally succeeded in deciding on a course of action in its foreign policy.

The lack of clear information on where the Americans stand has created great uncertainty in Western Europe and contributed to the confusion which the emotional--and sometimes politically tactical--discussion of the modernization of the Western alliance's defenses and of the possibility of a nuclear-free zone on occasion has reached.

But the question is whether the U.S. clarification did not come too late to restore calm within the Western alliance, which is in danger of being driven into its most serious crisis to date.

In West Germany dissension within the leading government party, the SPD, has grown worse since party chairman Willy Brandt thought he heard "new emphases" in one of Brezhnev's dinner speeches. It is true that the government in Bonn has given the former chancellor a pat on the back for "throwing new light on Brezhnev's way of thinking," but at the same time it also claims that Brezhnev has done nothing to change the actual situation. Instead Moscow's latest demarche is seen as an attempt to make Soviet missile superiority permanent by arranging a moratorium. The most powerful support Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has been given has come from France's new socialist president. Mitterrand has stated quite clearly that modernization of the Western alliance's nuclear weapons is necessary before negotiations with the Soviet Union are begun.

Schmidt needs all the help he can get, since Brandt is continuing to pursue his own political line outside the government and is also aiming at pursuing it internationally after calling a meeting of the Socialist International in Bonn.

The international can also be expected to discuss the latest demarches on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries, and here socialist leaders from various countries have an opportunity to try to steer the discussion onto a more realistic path.

The fact that Moscow has once again been able to breathe life into this oil idea must not simply be described as a propaganda offensive. The Russians feel surrounded, and Brezhnev has every reason to worry about the incredibly sharp increase in the cost of arms. But as long as he gives no further details of what Moscow itself could offer, it is natural to see the proposals for such a zone as a test for Soviet tactics which could be used as a model for bringing about a similar debate affecting Western Europe.

It is not surprising that Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund met with tough opposition when he discussed the Nordic zone in Washington. No leading NATO nation has shown any enthusiasm for such a zone, whereas Moscow, by playing on politicians without government responsibility like Brandt and the Norwegian social democrat Einar Forde can promise guarantees not to use nuclear arms against-free zones. But no guarantees are given free. The only guarantee that gives us any security is the disappearance of nuclear arms. Their withdrawal from certain areas is--bearing in mind today's missile technology--a meaningless concession.

KIPRIANOU RETURNS FROM LONDON, DESCRIBES MEETINGS

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou returned from London this evening. In a statement he made when he arrived at Larnaca airport, the president said that during his short stay in London, where he attended the wedding of the heir to the British throne, he had a private meeting with British Prime Minister Thatcher with whom he discussed various issues of common interest and especially the Cyprus issue. On this issue, he said, I expressed our views to Mrs Thatcher in detail. Also, he added, we discussed issues related to Cyprus' association with the EEC, and we discussed the issue of compensation for the use of the British bases and facilities. We also discussed issues that will occupy the next Commonwealth conference in Australia. On this issue, he said, I had a long talk with Commonwealth Secretary General Ramphal. It is expected that, depending on the developments in the Cyprus issue, a corresponding discussion will be held at the Commonwealth conference.

The president added that during the various events he had the opportunity to meet with many state leaders and stressed that his meeting with French President Mitterrand had been especially interesting. During my stay in London, Kiprianou concluded, I attended events sponsored by the Greek Cypriot community in London, and I had meetings with delegations from the community with whom we discussed various problems of the community.

The president was received at Larnaca airport by House of Representatives President Ladhas, who deputized for him during the president's absence, members of the Council of Ministers, the British high commissioner in Cyprus, the chiefs of the National Guard and the police and other officials.

SPOKESMAN DENIES REQUEST FOR INCREASED U.S. ROLE

[Text] An official statement describes as inaccurate the report that a Cypriot official, in an urgent message, has briefed the U.S. State Department and Secretary of State Haig personally concerning everything that was said at the conference held in Athens on the Cyprus problem, and that he has asked for a more active role by the United States so that the procedures connected with the Cyprus problem do not go outside the intra-allied network. The truth, adds the official statement, is that Foreign Minister Rolandhis, acting on the basis of a decision made at the conference, sent Haig a letter, not to brief him on what was said and the decisions that were made, but to ask the United States to exercise its influence for the success of the efforts that are being made for a just solution of the Cyprus problem. The statement stressed that this does not concern a new line or approach by the Cyrpus Government, because it has been repeatedly declared that the United States, in view of the aid it is giving to Turkey, is in a position to contribute to a change in the intransigent Turkish policy on the Cyprus problem.

The effort to convince the United States or other countries to aid in a just solution of the Cyprus problem, concludes the official statement, in no way contradicts the government's fixed line that the Cyprus problem should remain within the UN framework and be solved through procedures foreseen by the international organization's relevant resolutions.

Rolandhis, Haig Exchange

NC310854 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 31 Jul 81 p 8

[Text] The government spokesman has stated that the content of Secretary of State Haig's reply to Foreign Minister Rolandhis' letter, in which Rolandhis called on the United States to exert its influence for the success of the efforts being made toward a Cyprus solution, will not be released for publication.

Answering a question, the spokesman said that such documents are not released for publication.

With regard to Rolandhis' letter, the spokesman said that the essence of its contents has already been announced, but that the full text is not intended to be released for publication.

Finally, in answer to another question, the government spokesman said all indications are that the Turkish Cypriot side will submit proposals on territorial and other aspects of the Cyprus issue.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN REPEATS ARMS CARGO DENIAL

NC311042 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 31 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government has repeated its denial of any knowledge that the Argentine plane which crashed on Russian soil on July 18 was engaged in the carriage of arms from Israel to Iran.

At the same time it dismissed as fantastic reports about agreeing to the landings against the payment of extra money and appealed for an end to unfounded publications "which can only cause harm to the republic and tend to disturb relations with friendly countries or cause harm to its international position."

The government had earlier this week acknowledged that an Argentine cargo plane has used Larnaca airport three times for refuelling on its way from Tel Aviv but the last time it used Larnaca was on July 14, that is, four days prior to the incident in Soviet air space.

A Swiss businessman claimed that the Cyprus Government was aware of the fact that the plane was engaged in carrying arms, but both Israel and Iran denied reports about the despatch of arms from Israel, and Nicosia said that the plane crew had declared they were carrying pipes.

Yesterday, however, the Greek Cypriot daily TA NEA revived the story about the Cyprus Government being aware of the Argentine plane being engaged in carrying arms and equipment.

The paper, in its report yesterday, said that the Scottish pilot, Allan MacPhertie, who negotiated the landing with the Cyprus Government, had obtained permit for 20 landings and the government demanded a fee of 20,000 Cyprus pounds for each,but agreed in the end to 10,000 Cyprus pounds, i.e., it would collect 200,000 Cyprus pounds in all.

The paper says further that the government knew the plane was to carry in all 360 tons of arms spares and equipment worth 28 million dollars. It is now known if the money agreed has been paid to the Cyprus Government by the pilot who was among the crew killed when the plane crashed, it says.

An official statement from the public information office said the allegations are "totally unfounded" and that the pilot only paid the amount prescribed by the regulations namely 65 Cyprus pounds and 100 mils for each landing it effected. "Such unfounded publications cause damage to the Cyprus Republic, tend to disturb relations with friendly countries, and harm Cyprus' international position," the statement said.

Rolandhis Statement

NC311118 Nicosia CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 31 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Following last week's world scoop by the CYPRUS WEEKLY that Larnaca Airport was being used as a transit point for gunrunning between Israel and Iran, the Cyprus Government is taking steps to ensure such incidents do not happen again.

This was stated to the CYPRUS WEEKLY yesterday by Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis. "We will have to make sure that we are more vigilant in the future," he said.

After the publication of our story, Cyprus Government spokesman Kipros Psillidhis confirmed that an Argentine cargo plane had transited through Larnaca on July 11, 13 and 14. But the Cyprus Government could not confirm that it had been transporting weapons and other military equipment, he said.

Psillidhis said the pilot of the plane reported his cargo was 6,250 kilos of "pipes" on the first occasion and that his aircraft was flying empty on the subsequent two.

The spokesman, as well as Cyprus civil aviation officials, explained that it is normal practise to accept the declarations made by an aircraft captain about his cargo when they request to transit through Larnaca for refuelling. There is no physical verification of these reports unless the government receives information that the captain's report is false, or if there are other suspicious circumstances, these officials said.

Rolandhis agreed that the very fact the Argentinian plane was flying from Israel to Iran, a country at war with Iraq, and a country technically at war with Israel--as well as Iran's own publicly-proclaimed enmity toward the Jewish state with which it does not maintain diplomatic relations--should have raised doubts as to the accuracy of the captain's report.

"We want to avoid becoming involved in such matters, or to allow the impression to be created that we are encouraging gunrunning," Rolandhis said.

The foreign minister also stated that there had been no protests from Iraq about this incident. This was seen as an indication the Arab state, with which Cyprus maintains very close relations, was satisfied the Cyprus Government was in no way a party to the Argentine aircraft's gunrunning operation.

PRIME MINISTER BRIEFS JOURNALISTS ON CYPRUS ISSUE

TA301515 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 30 Jul 81

[AKAJANS Correspondent Ovul Tezisler report from London on Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu's news conference there on 30 July]

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that Beitain approved and supports Turkey's view on the Cyprus issue. He also denied reports to the effect that foreign powers had reached an agreement among themselves on the solution of the Cyprus problem as soon as possible, and that a NATO base would be established in the Karpas region. Ulusu, who is in London to attend the wedding ceremony of Prince Charles and Lady Diana, talked to Turkish reporters at the Turkish Embassy this morning and briefed them on his bilateral contacts in London.

Noting the main issue discussed during his meeting with Lord Carrington, Ulusu said:

[Begin Ulusu recording] The main issue was the Cyprus issue. I expressed views on the issue which were quite satisfactory. Of course, it concerns a negotiation between the two communities. At the moment, Turkey does not interfere in the issue. A decision will be reached through negotiations between the two countries. However, we discussed with Denktas the current stage of the negotiations. We got the impression that Denktas--on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community--will exert every possible effort for a suitable solution of the problem. He will submit a comprehensive solution--and not a fragmented one--which will include the territorial, constitutional and security issues. This is a very positive step from the Turkish Cypriot viewpoint. As you know, until now, fragmented proposals were submitted. This depends on the attitude of the other side. Our observation is that the Turkish cypriot side will not be intransigent. Time is running against both communities. In other words, time is running against both the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities. Our most sincere wish is that both communities realize this fact.

I expressed these views to Lord Carrington. He showed understanding. As a matter of fact, Britain has from time to time expressed the belief that the problem should be solved as soon as possible through peaceful means. He expressed this view to me as well. At yesterday's reception, Honorable Thatcher first talked about this problem. This means that the British administration (?wishes) the solution of the Cyprus problem. The Turkish administration is sure that the Turkish Cypriot community will exert every possible effort with good will regarding the issue. We hope that an auspicious result will be achieved. Our talks with Lord Carrington [words indistinct]

[Unidentified journalist] I would like to ask you a question with your permission. The Cyprus issue is being extensively covered by the British press. There are recent reports that the superpowers, the United States, Britain, Turkey and even Greece, have reached an agreement on the Cyprus issue. How true are these reports? There are even reports that a NATO base will be established in the Karpas region. How true is this?

[Ulusu] A [word indistinct] by foreign powers is out of the question. Britain is a guarantor state. The actual problem concerns the two communities. The two communities will sit at the negotiating table and reach an agreement. However, maybe certain assumptions may be necessary for the two communities to reach an agreement. This is the essence of the negotiations. The question is the prosperity, happiness of the two communities and their coexistence within the framework of a federation. This is the question. Otherwise, this problem has nothing to do with NATO. A NATO base is out of the question. The negotiations will continue within the framework stated previously.

[Unidentified journalist] Britain also supports Turkey in the solution of the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks. Isn't that so?

[Ulusu] Yes, this is so. Britain also shares the view on the solution of these problems through negotiations between the two communities. [end recording]

SCHMIDT DISCUSSES SPAIN'S ENTRY INTO NATO, EC

LD020950 Hamburg DPA in German 0833 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Aug (DPA)--According to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, modern Soviet SS-20 missiles also represent a threat to Spain. In an interview with the Spanish news agency EFE, published by the Federal Press Office today, Schmidt said in reply to a question that "the great majority of these missiles are targeted on West Europe and, on account of their range, also represent a threat to Spain."

Concerning Spain's entry into NATO, Schmidt said that this was first and foremost a decision to be made by Spain itself and one "which we do not wish to influence at all, one way or the other." However, the Chancellor added that Madrid's entry into alliance would be "definitely a gain" for the majority of West Europe. But Schmidt says he does not believe that this will change the balance of power in East-West relations since Spain, by virtue of its contractual alliance with the United States, is already considered part of the Western security system.

Schmidt expects Spain's entry into the EC to have positive effects on European Middle East Policy. Due to its historical close relations, Spain could probably bring the EC still closer the the Arab world. The European Middle East policy, which centers on the realization of the right of self-determination by the Palestinian people and the safeguarding of Israel's right to exist within the framework of a comprehensive peace mutually agreed upon, would be given "valuable impulses," the chancellor said.

CHANCELLOR COMMENTS ON AUSTERITY DISCUSSIONS

DW301053 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1235 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Bonn correspondent Gerhardt report]

[Text] When the doors of the SPD Bundestag faction opened, Chancellor Schmidt stepped out. When asked what decisions had been made and about the reaction of the faction, he only gave a somewhat brief explanation of the potentially higher taxes we might have to pay in the form of an extra levy:

[Begin recording] The catchword of extra levy is poorly chosen. After all, what matters is not levying new taxes but fulfilling two goals: First, balancing the federal budget, if possible on a level of DM240 dr DM241 billion; second, not letting the borrowing requirements for that purpose exceed DM26.5 billion.

This means that austerity is indicated to protect the credit markets and the interest rates in Germany. After all, the high interest level is one of the principle reasons for the currently recessive development. Interest rates must go down. This can be attained only if all levels of government--the laender, the communities and also the Federal Government--do less borrowing. This is the purpose of the austerity action.

There is no sense in achieving austerity by inventing a new tax, the extra levy. This extra levy would have an entirely different purpose. If it is introduced, it will be valid only for a limited number of years, for a few years, to provide financial stimulus for employment and investments. This whole thing makes sense only in this connection.

I will not place my signature on any special levy which would be aimed at, say, filling gaps in the budget. I will not be a party to anything of this sort. But neither has this intention been introduced in the negotiations. [end recording]

FRG FIRM DENIES SUPPLYING MISSILES TO SYRIA

NC021342 Paris AFP in English 1330 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Aug (AFP)--A spokesman for the West German firm Otrag today denied that the company has signed a contract with the Syrian Government to supply missiles and fuel.

Frank Wukasch, technical director, made the denial following a report in the Israeli nespaper MA'ARIV about the alleged deal. Mr Wukasch said Otrag had no military ambition and had not signed a contract with any country, not with Syria, Libya or Saudi Arabia. The first makes rockets at cheap prices and has a site in Libya where it is experimenting with a launching ramp, following its expulsion from Zaire, but Mr Wukasch said: "Otrag rockets cannot be used for military purposes."

He said rumours about a deal had been circulating for eight months, but the report made no sense and there would never be a contract of that nature. The report, he added, had been dreamed up by the Israeli secret service. He said the reason Otrag was brought into it could have been because it was testing its rockets in Libya after having to leave Zaire.

NAVAL OFFICIALS WARN OF SOVIET FLEET BUILDUP

[Text] Hamburg, 2 Aug (DPA)--The massive strengthening of the Soviet fleet in the Baltic region with some of its biggest battleships is causing increasing concern to NATO.

Senior officials in the German fleet command at Glueckburg near Flensburg see the military balance in the Baltic region being upset by this demonstration of power and the rapid expansion of amphibian units of the Warsaw Pact navies, including hovercraft. This provocative appearance, it was said over the weekend, has been exacerbated by the fact that apart from units of the Soviet Black Sea fleet, ships of the Soviet north fleet are being moved to the Baltic Sea. It seems that extensive landing maneuvers are planned for the coming months. Smaller exercises were held in April on the Polish and GDR coastlines, apparently against the background of the then rather uncertain situation in Poland.

DEFENSE MINISTER INSPECTS NUCLEAR TEST FACILITIES

Cites Larger Military Budget

LD012200 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Text] According to Defense Minister Charles Hernu who is now in Papeete, Francois Mitterrand wants the next military budget to be larger, reaching 4 percent of the gross national product. Hernu also said that the 6-month national service advocated in the common program would be dropped because it would mean increased unemployment in view of the economic situation inherited from the previous government.

Comments on Neutron Weapons

BK020218 Hong Kong AFP in English 0203 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Text] Papeete, Tahiti, 2 Aug (AFP)--It is quite possible that France will test neutron weapons, Defence Minister Charles Hernu said here today before inspecting France's nuclear test blast facilities at Mururao atoll in the South Pacific.

France has been conducting studies and research on those weapons, but the new leftist administration has not yet decided whether such arms should be "part of the French panoply," Mr Hernu said at a press conference.

He said that his government will follow past French policy of refusing to issue any information about the test blasts. "But I can tell you that when I board a plane (to leave Tahiti) in four days, the last test in the present series will be finished," he said jokingly.

The nuclear test center in Polynesia will be indispensable to France "until the others start to disarm," the minister asserted. The islanders sent thousands of protest letters when he temporarily suspended test blasts to see if security conditions were adequate, he said. The Polynesians were fully aware that the test center accounted for 30 percent of French Polynesia's income, he explained.

When asked about the new policy on arms exports, Mr Hernu said it would be indecent to sell arms to some countries. He said that a total embargo has been clamped down on French deliveries to South Africa and "on several hundred street-fighting tanks intended for Chile. As for Libya, no Mirages (fighter planes) will be delivered."

Restricts Bani-Sadr Contacts

[Text] Paris, 2 Aug (AFP)--Measures have been taken to prevent reporters from having any contact with ex-Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr and Mas'ud Rajani, leader of the leftist Iranian movement people's Mojahedin, the French Foreign Ministry announced today.

The measures, which were not divulged, were taken "out of consideration" of some 140 French citizens still in Iran, the ministry said. The ministry also reminded the two Iranians, who have been in the country since Wednesday, of the conditions under which they were granted political asylum.

Mr Bani-Sadr signed a statement promising to refrain from any political activity while in France, and the French Government has been miffed that he made a number of statements to reporters.

Mr Bani-Sadr was free to come and go as he wished, the ministry said.

The former president moved from his apartment in the Paris suburb to Cachan late last week to a home in Auvers-sur-Oise, in the Paris region, where it was apparently easier to impose security measures.

Sources close to Mr Bani-Sadr indicated that it was a ministry decision to prevent journalists from contacting him.

In a major interview in the London SUNDAY TIMES today, Mr Bani-Sadr indicated that once the present wave of anti-French feeling dies down in Iran, France may relent on its conditions barring all political activity. If not, Mr Bani-Sadr may go to Sweden or Austria to continue his fight against the current Islamic regime in Iran, the paper said.

Up to about 5,000 Iranians converged on the French Embassy in Tehran last week to protest against France granting the ousted president asylum following his daring escape.

THREE CONTRACTED GUNBOATS DELIVERED TO IRAN

NC021917 Paris AFP in English 1914 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 2 Aug (AFP)--Three French-built gunboats ordered by Tehran in 1974 under the shah left France yesterday for Iran, a Defense Ministry communique announced today.

The three vessels, of the Combattante-III type, were delivered under the new Socialist government's policy of fulfilling existing international contracts, the communique said.

The original French-Iranian gunboat contract was for the construction of 12 such vessels by the Amiot shipyards of Cherbourg, Normandy.

Six units were delivered prior to Iran's Islamic revolution in 1979 and three more in the course of that year. The last three units had sat in Cherbourg harbor for the past 18 months, blocked by a European embargo in support of the liberation of the 52 American hostages held in Tehran.

After that embargo was lifted last 25 January, no obstacle remained to delivery. Following the May election here of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, the new government make it known it would honor all contracts signed by the previous administration of conservative Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The gunboats are equipped with Ottomat missiles with a 100-km (60-mile) range. Their delivery had been preceded last July by the dispatch from Cherbourg to Iran of 37 tons of spare parts for their servicing aboard an Iranian Air Boeing 707 cargo plane.

PREMIER CITES GENERAL POLICY IMPLEMENTATIONS

[Correspondent Francois Vicart report]

[Text] Addressing the National Assembly today, Pierre Mauroy thanked the deputies for accepting an exceptional workload during the extraordinary session and gave a first account of the implementation of the pledges he made 3 weeks ago in his general policy statement. He confirmed that the reduction of working hours is proceeding along the right lines and that the fifth week of paid vacation can be generally applied. He then stressed the fact that this policy must contribute above all to the fight against unemployment. Pierre Mauroy said that the amnesty has been broad and generous, that the state security court no longer exists and that the supplementary credits to the budget now allow the implementation of social measures decided before the legislative elections. As to decentralization, the premier said that its discussion is far from finished and this has led him to call for another extraordinary session before the fall session to be convened on 8 September. The debate on the abolition of the death penalty also will take place in September. Pierre Mauroy will present a strict budget in the fall, a very active budget for the expansion of economic activity and for the fight against unemployment. Discussions on nationalization, on the new statute for radio and television and on energy policy also will be held. As you see, parliament will have plenty to do and the premier is already envisaging a third extraordinary session for March.

LE MONDE: MITTERRAND PLANS 'AUSTERITY BUDGET'

PM311340 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jul 81 pp 1, 22

[Paul Fabra report: "Mr Mitterrand Calls for Austerity Budget"]

[Excerpt] It is as if the new government had reserved the pleasant measures for the first weeks of its administration (and before the parliamentary elections). In addition to the increase in the minimum wage (10 percent), the government at that time announced a one or two-stage increase in the most important social benefits (family allowances, rent allowances, minimum old age pension and so forth). A policy was being formulated which was intended to be moderate and reasonable, which was likely to encourage consumption and which was expected to produce a recovery in economic activity, although no figure was set--out of prudence. The head of state is now speaking a considerably different language on his return from Ottawa.

At the cabinet meeting on Wednesday, at which the 1982 finance bill was discussed, Mitterrand launched an undisguised call for austerity. While it is true that next year's budget should mark the French people's "new political orientations," the resulting effort in public finances "presupposes," the head of state added, "that other legitimate aspirations will have to wait for a while."

Regarding investments, there will be a large increase in the credits allocated to research (they had been increased by more than 20 percent in the last Barre budget) while two categories of measures for direct aid to industry will be taken; probable continuation of the previous government's decision to deduct 10 percent of investment spending from taxable profits and, above all, a very substantial increase in the economic and social development fund's various credits in the form of subsidies or low rate loans, according to the individual case. It should be noted that the tax deduction which was expected to produce such marked effects will probably not prevent a new drop in the volume of investment in 1981.

Regarding additional jobs in the civil service, the aim is apparently to create around 50,000 new jobs in addition to the 54,000 opened up by the July 1981 finance bill. Mitterrand had promised to create 210,000 public jobs. There will, therefore, still be a large margin for the following financial years. "Account must be taken of the Civil Service Department's real ability to absorb new staff," the Elysee is saying, pointing out that these figures represent a change of course from the very restrictive policy previously followed.

As for the "defense of the standard of living," which the head of state discussed, the Elysee is saying that this expression must be taken in the strict sense, notably as regard civil servants' wages. Regarding wages, the "legitimate aspiration" will, therefore, have to "wait for a while."

From the fiscal viewpoint, there will be two innovations, as is known: the wealth tax, whose "levels should not be punitive" as has been confirmed (which nonetheless leaves plenty of room to maneuver), and setting a ceiling on tax relief for dependents. Apparently, there is to be no increase in the income tax scale but the progressive increases will very probably be made worse by an unequal, and in any case incomplete, adjustment for inflation.

In all, the government would like to limit the budget deficit to 90 billion, in other words 2.5 percent of the national product--a percentage which strikes it as acceptable but which has no significance in itself. The main thing is to know how it will be financed.

MAUROY DISCUSSES COOPERATION WITH GABON PRESIDENT

AB011502 Paris AFP in French 1102 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 1 Aug (AFP)--Pierre Mauroy, the French premier, asserted in Paris on Saturday at the end of a 45-minute meeting with President Omar Bongo of Gabon that France would like to step up cooperation with Gabon.

According to Mauroy, who was at the Gabon Embassy, the meeting was very cordial, very friendly. I told President Bongo that we would increase our cooperation with Gabon. We examined economic problems, Mauroy continued, and I had the opportunity to congratulate President Bongo and his government for the rather outstanding economic recovery his country has made and also to tell him that we would like to help Gabon financially in this regard.

After saying that he and thr Gabonese head of state examined several projects including the completion of the second phase of the trans-Gabonese railway and various industries, Mauroy stressed that the meeting took place in an excellent atmosphere. We will have the opportunity to meet again, he added. I believe it is important to examine our problems in this manner, especially our economic problems, in order to increase cooperation and development.

President Bongo will leave Paris on Sunday morning for Libreville at the end of his 3-day working visit.

RED BRIGADES ROB OFFICE, ANNOUNCE EXECUTION

Raid on Telephone Building

[Excerpt] Rome, 31 Jul (ANSA)—The Red Brigades held up the Italian state telephone network's central office in Rome this morning, getting away with an estimated 750 million lire (about 625,000 dollars) after penetrating the building with a truck painted to look like one of the company's own.

The raid also involved a shoot-out in which two clerks employed by the company (SIP), a watchman, and a passerby were slightly injured. Respousibility for the robbery was claimed by an anonymous telephone call later.

The office is situated at Rome's Piazzale Ostiense in a rundown, low-income zone out of the city center. The SIP building is a handsome structure in glass and cement.

Once inside the building, the ten or so urban guerrillas opened fire before snatching the money. They fled aboard several automobiles, their retreat covered by at least three back-up vehicles and a scattering of three-pronged nails to puncture the tires of would-be pursuers.

Almost at the same time of the raid, Rome's central police station received a telephone call announcing a bomb at the state electricity board, ENEL, near the SIP office. The bomb was in fact found and defused. Police sources said the charge was probably only intended as a diversion.

Inside the small truck used to get into the SIP building, investigators found a Red Brigades banner with their traditional five-pointed star.

This is not the first time that the urban guerrilla organisation has used armed robbery to finance its operations, but its competitors have used this technique more often.

Messages on Peci, Fiat

AU311936 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 31 Jul (ANSA)—The Red Brigades announced today that they were going to go through with the "execution" of Roberto Peci, their hostage since June 10. They also announced that the target of their next guerrilla offensive will be the Fiat Industrial Group in Turin.

Two documents from the Red Brigades were picked up by a reporter in a trash can in Naples on a tip-off from an anonymous caller.

Peci, the brother of a renegade guerrilla who turned states evidence after his arrest, was sentenced to die by his kidnappers after being "tried" and found guilty of "police spying" in what they call a "peoples trial." "We are carrying out the death sentence against Roberto Peci because he is a traitor and traitors have to be destroyed," the message about Peci said.

"The execution of Roberto Peci is an essential and irrevocable action on the rough path towards building a fighting communist party."

The message, full of invective against "sell-outs" from the guerrilla movement, appeared to mark the end of the kidnappers hesitation during recent weeks.

Peci has been sentenced to death twice, was granted "revolutionary clemency" in between, and his fate hung for awhile on the verdicts solicited from various factions of the revolutionary "proletarian movement."

The kidnappers have received a few responses, mostly for clemency, and asked today that other groups hurry up with their verdicts.

The second document on the Fiat offensive was entitled, "Spring-Summer Campaign 1981," giving the impression that the organization's "intensive concentration" on the auto giants companies was about to start. It was signed by both the Red Brigades "prison front" and their "Naples column", while the one about Peci was just signed by the "prison front".

Peci was the fourth kidnap victim of the spring. One, Montedison executive Giuseppe Taliercio, was slain, and the other two, Campania Regional Councilman Ciro Cirillo and Alfa Romeo executive Renzo Sandrucci, were released.

FOREIGN MINISTER SCHEDULED TO VISIT SOMALIA

AU011529 Rome ANSA in English 1501 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 1 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo is slated to arrive in Mogadishu Tuesday after intermediate stopovers in Cairo, Jidda and Djibouti to begin two days of consultations with Somali President Mohammed Siad Barre, diplometic chief Jama Barre and other Somali Government officials.

The upcoming trip follows a visit the Italian foreign minister conducted in Addis Ababa in April in a bid to broaden Italian and European relations with Ethiopia.

Though Colombo has consistently rejected a label of mediator in the Ethiopian-Somali conflict over the Ogaden territory and Italy has maintained a stance of absolute neutrality towards the dispute, the Italian Government's desire for a negotiated settlement in line with the procedures mapped out by the Organization of African Unity represents a link between the foreign minster's visits to the neighboring states.

In the political portions of his consultations in the Somali capital, Colombo is expected to push for a peaceful solution to the long-standing conflict which will allow the two Horn of Africa nations to channel their resources into development programs and open the way for a settlement of the enormous problems connected to refugees in the Ogaden.

Much of the foreign minister's talks in Mogadishu will be taken up by economic issues and the Italian Government project to map out technological assistance for a three-year period. One of the specific areas which might be defined during Colombo's visit is that of Italian participation and financing for a dam at Bardera for the irrigation of the Juba valley, the fertile southern lands watered by the Juba River where forty percent of the Somali people live.

Colombo and the Somali Government officials are also expected to review the entire picture of Italian technical assistance. For the current year, Italy has allocated 50 billion lire, about 45 million dollars, for technical aid for Somalia.

L'UNITA COMMENTS ON ZAGLADIN VIEW OF CP UNITY

PM310950 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 25 Jul 81 p 13

[Text] In a PRAVDA article reported Thursday by TASS, Vadim Zagladin again suggested the need to close ranks, basing it on the following two arguments: first, that one precondition of the peace struggle is the strengthening of the socialist camp and that it therefore demands a specific choice of alignment from all communist parties; and, second, that parties unconvinced that international communist conferences are the best way to extend the alignment of peace and progress to forces of differing political and social approaches are not working for peace.

These are not new arguments. However, one is struck in the Soviet exponent's assessment by the logic that prompts him to state that "certain comrades" who pursue a line different from the one that he presents and who regard the socialist countries' specific experiences critically have fallen into the hands of imperialist propaganda and are, therefore, harming the peace struggle. It would be enough to remind Zagladin that criticisms much more virulent than ours have been heard from the Soviets themselves at the 20th congress and a few days ago from the Polish United Workers Party congress. Was this imperialist propaganda?

This way of thinking and debating extends well beyond an open comparison of political stances, which is what we want, while naturally acknowledging the Soviet comrades' right to criticize our positions. However, it is quite another matter to establish a precise demarcation line based on a Manichean view of the world. This is what is unacceptable about Zagladin's article--the definition of a limit beyond which communists who think differently from the CPSU fall into the hands of imperialist propaganda. Are those who think differently from the CPSU on the intervention in Afghanistan playing into the imperialists' hands? What would Zagladin say if in the future the CPSU were to acknowledge that it was a mistake? History is full of self-criticisms and radical turnabouts of this kind: the latest instance is Poland. So let Zagladin permit us to form our own assessments and even to make our own mistakes.

Be that as it may, clearly it is difficult to conduct a discussion in a context such as the one outlined by the Soviet exponent, which consists more of accusations than of arguments. In fact, the common ground--the only such ground among communists--is a serious reflection on the real movements that are changing the world, seeking all possible ways of supporting the progressive forces and the cause of peace and of directing masses of all leanings toward objectives of arms reduction and international cooperation.

Appeals for a closing of ranks around a bloc do not act in this direction. We believe that, in the present specific historical conditions, they hinder a peace movement which, in view of the accumulation of such dangerous arsenals, can and must aim to reduce military balances to the lowest possible level by means of negotiations. Any other way would only introduce elements of division among the peace-loving and progressive forces and would raise barriers between forces of differing approaches, from communists to socialists and Catholics.

A return to the practice, if not the theory, of the communist movement as some kind of mega-party with a political and organizational center would mean the same thing. Therefore, we do not consider opportune the continuous proposal of international conferences which every communist party should feel dutybound to attend. We are in principle not at all opposed to meetings of various kinds, whether bilateral or among several parties (we ourselves have suggested them), but we remain convinced that every party has a duty and a right to assess their purpose and opportuneness, to formulate different proposals and to decide independently whether to attend them, without risking suspicions of heresy.

In any case, it has been seen that no result was achieved at the latest meeting of this kind in Paris last year, which was not attended by several communist parties, including the PCI. That conference could not achieve positive results precisely because the logic behind it was a bloc alignment which prompted participants to center their attention more on one single side's missiles than on negotiations. Such sterile and desultory approaches can only lead--and did lead--to a negative outcome.

FORMER MINISTER CALLS FOR BALSEMAO'S OUSTER

LD022322 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Eurico de Melo, who was minister of internal administration in the Sa Carneiro government, said today that the current government must be replaced and that the solution to the government's problems lies not in a reshuffle but in the departure of Pinto Balsemao and his team.

[Begin recording] I believe that the reorganization of the government must essentially entail the replacement of the prime minister. Any partial solution by replacing a few ministers would give the impression that the basic reason for the crisis lay with the ministers replaced and not with those who would remain. I was very surprised by his excellency the prime minister's recent statements in Mirandela. Because I am not afraid to answer for my attitudes and will not tolerate anyone's threats, I have decided to take a very clear stand. I believe that right now the resolution of the government's problems and of the problems of the parties in the Democratic Alliance calls for an alternative to the present government, above all, an alternative to the present prime minister. MPLA AIDE ARRIVES IN LISBON AT PCP INVITATION

[Text] "Relations between the Portuguese and Angolan presidents are very good," Lucio Lara of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola Central Committee said on arriving in Lisbon at the PCP Central Committee's invitation. Lara also maintained that relations between our country and Angola "are outwardly normal, but there seem to be forces which are opposed to their complete normalization."

Lucio Lara also referred to South Africa's attacks on Angola, asserting that "since the beginning of the Reagan administration the South Africans have begun as escalation of greater destruction, encouraged by the U.S. President's statements."

According to statements made to ANOP by the MPLA Central Committee member, "the increasing violence of South Africa's attacks is due soley to the U.S. administration's encouragement," since, he said, "the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola is a purely South African force and has no support on Angolan territory."

Lara also established a relationship between the increase in South African attacks and the difficulties currently existing in the normalization of Portuguese-Angolan relations. However, he acknowledged that interenterprise cooperation between the two countries has been increased and stated that Angolan authorities are not hostile to Portuguese business enterprises "and are interested in facilitating it, as far as possible."

The MPLA leader also referred to the situation of Luis Cabral, former president of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, and expressed concern over his fate. "The MPLA's concern over Luis Cabral's fate was demonstrated at a meeting held in Angola shortly after the political changes in Bissau," he said. "At that time," Lucio Lara continued, "assurances of his early release were given, but we are still waiting."

Lucio Lara's visit to Lisbon falls within the framework of the intensification of relations between the PCP and the MPLA and no contacts between the Angolan leader and other Portuguese political forces are envisaged. Lucio Lara will take part tomorrow in a friendship rally organized by the Portuguese Communists at which Alvaro Cunhal will speak.

SPANISH COMMUNIST PARTY CONCLUDES 10TH CONGRESS

Statutes Adopted

LD312018 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Luis Pintor report]

[Excerpt] The PCE congress approved new statutes at its final session today. As anticipated, both the formation of tendencies within the party and attempts to arrive at a federal structure in the PCE have been banned. The only concession made to the so-called "renewalist" sector is the provision of space in the party press for dissidents to express their opinions. Formally, however, both those belonging to the "renewalists" tendency and those in the pro-Soviet group will henceforth not be able to defend their positions that oppose the leadership outside the party confines, in public debates, in the press or in the media. Nevertheless, some party members have already announced that they are going to continue their opposition to the Carrillo leadership's policies while continuing as PCE members and otherwise accepting its discipline.

Leadership Reelected

LD010836 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Text] Early this morning, the PCE brought its tenth congress to an end. The new Central Committee contains 12 "renewalists" and has the same historical figures in its leadership: president by a unanimous vote, Dolores Ibarruri; with one abstention, as secretary-general, Santiago Carrillo.

Further Report

[Text] Madrid, 1 Aug (AFP)--Santiago Carrillo re-emerged today as the Spanish Communist Party's leader after a bitter, indecisive struggle with internal factions desiring a more open structure and broader representation in the leadership.

Mr Carrillo, who has been firmly in the camp of independent--even anti-Soviet--Eurocommunism, was beset with criticism over his "Stalinist" methods in internal matters. But Mr Carrillo maintained that the Spanish party could disintegrate without his brand of "democratic centralism."

Reformers at the party congress, ending today, pressed unsuccessfully for a system of proportional representation that would have put delegates from the party's various factions on the Central Committee. But they achieved a victory in their demands for more varied viewpoints in Communist publications. The debates at several points threatened to erupt into fist fights.

The Eurocommunist orientation of the party was not an issue, as both the reformers and Mr Carrillo are firmly committed to this.

Pro-Soviet delegates to the congress, mostly from Catalonia, represented just five percent of the 1,214 delegates and did not gain a single seat on the 104-member Central Committee. The party's Central Committee was finally composed early today after six hours of debate in an extremely tense climate.

Santiago Carrillo Junior, son of the secretary general, was installed as a member, as were 15 "reformers."

One "reformer" said that bitter discussions had shown that "the era of unanimity within the party is over." The challenge to Mr Carrillo's governing style and structures led him to threaten the dissidents with expulsion last Tuesday. Observers said the internecine disputes are likely to continue.

But the party in fact has achieved wide agreement on policy matters, reaffirming its criticism of Soviet foreign policy and the lack of personal freedom in the Eastern bloc. It also reiterated its opposition to Spain's entry into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which purportedly "would upset the military balance in Europe."

The party also said that the risk of a coup d'etat was not over for Spain, alluding to the abortive take-over of the Spanish parliament by rebel Civil Guards last February.

The Communist policy of cooperating with other more conservative political forces was upheld, and the party came out in favor of a centrist-socialist coalition that would rely on Communist Party support while excluding it from the government.

Some observers saw this alliance as crucial for Spain's continuing transition to democracy, and the Catholic newspaper YA saw a key role for Mr Carrillo in this. YA expressed the fear that the Mr Carrillo's fall from power would have endangered the policy of collaboration.

But several other papers maintained that Mr Carrillo's future as leader is dim. He has held the post for 21 years.

The party has lost 100,000 members since 1977, and the reformers believe that a liberalization of its structure would bring many back.

MITSOTAKIS ON VISIT, ATTENDS MAKARIOS MEMORIAL

Rolandhis Previews Visit

NC302046 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 30 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' official visit to Cyprus will constitute a significant Greek presence in Cyrpus during difficult times. In a statement to the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY on the occasion of Mitsotakis' visit to Cyprus tomorrow, Rolandhis added that the Greek foreign minister symbolically brings Greece with him and reminds us that the Cyprus problem is not only a Cypriot issue but an issue of all Hellenism.

It has been promised, Rolandhis' statement continues, that on the day Mitsotakis departs [from Cyprus], that is 5 August, the Turkish proposals, which have been awaited for many months, will be submitted at the negotiations table. I express the hope, Rolandhis added, that these proposals will be reasonable and positive, so that the dialogue can emerge from its quandry and a new era will dawn for all Cypriot inhabitants—Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots.

Finally, Rolandhis mentions that all possibilities will be discussed and examined with Mitsotakis. We are quite ready, he stresses, to extend a hand of friendship to the Turkish coinhabitants, provided we see them return the gesture sincerely and with the desire that we all cooperate for the creation of acommon prosperous country.

Mitsotakis' Arrival Statement

NC311932 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis arrived this evening in Cyprus on an official visit at the invitation of Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

Speaking on arrival at Larnaca, Mitsotakis stressed that the meaning of his visit is to note through his presence in Cyprus—actually during a decisive moment—Greece's determination support for Cyprus. The people and the democratic Greek Government, he declared, support and will help with all their forces the struggle waged by Cypriot Hellenism. I want, Mitsotakis added, to say to all Greek Cypriots that your problem is our problem and your struggle our struggle. Then the Greek minister mentioned that the inter-Cypriot talks are entering a stage which perhaps may prove to be decisive. Thus far, he added, the dialogue has not produced results, because of the Turkish Cypriot side's position. Currently, however, a hope appears--according to official assurances--that proposals on the territorial aspect will be submitted that will allow the dialogue to enter a substantive phase.

Mitsotakis said he wants this to happen. However, he stressed that in case this doesn't happen, it will not be possible to perpetuate a dialogue without an object, and the responsibility for the failure will be borne by the Turkish side. Mitsotakis recalled that he came to Cyprus 4 years ago to attend Ethnarch Makarios' funeral and paid tribute to Makarios' memory and to the memory of the heroes and martyrs of the Cypriot struggles.

Welcoming Mitsotakis, Foreign Minister Rolandhis stressed that Mitsotakis' presence at this time stresses once more Greece's support for Cyprus, strengthens our positions and hardens our will to struggle courageously until our struggle is fully vindicated. Rolandhis said that Mitsotakis' visit is essentially the first official visit by a Greek foreign minister to Cyprus. Precisely the fact, he added that we are presently expecting new proposals by the Turkish Cypriots on the national issue gives special significance and importance to Mitsotakis' visit. Mitsotakis was also received by Greek Ambassador Zakharakis, Cypriot Ambassador in Athens Khatzimiltis and other officials.

Interview on Arrival

[Interview with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis on arrival in Cyprus 31 July]

[Text] Question: Mr Minister, can you tell us what you will discuss at the meeting you will attend?

Answer: As you know, we are in constant contact with the Cyprus Government on the course and prospects of the Cyprus issue. In a way, my visit is a reciprocal one to the many visits paid to Athens by President Kiprianou and Mr Rolandhis. Here we will do what we have done in Athens, that is, we will review the issues, we will exchange views and we will discuss the future course to be followed. These are the basic aims of the talks here in Cyprus.

Question: At a news conference a few days ago, Turkish Prime Minister Ulusu said that he did not play any role in the possible submittion of Turkish proposals. Owing to the fact that you have met with the Turkish foreign minister, what are your comments on this statement?

Answer: I did not know about this statement, nor can I confirm it. What I will say is that in all the meetings that I have had with my Turkish counterparts, I have always stressed the need to find a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus issue. When I say this, I mean a Cyprus that will be united, nonaligned and independent that can set is own course and in which all the people can live in harmony and happiness.

Question: Mr Minister, do you have any comments on the Turkish proposals leaked through the Turkish press?

Answer: I have no comments because I do not know if there are proposals, or rather, I know that there are no proposals yet. I hope that the proposals will be submitted on 12 August. They will not be delayed much longer. I cannot comment now on the proposals.

Meeting With Kiprianou

NC011302 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who is on an official visit to Cyprus, this morning visited President Kiprianou at the Presidential Palace accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zacharakis, Foreign Ministry Director General Pelayias and Cypriot Ambassador to Athens Khatzimiltis. Afterward, President Kiprianou had a private meeting with the Greek foreign minister.

A broad meeting then followed at the Presidential Palace on the Cyprus issue attended by President Kiprianou, Foreign Minister Rolandhis and Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. The Cypriot side was represented by: Mr Ioannidhis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks; his advisers at the talks Mr Triandafilidhis and Mrs Souliotou; the Foreign Ministry director general; and the Cypriot ambassador to Athens.

The Greek side was represented by: the Greek ambassador to Nicosia; the director of the Political Office of the Foreign Ministry; Ambassador Sekeris; Ambassador Serpos, who is an expert on Cyprus issues; Counselor Nezaritis; and the counselor to the Greek Embassy in Cyprus, Mr Sandis.

In a statement following the approximately 2-hour long meeting, President Kiprianou described the meeting as very useful from every aspect. Mr Kiprianou said that the Cyprus issue was discussed in view of the fact that, as has been promised, very soon the Turkish side will submit proposals on the territorial aspect of the issue. He added: At the meeting we exchanged views, information and assessments, and we reached certain conclusions regarding the further handling of the issue. The president remarked that since the Turkish proposals are not yet known, it is impossible to express views on them. President Kiprianou reiterated that the contacts with Mr Mitsotakis are within the context of the close cooperation between Greece and Cyprus. We are determined, he stressed, to safeguard this cooperation, because it is one of the necessary prerequisites for the success of the struggle of the Cypriot people for freedom and vindication.

Mr Mitsotakis confirmed what President Kiprianou said and stressed that the discussions were very friendly, sincere and useful and within the framework of the continuous contacts that exist around the handling of the national issue. The Greek minister said that the meeting dealt with a review and assessment of the Cyprus issue and that it reached certain conclusions on the tactics that should be followed when the yet unknown Turkish proposals are submitted. When the proposals are submitted, he added, the Cyprus Government will examine them and will make the necessary decisions.

Following the meeting at the Presidential Palace, Mr Mitsotakis visited the Foreign Ministry, where he met with Mr Rolandhis. Under the leadership of the two ministers, talks between the to delegations then followed.

Mr Mitsotakis is now attending a luncheon that Mr Kiprianou is giving in his honor at the Presidential Palace. This afternoon, Mr Mitsotakis will lay a wreath at the prison cemetery and at the military cemetery at Makedhonitisa. Later, Mr Mitsotakis will visit House Speaker Ladhas and will have private meetings with representatives of organizations, committees and personalities.

Kiprianou, Mitsotakis Luncheon Speeches

NC011856 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou has stated that the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, on which the Turkish side is expected to submit proposals, constitutes one of the most serious aspects of the Cyprus problem and that this has considerable affect on the problem's solution. Addressing Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis during a luncheon that was given in Mitsotakis' honor, Kiprianou expressed the hope that the Turkish side will keep the promises it has given to various sides and will indeed submit constructive and substantive proposals, specifically on the territorial aspect.

The president said that regardless of the time that will be needed, our efforts will continue to the end, which is the guarantee of all necessary prerequisites for the survival of the country and the people and the restoration of their rights. In this difficult struggle, he added, we have Greece as our main support and the Cypriot people are grateful for Hellenism's support of their difficult struggle. After mentioning that the Cyprus problem is currently passing through a delicate and critical stage, which possibly may determine future developments, Kiprianou stressed that, for us here in Cyprus, it is a fact that all of Greece—the government, political world and the people—supports our difficult struggle for survival and freedom. He also said that Mitsotakis' visit to Cyprus testifies to Greece's intense interest in Cyprus' struggle for vandication and freedom.

In reply, Mitsotakis said that united and indivisible Greece wholeheartedly supports Cyprus Hellenism's struggle. We have, stressed Mitsotakis, placed the Cyprus issue on the front line of national priorities.

My visit to Cyprus, he added, has this precise purpose--to stress that currently, more than ever, we stand by you. Mitsotakis agreed with President Kiprianou's statement that the Cyprus issue is entering a critical, determinative and decisive stage. Currently, he continued, more than ever before, unity is needed, among Greeks, especially among Greeks in Cyprus, Greeks in Greece and Greeks everywhere. I hope, Mitsotakis said, that the Turks will keep their promises and will submit concrete and realistic proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, something that is a prerequisite for breaking the dialogue's deadlock. If the dialogue fails, he said, then the responsibilities will be even heavier and the decisions that will be made perhaps more difficult. What I want to express as a hope and a need, Mitsotakis concluded, is that with Greece's support Cyprus should continue to walk decisively down the correct road, the only road that will lead to vindication.

The luncheon was attended by the president of the House of Representatives, members of the Council of Ministers, the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the intercommunal talks, the Greek ambassador in Nicosia and the Cypriot ambassador in Athens, members of Mitsotakis' entourage, the chief of the National Guard, the advisers to the talks, the deputy minister to the president's office, the director general of the Foreign Ministry, the chief of the police, the commander of the Greek Army contingent in Cyprus and other officials.

Tonight, Mitsotakis will meet with UN Secretary General Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi at the house of Greek Ambassador to Cyprus Zakharakis. The meeting is taking place at Gobbi's request.

Rolandhis, Mitsotakis Dinner Speeches

NC020742 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0415 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Text] Last night, Foreign Minister Rolandhis held a dinner reception in honor of Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis.

Speaking during the dinner, Mr Rolandhis said that Mr Mitsotakis' official visit to Cyprus continues a tradition of 3 and 1/2 years of Greece-Cyprus ties and that Cyprus has been enlightened with the Greek spirit and civilization for centuries. The Cypriot people, Mr Rolandhis said, receive and greet Mr Mitsotakis and isolate those sacrilegious people who have tried to strike at them and their national cause who form a sad and a very small minority. Mr Rolandhis praised the Greek support and promotion of the Cyprus issue by the Greek Government and by Mr Mitsotakis as the first issue in Greek foreign policy. He also referred to the crucial days that we are going through and expressed the hope that the Turkish Cypriots will cooperate for the creation of a joint, independent and sovereign fatherland for Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

In reply, Mr Mitsotakis said that his arrival in Cyprus stressed once again Greece's support, which will continue until the Cypriot people's vindication. He again reassured that the Cyprus issue is the first issue in Greece's foreign policy. Mr Mitsotakis also referred to the latest developments in the Cyprus issue and said that Greece and Cyprus will jointly face the coming developments of the next few days and weeks. The Greek foreign minister expressed hope for the vindication of the Cypriot people's struggle and stressed that the whole of Greece will always be at Cyprus' side.

Present at the dinner were the House president, members of the Council of Ministers, the Greek Cypriot interlocutor, the Greek ambassador to Nicosia and Mitsotakis' entourage, other member of the diplomatic corps, the president and members of the Supreme Court, party representatives and other officials.

Mitsotakis Speech at Memorial

NC021432 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0820 GMT 2 Aug 81

[Speech by Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis at a memorial service for former President of Cyprus and Archbishop Makarios at Kykkos Monastery on 2 August--live]

[Excerpts] I feel profound emotion at this devout gathering here in the Monastry of Kykkos where all of us have gathered like a family, brothers from Cyprus and brothers from Greece, to remember a great person and pay a minimum tribute to the memory of the unforgettable Makarios 4 years after his death. Four years have already passed from the moment these imposing mountains, the cradle and tomb of Makarious, embraced his body.

Like every year, this year too we have gathered again, I as the representative of the Greek state, to commemorate the memorial service of the always remembered Makarios. However, the best memorial service is to respect his memory, respect the heritage he has bequeathed. Today, I, a humble worshipper at his tomb, have come here to honor his memory and to be able to assure the Cyprus people, as I did when I first arrived at Larnaca airport, that all Greek people and their democratic government are supporting their struggle. Your struggle is our own struggle and your problem is our own problem. Hellenism and official Greece will not ignore the debt they have toward the Greek Cypriot people, and for this reason the help we are determined to give will be constant, great, without calculations and reservations. [applause]

Your beatitude, we shall support your course without reservation. I would also like to add that it is certain that after Makarios died he left behind him a great gap. I would say in fact that he died by tragic coincidence at the moment when he was needed more than ever. It is not enough to say that we follow his advice. In order to be able to fill the great gap that he has left, we need true unity, both in Cyprus and in the broader field of Hellenism, because all of us are one thing, unity with Greece and unity with Greeks living abroad. [applause]

Unity cannot be an empty word, it should have substance and content. Within the framework of the free Cyprus Republic, through the legal procedures and through a democratic dialogue which thank God is taking place in Cyprus which currently is an exceptionally democratic state, decisions should be made for handling the Cyprus problem because distance should not be an issue when it concerns goals, and on its part the Greek Government is ready to give its opinion and support, something we have never evaded and will not evade in the future.

Your beatitude, at this moment I want to assure you that Cyprus may trust Greece. We shall never abandon you unaided, and we shall never forget to discharge our duty toward the Greek Cypriots. [applause] At this formal moment, I consider it my duty to make this declaration clearly and categorically. We feel this to be our obligation toward Greek Cypriots, and feel this as our obligation to the memory of the unforgettable Makarios.

Kiprianou Speech at Memorial

[Speech by President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou at a memorial service for former President of Cyprus and Archbishop Makarios at the Kykkos Monastery on 2 August--live]

[Excerpts] This year too we have gathered under this church's sacred cupola to pay tribute to the great leader we lost 4 years ago. We have gathered again this year to honor his memory and to be re-christened in the springs of his teachings and example. We have gathered here today not to remember him, because we always remember him, but to honor his memory.

After a short stay in exile, Makarios returned to Cyprus at the head of his people to continue the struggle for an honest solution of the Cyprus problem that would restore freedom, protect democracy and restore the people's rights. On returning, Makarios found 40 percent of Cyprus under foreign occupation; he found one-third of our population to be refugees, thousands of missing persons and thousands of people in enclaves; and he found destruction. But through superhuman efforts and careful planning he tried to create from the debris that which we currently see in Cyprus' free areas. At the same time, he continued the struggle for an honest solution of the Cyprus problem. Makarios advanced, and he made various decisions. Among the various decisions on which he supported his policy were included the UN resolutions, which most certainly even today are the basis of our policy, which now also includes the summit agreements, the one Makarios held and the other of 19 May 1979.

Within this framework, which has all the elements of an honest solution, we are all asked to work honestly, consistently and responsibility, because when the country is passing through such critical moments there should not be division and conflicting aims and goals. There may be differing views regarding the manner in which the issue should be handled and there may be differing views regarding tactics, but these things existed even when Makarios was alive. However, the same goals and the same aims always existed then and now, as well as the same orientations. We have not departed even one iota from those goals. Thinking about how to implement Makarios' policy is the best possible and most effective way, a policy we are handling and continuing responsibly.

Most certainly consensus and unity are needed, and most certainly everyone should place the national interest above partisan or other criteria in a democracy that is operative in practice, something of which we are proud. There may be differences of viewpoint on all issues and there may be recriminations, disagreements and differences, but on the national issue concensus is needed. One more thing, the national issue should not be the object of any form of exploitation. Nor does anyone have the right to toy with the people's pain, but only to try to struggle for the people's vindication. We are struggling honestly and with full cognizance of our responsibilities, people and leadership, in an effort to guarantee those things which Makarios dreamed of and made his goal. It will be the best memorial service we can offer him if today, here at his cenotaph and later at Throni, we reiterate the promise that, regardless of the difficulties we may pass through, his goals are our goals and his aims our aims, and we shall continue his struggle to its vindication, until freedom is achieved and Cyprus has attained those things it is entitled to, which all the people of the world, all free states are entitled to.

I would like to add something else, too. It is not enough to make certain ascertainments concerning some of our weaknesses. Everyone, from his position and with the means at his command, should try to remedy these weaknesses. It is not enough to make ascertainments; what is needed is to really contribute to the strengthening of our internal front and never allow the recurrence of those conditions that preceded the creation of the situation of 1974. I categorically declare that the state is quite ready and determined to strike anyone who attempts to disturb democracy, whose vigilant guardian and great banner bearer Makarios was.

In my opinion, at this period we are passing through a critical stage of determinative significance for future developments. I sincerely believe that the dialogue has been correctly conducted and is still being correctly conducted, and that we should correctly exhaust it to see if there are margins for an honest solution of the Cyprus problem. Of course, if there are none, then most certainly we shall not continue with a sterile dialogue, that is, play Turkey's game. However, what I want once again to declare is that, regardless of the procedure that is being followed, the goal remains the same--an honest solution.

A partitionist solution cannot be an honest solution. A partitionist solution cannot be a viable solution. Everyone wants and is shouting for a viable solution. Yes, a viable solution, but in order for a solution to be viable, in addition to all other things, it must guarantee the state's unity, and guaranteeing the state's unity means there should not be borders, there should not be partition, and there should be no confederation or anything else that would divide the state and the people in two. We accepted federation and we want a true federation that will function with the rights of all citizens without exception protected. There may exist developments of a determinative form in the next few days, and for this reason, I responsibly ask all to ponder their responsibilities and watch the developments prudently without resort to demagogy and defeatism because demagogy, defeatism and surrender are the worst advisers of a people who are struggling for their freedom. This is one of the great teachings of the always remembered Ethnarch Makarios.

TA NEA CRITICIZES ROLANDHIS' APPROACHES TO HAIG

NC311405 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 31 Jul 81 p 5

[From the "Positions" Column: "The Letter to Haig"]

[Text] Finally the government has accepted: Foreign Minister Rolandhis has asked his U.S. counterpart Haig that "the United States exert its influence for the success of the efforts that are being made for a just solution of the Cyprus problem."

It has been some time since various circles from the government and the president's party began to orientate themselves toward what Democratic Rally [DISI] has made--and still makes the mainstay of its policy.

Of course, if there is anyone who can solve the Cyprus issue it is the West--obviously with the United States at the head. There is no doubt whatsoever that the United States can do a lot....it has already done enough in the past. It is also greatly responsible for today's tragedy. The people remember--despite the fact that some officials pretend they forgot. It is therefore, not necessary to reiterate that even since 1964, their imperialist policy has pursued the partitioning of this country....

Therefore, the United States "can", but what is their goal? A solution contrary to the interests of the Cypriot people, a solution adapted to the need of its own strategy in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East. And the "needs" of the imperialist strategy are in no way identical with those of the Cypriot people because, simply, they aim at their subjugation.

Our people (Greeks and Turks) want a unitary, independent, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus, a Cyprus free from foreign dependency, a Cyprus for its people and democracy. What does the United States want our country for? It wants it subjugated to the West, to U.S. and NATO strategies, and as a springboard for imperialist aggressiveness against the Middle East people and the national liberation movement of the area, as an espionage center and as a stand from which to control the oilproducing countries.

Thus, Rolandhis' "invitation" to Haig for a "more active involvement in the Cyprus issue"--even though the government brings up the excuse for a just solution--unavoidably means two things:

--Either the government is not in a position to evaluate the goals of the U.S. policy;
--or knowingly it agrees with this policy's goals...

Rolandhis' "invitation" to Haig to "exert U.S. influence" involves dangers to the Cyprus issue. Because, if at this moment Rolandhis can maintain that "he asked him to exert pressure on Turkey," tomorrow it will be the Cyrpus Government's turn to sustain pressures. This country has bitter experiences from U.S. interventions, "mediations" and "arbitration" as well as envoys....

However, there is another side to the coin. The foreign minister said that "he acted on the basis of decisions adopted during the Athens conference." Where are the Cypriot politicians, political forces and parties? Have they been erased? What then is the use of a National Council and its sessions? Is it for a posteriori "briefing"

EDEK Statement

NC011156 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 1 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] With regard to Rolandhis' letter to Haig, the press office of the socialist party EDEK in a statement says that the initial effort to conceal the action and the attempts by the National Council to hide the fact and the secrecy of the political leadership increases the questions and the people's concern over the government's policy and ineptness.

The text of the socialist party EDEK's statement reads as follows:

"First the Cyprus Government pretended being ignorant and then it confessed that it wrote to the U.S. secretary of state to ask for his intervention in the Cyprus issue.

"The government says that it asked Mr Haig to exert pressure on Turkey. Why did it then pretend, at first, that it was ignorant of the fact? And why did it make this move to the United States only? Why did it not also ask the Soviet Union, the European countries or the nonaligned countries, to which Cyprus belongs?

"When today the government ignores these countries and by choice asks the United States only to exert pressure on Turkey, how will it ask tomorrow for their support at the United Nations? Perhaps it has decided not to go again to the United Nations. Does the internationalization of the Cyprus issue end at the United States?

"With whatever good intentions it may have had, the Cyprus Government's action cannot be characterized as anything but scandalous and damaging. The initial effort to conceal the action raises many questions. But the continued attempts by the National Council to hide the facts and the secrecy of the political leadership increases the questions and the people's concern over the government's policy and inability."

CONTINUATION OF NEW DEMOCRACY PROGRAM STATEMENT

Part Two

NC311845 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 21 Jul 81 p 8

[Part two of New Democracy government program to be implemented in the next 4 years--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 2. SMALL-MEDIUM ENTERPRISES--CRAFTSMANSHIP

The New Democracy government has always recognized and continues to single out the particular importance of small- and medium-sized enterprises and self-employed people. The development of this significant and vital section of our country's economy, which employs about 400,000 people (in units employing up to 50 persons) of whom about 170,000 persons are self-employed, will be assisted because its existence constitutes the best guarantee for free economy.

The New Democracy efforts will tend to create a comfortable "environment" in which the small- and medium-sized enterprises will be able to exist, "live" and--if they desire--grow. In order to accomplish all this, the government plans, among other things, to abolish red-tape formalities such as most of (almost all) the licenses issued by the Ministry of Industry as well as the well-known commissions for craftsmanship loans.

At the same time, plans have been prepared for a special organization to grant loans to craftsmen and for new, important incentives (taxation, and so forth) for the amalgamation of small- and medium-sized enterprises. It is better, however, to see in detail what has been and will be done so that the small- and medium-sized enterprises may prosper and play a leading role--the role they deserve--in the efforts for economic development.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE

In the 6-year period that has elapsed:

--The 1421/66 decision of the monetary committee was amended and there was an improvement in the terms, prerequisites and amounts for the financing of craftsmanship. Specifically:
--The total amount of financing increased from 12 to 40 million drachmas, of which 30 million were from the "special fund" and 10 million from bank reserves.

--Greek state guarantees for loans to craftsmen were established as follows:

--For up to 1 million drachmas, 100 percent guarantee.
--For up to 2 million drachmas, 80 percent guarantee.
--For up to 30 million drachmas, 60 percent guarantee.

Also, for the amount up to 10 million drachmas there is a Greek state guarantee without the need for collateral or other security.

--The direct granting of loans from banks to the craftsmen increased from 600,000 to 3 million drachmas without the mediation of the committee for credits to craftsmen.
--The list of craftsmen entitled to be financed was completed with a considerable number of new activities in their trade.
--The Greek state guarantee for inventors increased by 100 percent, from 1 to 2 million drachmas.

It is worth noting that almost nowhere else is the financing of small- and medium-sized businesses covered by such state guarantees.

--The financing of individuals was established for the construction or rearrangement of multistory craftsmanship buildings for the sole purpose of installing craftsmanship units.
--A huge craftsmanship program began which includes the construction of standardized craftsmanship buildings within the industrial areas of the Hellenic Industrial Development Bank [ETVA] as well as the distribution of small building sites from 1 to 8 donums for the self-housing of craftsmen.

The establishment and expansion of the joint venture institution was pursued. Two joint venture companies, composed of 40 businesses for readymade clothes and 14 businesses for knitwear, have already been established and are operating with ETVA capital.

--Craftsmanship and artisan products are advertised in both domestic and foreign publications at state expense and with the initiative of the Ministry of Industry and EOMMEX [expansion of acronym unavailable].

--Through EOMMEX, lectures and seminars are held during gatherings at chambers of industry for the vocational education and briefing of craftsmen.
--The first four schools for alternate training were established.
--The development laws 289/76, 849/79 and 1116/81 also apply to small businesses.
--The expediency licences [adhies skopimotitos] have also been abolished for the small business units.
--The free importation of second-hand machinery was established.

GOALS--AIMS

New Democracy believes that the small- and medium-sized enterprises--either as a nursery of future industry or a satellite of present industry--constitute the best guarantee in safeguarding free economy and developing the inventiveness of the Greeks.

For these reasons, New Democracy will help the establishment of development of small- and medium-sized businesses in all sectors. New Democracy's primary care will be to considerably simplify and facilitate the establishment of new businesses, reduce their cost and increase their competitive power as much as possible.

More specifically, New Democracy will implement the following measures:

--It will considerably simplify procedures and reduce the taxation burdens imposed on mergers, integrations, and so forth.
--It will further strengthen the institution of branch exhibitions for the distinction of products by small- and medium-sized businesses. It will establish exhibition centers and help in activities that aim at advertising their products.
--Various identical or related small- and medium-sized businesses will be strengthened through taxation and financing incentives in order to form joint ventures for the supply of raw materials and organization of their exporting endeavors or their organization into vertical trusts.
--EOMMEX will be strengthened so that it may offer more effective help.
--The strengthening of the institution of craftsmanship centers and the development of craftsmanship areas will continue.
--Almost all licences of the Ministry of Industry will be abolished.
--The institution of leasing will develop and thus allow newly-established businesses or those with weak capital reserves to acquire equipment on a long-term leasing without binding a considerable part of their capital.
--Financing through the banking system will be speeded up and procedures will be simplified.
--The commissions for loans to craftsmen will be abolished.
--A special organization for the financing of craftsmanship will be established.

Part Three

3. SECTORS: LABOR-FISCAL-HOUSING

A. LABOR

The New Democracy program that has been prepared for the period immediately facing us aims at the further raising of the standard of living and improvement of working conditions of Greek workers. It is a program that is absolutely realistic with clear measures that have already been specified for its implementation.

The basic aims and goals of the policy in the labor sector for the coming period are:

1. The guarantee of full employment to workers in a way that will enable employment to be compatible with the qualifications and expectations of the worker.
2. Expansion of workers' participation in the decisionmaking process.
3. Increase in true income.
4. Creation of more comfortable working conditions.

Specifically, the full employment of the labor potential will be guaranteed at the level of the economy as a whole and in every geographic region and every branch of the economy. However, at the same time, measures have been envisaged so that full employment will not mean merely any employment for the worker, but employment that will be compatible with the workers' qualifications and expectations. Thus, first, the graduates of higher and senior educational institutes will find employment compatible with their qualifications and, second, those people who lose their jobs, after many years of work, because of decline in a branch of work, after suitable training will be able to find another dignified position in a more dynamic branch of work.

The expansion of the workers' participation in decisions that concern them will take place both in the public (decisions made by the state) and the private sector (decisions to be made by the businesses which employ them, that is, workers in an industry will participate in the decisionmaking process of that industry on issues that concern them).

Regarding the increase of true income and after negotiations with the workers, a system will be found that will guarantee the purchasing power of salaries and wages. The emoluments of all workers will increase in accordance with the rate of increase of productivity and true national income while, at the same time, the redistribution of the national income will operate in favor of the economically poorer classes.

Finally, working conditions will be created that will guarantee not only the safe performance of work but also employment in a modern, comfortable and pleasant environment.

For the implementation of these aims, which will elevate workers, New Democracy has prepared a short-term program with specific and detailed measures. For the 1982-84 period, New Democracy undertakes the commitment toward the Greek people to seek the implementation of the following basic measures:

--Reduction of weekly working hours from 42 to 40 within the next 2 years.
--The further increase of the minimum annual leave days taken by workers for rest and vacation so that gradually we should reach the EEC countries' level.
--Revision of laws on collective labor agreements on the basis of the practice followed by EEC countries.
--Exemption from taxation of business profits that are distributed (through a vote) in the form of shares to employees with the owner's name inscribed.

--Legal protection for the bilateral committees of health and security in large enterprises.
--Introduction of the institution of safety experts and working doctors in large enterprises.
--Extension of the period for the payment of unemployment benefits and further increase of the relevant benefit.
--Possibility for the payment of unemployment benefits to the employer in case it is ascertained that the business provides seasonal work or that it is facing economic difficulties on the condition that it will continue the full employment of workers.
--The organizing of professional training programs in laboratories and applied practice in businesses for young people of 15-25 with theoretical education.
--The granting of systematic services for professional orientation especially to students in the last two classes of secondary schools.

This is not the end of the measures. There are many more as there were many and significant achievements in the labor sector from 1975 to 1980 by the New Democracy governments.

The following can be mentioned as examples:

--Constitutional protection of both the right to work and the right to strike.
--A significant true increase in emoluments, like the trebling of monthly emoluments of employees in industries, the increase by 350 percent of weekly emoluments for workers, the granting of benefits, the increase of the maximum amount of compensation in the case of dismissal of civil servants and so forth.
--Reduction of the working period from 48 to 42 hours weekly.
--Introduction of the 5-day working week in the civil service, banks, most utilities, insurance companies, oil businesses, communications, hospitals and generally in many branches of industry.
--Increase in the days of annual leave for workers and those employed in small businesses with a parallel extension of leave benefits to cover new categories of workers.
--An improvement in the position of the working woman through the equalization of emoluments and so forth.
--Strengthening of the family (increase of more than 400 percent of family benefits and so forth).
--Extension of unemployment insurance to young people over 15 years and to people over 65.

The table of achievements does not end here, since there are still the special measures for working young people who continue their studies, for newly married people and so many others.

B. FISCAL POLICY

Tax ememptions, reduction in the tax scale, simplification of tax control and procedures, further curtailment of tax evasion, introduction of social care for the deserving, incentives for the acquisition of professional premises are, among other things, the basic measures new democracy will take in its effort to:

--Restore even greater tax justice.
--Modernize our tax system.

Specifically, policy in the tax sector aims, as in the past, not at increasing by all means public revenue but at promoting the country's economic development. Taxation will be used as incentive for work and increased productivity. The extent and distribution of tax burdens will be such that tax obligations will not discourage an individual's tendency for work and the undertaking of entrepreneurial activity or deduct the greater part of increased productivity by workers and businesses. At the same time, the effort for the simplification of our tax system will continue so that disputes may be avoided, an atmosphere of cooperation and sincerity be created among the citizens and the state and the harassment of taxpayers and tax services be avoided.

The specific measures which the New Democracy government will take for the implementation of these goals are as follows:

--Even greater reduction of taxes on low and medium incomes and especially on salaried people, pensioners, workers, farmers and small- and medium-sized businesses.

--Enactment of a special social fund for the payment of special aid by the state to certain categories of deserving citizens.
--Exemption from income tax, to a certain extent, of pensioners' pensions from ancillary funds.
--Increase of the tax exempt sum saved by living in one's own house and of the tax exempt sum earned by renting one's own house.
--Further reduction of inheritance and donation taxes, especially in the case of close relatives, and increase of the tax exempt sums for farmers inheriting agricultural property.
--Exemption from the property transfer tax of the first professional premises to be purchased according to the model for the purchase of the first home.
--Simplification of tax controls on small businesses and automation of the system for calculating taxes. Systematization and extension of tax controls on large businesses.
--Introduction of the value-added tax and abolition of numerous indirect taxes (turnover tax, revenue stamps for invoices, salaries and wages tax, industrial and small business' tax and so forth).
--Perfection of the Ministry of Economic's machine accounting to provide an opportunity for the immediate checking of the information given by taxpayers to further restrict tax evasion.
--Gradual implementation of the general accounting plan in businesses for the effective curbing of tax evasion.
--Completion of the codification of laws on all tax objects--something that has already begun--so that the briefing of citizens can be made more effective.
--The granting of the right to businesses to readjust the value of their immovable properties at a very low tax burden so that the capital of businesses can reflect reality and their relation to foreign capital be improved.

It should be mentioned that the fiscal policy of the years 1975-80 is characterized by the implementation of significant tax reforms. The New Democracy governments, with decisions decisions they made:

--Increased the sums taxpayers deduct from their taxable income for themselves, their wives and other dependents from 100 to 400 percent. At the same time they expanded by 20 percent all income tax brackets.

--Trebled the untaxable amount that is deducted from salaries and pensions (from 40,000 to 125,000 drachmas). Salaried people and pensioners living in border areas have been granted additional exemptions up to the sum of 100,000 drachmas and thus the total untaxable amount in these cases has risen to 225,000 drachmas.

--increased the untaxable amount for independent professions from 12,500 to 35,000 drachmas.

--The untaxable amount of the presumptive income from living in one's own house has been raised to 60,000 drachmas from the 36,000 it was for everybody while at the same time a law has been passed providing for increasing the amount by 12,000 drachmas for every dependent.

--The purchase of a first home by any married person has been exempted from the property transfer tax up to the sum of 1.5 million drachmas with an additional amount of 500,000 drachmas for every dependent child and by 10 percent if the home is within the boundaries of the Attiki and Thessaloniki nomes [districts].

--Increased by 150 percent untaxable amounts on inheritance, donation and dowry taxes and reformed the tax scale to significantly reduce the teax burden.

--Furthermore, the untaxable amount of gross income from agricultural businesses has been increased sevenfold, from 140,000 to 1 million drachmas.

--At the same time the exemption of agricultural cooperatives' profits from income tax, which during the dictatorship has been abolished, has been restored (with retroactive validity from 1972).

--Agricultural and stock breeding properties up to 40 donums with a value of 75,000 drachmas per donum have been exempted from inheritance, donation and dowry taxes, provided each donum's value does not exceed 200,000 drachmas.

A similar exemption was enacted for the transfer tax. At the same time, untaxable amounts for inheritances, donations and dowries valid for the other categories of taxpayers mentioned above have been doubled.

--Agricultural implements imported or produced locally have been exempted from customs duties, revenue stamps, turnover taxes and other taxes, and contributions to the farm insurance organization for exported unprocessed agricultural produce have been abolished.

--Special care has been taken to reduce the tax burden on families. Specifically: A) for people married for the first time, taxes for the year when the wedding took place have been reduced by 10,000 drachmas for the husband and by 10,000 drachmas for the wife. B) for people who have a child, taxes have been reduced by 10,000 drachmas for the year of the child's birth. A sum of up to 36,000 drachmas is deducted from a working mother's income (received from her work) for her first underage child up to the age of 6, and 6,000 drachmas are deducted for every additional child.

--With laws aiming at development, strong incentives were given (interest free loans, subsidies to investments, tax-free deductions from profits and so forth) for investments in the country's provinces and especially in border and island areas.

--Finally, various objective criteria were enacted to limit tax evasion in direct taxation and checks over the movement of produce was generalized to control and curtail tax evasion in indirect taxation.

C. HOUSING

In the 1975-1980 period, more than 900,000 new homes were constructed. In the same period, a significant improvement was noted in the quality of housing and the quality of life. This significant task will be promoted even more in the coming period through the implementation of the new housing policy of New Democracy. The aims of New Democracy's housing policy are:

A. The expansion of programs for social housing (workers' and people's homes) and agricultural housing.
B. The liberalization of the system of housing loans and the further improvement of their distribution by zones.
C. The quick promotion of the institution of housing regions and active town planning.
D. The compression of the cost of construction of houses.
E. The improvement of the quality of houses and of the housing environment.

The principal direction of the housing policy is the housing of all people in acceptable conditions as soon as possible.

In our country the percentage of privately-owned homes is very high and it is forseen that this percentage will increase even more in the coming years. At the same time, however, a great demand exists for rented homes in various areas of the country and such construction is developing at a fast pace in order to fill the housing needs of the mobile labor potential. For this reason, special housing agents (public enterprise for town planning, housing and shelter; National Land Bank of Greece; NEPOL [term unknown] Greek housing organization and so forth) in cooperation with municipalities and communities will construct complexes for rental apartments in various developing areas of teh country. These apartments will be rented to workers at rents that will be compatible with their incomes.

In addition to these measures, through the liberalization of the banking system, housing credit will be generalized and will be exercised by all banks. The first step will be taken by the investment banks and not only by the special housing agents. In order to promote the generalization of housing credit, the institution of building loan associations will be strengthened, special property shares will be issued and mutual fund companies investing in land will be formed.

The liberalization of the banking system also means that the organized builders of homes will be able to receive financing from banks on strictly banking criteria. This will have significant favorable consequences both on the progress of work for the construction of homes and on the cost of the construction.

The system of differentiated conditions for housing loans according to the region, which was implemented in 1981, will be consolidated as an institution, of course, with the prospect of new improvements that will be considered necessary. Also, the higher limits per beneficiary for financing new couples to acquire homes in housing areas and in zones of organized housing will be consolidated.

Within the framework of the more general town planning policy, the basic aim of the housing policy will be the establishment in a short period of more housing areas and housing units of organized building so that at the end of the next 5 years at least 50 percent of new homes will be built within this framework. A similar policy will come into effect for the second (summer) home, not only for the benefit of Athens and Thessaloniki inhabitants but for the benefit of the inhabitants of large provincial towns in the country. Some homes in these housing units will be given to beneficiaries of social housing at controlled selling prices.

This complex of measures for a housing policy together with other parallel measures of an administrative, organizational and fiscal nature, like the coordination of the activities of all responsible agents, the simplification of procedures for the issuance of licences, the great participation of agents of local self-government in the decision-making process and the implementation of the measures, will create the new modern housing environment.

TA010930 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Text] In a written statement to mark the sixth anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe signed in Helsinki, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that this constituted a fundamental document for the realization of detente.

The statement goes on to say that though the Helsinki Final Act was not able to eliminate the basic differences of view between the East and West, it contributed to the solution of existing problems. Recalling that difficulties have been faced in the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act since it was signed in 1975, the statement adds that the signatories of the act should be loyal to the principles stipulated in it during the conduct of their foreign relations, but they have not always been so.

The statement concludes by saying that Turkey attaches equal importance to all the provisions of the Final Act and assesses the detente process as being a whole. The statement expresses the hope that the Helsinki Final Act will be a guide for the future not only in the relations between the East and West but in all international relations.

APPEALS COURT REFERS DISK TRIAL TO LABOR COURT

[Text] The Supreme Court of Appeals has decided that the trial in connection with the closing down of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK[will be referred to the Labor Court. The Supreme Court of Appeals has annuled the decision to refer the trial to the Martial Law Command Court and has decided to refer it to the Labor Court. This decision has been termed as positive. On the other hand, the facts that Military Prosecutor Suleyman Takkeci has leaked to the press a concocted indictment concerning DISK and that such an indictment does not actually exist have caused much reaction. Reactions to unfounded accusations against DISK also have increased.

GUNAYDIN ON NORTH CYPRUS POLITICAL SITUATION

NC010747 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 29 Jul 81 pp 4, 12

[Resat Akar report from Nicosia]

[Text] It is now clear that the National Unity Party [NUP] founded by Rauf Denktas, will not be able to form a government. Nejat Konuk, leader of the Democratic People's Party [DPP], which holds the key to the formation of a government, held a news conference in Nicosia at which he stated that his party does not want ministries to agree to a coalition with the NUP. He said that the DPP has only asked for assurances on some issues. He added that his party will not agree to a coalition because no agreement has been reached on these demands. Upon this, NUP leader Mustafa Cagatay is expected to report his inability to form a government [to the TFSC president]. The other alternative is the formation of a coalition government by the Communal Liberation Party [CLP] which holds 13 seats, with the Republican Turkish Party [RTP], which is extreme leftist and has 6 seats, and the Democratic People's Party, which has only 2 seats in the legislative assembly. Political circles say that a minority government cannot last long and that the failure to form a government a month after the elections is a bitter development. These cricles believe the DPP should make a definite decision to forestall a government crisis.

ARRESTED PLO MEMBERS EXPELLED FROM COUNTRY

Apprehended at Airport

AU311653 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Tomorrow's KURIER carries the headline "Armed PLO Detachment Apprehended at Vienna's Airport; Five Submachineguns and Six Handgrenades in Luggage" KURIER says Austrian security officers have struck at Schwechat Airport. Last Wednesday they arrested a PLO team coming from Beirut. An entire arsenal of weapons, handgrenades, submachineguns in pieces and ammunition were found in the luggage of the two men. Seized were 1 submachine gun, 4 assault rifles, 19 magazines with 525 rounds of ammunition, 6 fragmentation grenades and 6 detonators. The men carried South Yemeni and Iraqi passports. They were handed over to the court.

AU311924 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Excerpt] The terrorists had come to Vienna aboard an Austrian Airlines plane from Damascus via Beirut. They carried an entire arsenal in their luggage: Czechoslovak Scorpion submachineguns, four Soviet Kalishnikov assault rifles, 500 rounds of ammunition and six fragmentation-type handgrenades. A few minutes ago Interior Minister Erwin Lanc confirmed to us by phone that the two arrested Arabs worked for the Abu Nidal group. Even though they enjoyed a certain legitimacy through the PLO representative in Vienna, Ghazi Husayn, they looked suspicious to the Austrian authorities. In general passengers coming from Arab states are now being checked particularly strictly by Austrian authorities. The two arrested persons are being interrogated. It still is uncertain whether they were really planning an attack on the Austrian chancellor or also against Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, who plans to come to Austria on 10 August.

To Be Met by Husayn

AU030714 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0506 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] After the detention of two Arabs at Schwechat Airport last week, Interior Minister Lanc has demanded that Vienna PLO representative Ghazi Husayn be recalled. Husayn had gone to the airport to meet the two Arabs, who carried numerous arms and who possibly planned an attempt against Chancellor Kreisky or Egyptian President as-Sadat--who will come to Austria soon. He had introduced one of these two men on an earlier occasion to Austrian authorities as a "Palestinian contact man."

Lanc believes the two terrorists belong to the Abu Nidal group, which has claimed responsibility for the assassination of Vienna city councilman Heinz Nittel. Thus there would be plenty one could ask Ghazi Husayn about, but he refused an interview. However, a VIENNA PLO Bureau spokeswoman read the following brief statement [by Husayn]:

[Begin recording] I am astonished at this campaign, and I am convinced that the Interior Ministry knows the truth. I will submit today to the Interior Ministry, to the Foreign Ministry and to the Chancellery a memorandum on this issue on orders of my leadership. I have nothing to do with this matter, and assume that certain circles are interested in my recall. I stress that I never had any relations with the Abu Nidal group or with other radical groups, nor will I have any such relations in the future. [end recording]

Lanc, Kreisky Comment

[Text] Vienna (APA)--The fact that Dr Ghazi Husayn, head of the Vienna PLO Bureau, was present when the two heavily armed Arabs were detained at Schwechat Airport and had obviously been in contact with them seriously impairs the relationship of trust that has existed. This was stated by Interior Minister Lanc.

Since a liberation movement must also be interested in a relationship of trust, the PLO can be expected to recall its present representative because it surely holds the same view, Lanc added.

The Minister admitted that Husayn need not necessarily have known about the weapons the two Arabs had with them, but on the other hand one of the two men had been in Vienna before and had then been presented by Husayn to Austrian security authorities as a potential contact man. Lanc declared that he had received from the PLO leadership the assurance that it had known neither directly nor indirectly of the planned arms shipment.

The activities, some of which could be uncovered by the detention of the two Arabs, according to our own observations and information received, are connected with the activity of the Abu Nidal group or an organization collaborating with it, Lanc declared.

Chancellor Kreisky declared in a television interview that the two Arabs had certainly come to Vienna to prepare acts of terrorism. However, it would be premature and wrong to connect them with the PLO. The situation is much more complicated, Kreisky said. He also stressed that the source of the danger is a group outside the PLO, a group that could also become dangerous to the PLO.

Should the Palestinians recognize that the democratic world cannot succeed in influencing Begin, it will not be possible to prevent new acts of violence, Kreisky said. Asked about a potential danger to himself, he said he would not change his behavior and would continue to move among the people.

Sentences Issued

[Summary] "The affair of the Palestinian terrorist team has dominated Austrian domestic affairs. Hardly an hour ago the sentence was passed with surprising speed on the two Palestinians who were apprehended, heavily armed, at Schwechat Airport last week." Harry Sychrowsky and Hans Kostler sum up the events:

"As early as this afternoon, the two arrested Arabs were sentenced in summary proceedings. There was one acquittal and one sentence to 9 months in prison, suspended on probation. The two individuals were handed over to the police and expelled from Austria. The sentence is surprising because of its leniency, but it is necessary to apply legal and not political criteria."

Sepp Rieder, spokesman of the Justice Ministry, replied to Sychrowsky's question of how such a sentence was reached: "I believe this certainly is not a routine case, even though there has been comparable handling of such cases by authorities not only in Austria but also in other countries. The handling by judicial authorities is in absolute conformity with the role of justice in this connection. Undoubtedly the security aspects are the central issues, though they are not germane in criminal proceedings. There is no evidence of the intended use of the imported weapons. This is all more or less a matter of speculation, and speculation is not the subject of criminal sentences. The sentences, as well as the acquittal in the one case, are in accordance with the legal situation."

To the question of how there could be an acquittal in such a case, Rieder replied: "In this specific case, the acquittal was explained by the fact that it could not be proved that the persons concerned participated culpably in the illegal arms transport. Hence what was proved was only actual participation, though not the culpability required by law."

FOREIGN TRADE DEFICIT DROPS IN FIRST HALF OF 1981

[Summary] In the first half of 1981 Austria imported 163.06 billion schillings worth of goods and exported 120.29 billion schillings worth. Compared with the corresponding period in 1980, imports went up 4 percent and exports 10 percent. The foreign trade deficit declined 9 percent, to 42.77 billion schillings. Despite a 5-percent decline of oil imports in terms of quantity, the value of imported crude oil went up 34 percent.

Imports from the European Community totaled 95.96 billion schillings, or 59 percent of Austria's total imports, while exports were 64.73 billion schillings, or 54 percent of Austria's total exports. At 31.26 billion schillings, the import surplus was 14 percent below the corresponding 1980 figures. In trade with EFTA countries, Austria achieved a favorable balance of 2.1 billion schillings.

KREISKY MEETS WITH SINGAPORE'S LEE KWAN YEW

[Text] Salzburg (APA)--On Saturday Chancellor Kreisky and Singapore's prime minister, Lee Kuan Yew, had a talk lasting several hours at the Oesterreichischer Hof Hotel in Salzburg. They exchanged opinions on international politics and on bilateral relations. Chancellor Kreisky declared after the talks that he had outlined Europe's position especially toward the Middle East problem, while Lee in turn had informed him about Far East problems.

BRIEFS

FOUNDRY FOR HUNGARY--A steel foundry supplied by the Austrian Andritz machine factory in Graz has now been completed in the south Hungarian city of Oroshaza. The 150-million-shilling project was carried out by the Andritz company with a Swiss partner, Ingenieurbuero Ableidinger, which supplied the knowhow, worth 15 percent of the total order. The Oroshaza foundry has an annual capacity of 5,000 tons of small and medium castings needed for valves, pumps and fittings. [Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 30 Jul 81 p 1 AU]

CENSUS FIGURES--According to the tentative results of the 1981 census, Austria's population totals 7,546,200, nearly 90,000 more than in the census 10 years ago. While most provinces showed population increases, there was a decline in population in Vienna and Styria. [Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 21 Jul 81 p 2 AU]

CROP DAMAGE--This year's wheat, barley and rye crops are expected to be 20-40 percent below last year's figures, and the quality this year is also expected to be lower than last year's as a result of the prolonged drought in the spring and the recent floods. Average grain yield per hectare is estimated at 3.5 tons this year, as against a 5-year average yield of 4.27 tons. The wheat crop is expected to be only 850,000 tons as against 1.2 million tons last year. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 28 Jul 81 p 1 AU]

VIENNA DRUG SCENE--Vienna health authorities have noted a drastic increase in the number of drug addicts lately. The number of drug abuse cases registered in Vienna has gone up from 206 in 1972 to 1,033 in 1980, and figures for the first half of this year are estimated to exceed last year's annual total. There is a marked trend toward hard drugs, while hallucinogenics use is declining, and 20 percent of the addicts are in the 14-18-year age group. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 22 Jul 81 p 5 AU]

SPOKESMAN REJECTS U.S. CRITICISM OF DEFENSE CUTS

[Text] Bonn, 3 Aug (DPA)--Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl today in Bonn rejected criticism by U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger concerning cuts in the German defense budget as "inappropriate in form and matter." Ruehl stressed the "very good to exemplary" combat readiness of the Bundeswehr and described it as "highly unlikely" that the U.S. criticism will lead to the cancelling of economy measures already decided upon.

The Federal Government has so far found no reason to concern itself with the criticism coming from Washington regretting the cuts in the German 1982 defense budget. Such criticism of defense contributions between NATO allies is, however, "nothing new," Ruehl said. Disputes of this kind on the level of alliance contributions have "not been unusual" in many years.

Ruehl described the NATO decisions of May 1978 as "a common goal" in which the members intend to strive for an annual growth in their defense budgets of 3 percent in real terms. The Federal Government, with an average 2.6 percent real growth, according to recognized NATO criteria, in the past 12 years, has not only come close to achieving this annual goal but has done so considerably earlier and more consistently than many other allies.

The spokesman quoted NATO staffs which assessed the state of the Bundeswehr as "very good to even exemplary in essential sectors." The planned decrease in expenditure will not impair this overall state. Large-scale projects remain unaffected. The Federal Republic is thus behind the United States and France, but ahead of Great Britain, in the alliance's top group. It has to be made clear that "our backlog demand is less than that of the other allies," Ruehl said.

There will be no change in the rapid combat readiness and in the fact that the Bundeswehr can be brought up to emergency strength within 72 hours. It can be deduced from this that it is "impossible to measure a country's defense contribution only in terms of money."

Ruehl said that up to the present the federal chancellor's office has no knowledge of U.S. Ambassador Arthur Burns' requesting a talk to make clear personally his government's complaints.

Press Comments

DW031018 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 3 Aug 81

[From the press review]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: Of all that has already been heard from Washington in the way of reaction, a new tone is remarkable. It seems as though they plan to call things by their proper name in public. On the one hand, there is the concern that Bonn's example might have the effect of a signal on the rest of the European alliance partners. Because if the Federal Republic refuses to hike its defense spending by 3 percent a year as promised, namely up to 1986, why should anyone else? Weinberger's remark that the impression must be prevented that NATO commitments can be taken lightly contains a harsh criticism of the chancellor, which would have been inconceivable a short while ago. This change is not soley attributable to the fact that Reagan and his team are governing in Washington. It also expresses a change in the security facts.

The daily DIE WELT states: Expecting the Americans to bear the load of growing defense all by themselves would mean risking Atlantic alienation and thus a fatal erosion of one's own security. This is why Washington's disappointment must be taken seriously.

What good does the socially just distribution of burdens do if we run the risk of ending up under the pressure of a most profoundly unsocial and undemocratic system of rule because of lacking defense capability? The Federal Republic's security must not be impaired by Bonn's austerity decision. This part of the coalition decision must be corrected.

The editorial of NUERBERGER NACHRICHTEN says: The reaction from Washington was bound to come. Almost in unison the White House, the State Department and the Pentagon said over the weekend that they are concerned and disappointed about the considerably decelerated growth of the German defense budget next year. What has been paraphrased with diplomatic politeness means, when decided, nothing less than that President Reagan as well as his Secretary of State Haig and his Secretary of Defense Weinberger are quite irritated. Bonn cuts down its defense spending at the very time when the Americans set up an arms program going into billions. The 4.2 percent by which Hans Apel's budget is allowed to increase, as is the entire federal budget, in truth boils down to a reduction of the funds for Hardthoehe.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: In truth, Bonn's 1982 defense budget is not cut but increased. It will increase by more than DM1.7 billion to roughly DM44 billion. This is the equivalent of 4.2 percent more than this year--granted, supposing an inflation rate of 5 percent plus the NATO target of a real budget increase by 3 percent will not be attained. To that extent, Washington is right, technically. Besides, the Reagan administration can also refer to its own example and even to France's announcement of appropriating more funds for defense purposes. But these comparisons are lame. Reagan proposes to make up for neglects and to reclaim for the United States its old position of predominance. France is inflating its whole budget for reasons of domestic policy. The Federal Republic, in contrast, at long last must save and quit living in debts. In that case, the defense budget must not be absolutely taboo.

KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER notes: Washington's disappointment over the slight increase in the 1982 German defense budget cannot be simply dismissed. At a time when the United States drastically increases its arms expenditures, the austerity of one of its most important allies may have the effect of a disengagement. Bonn must clear this up: The yardsticks applied over here and over there are different.

WEHNER ADDRESSES SPD DEPUTIES ON PEACE POLICY

DW040856 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 3 Aug 81 p 20

[Excerpt from letter by SPD Bundestag floor leader Herbert Wehner to the SPD Bundestag deputies, date of letter not given]

[Text] Dear friends, seldom before in the history of the Federal Republic of Germany have peace and the preservation of peace occupied the people in our country more than they do in these weeks and months and surely no clairvoyance is needed to predict that the readiness of the citizens to participate not only passively but also actively in the discussion on peace policy and to advocate the preservation of peace will even intensify in view of the decisions which we will be facing.

I am convinced that the security and peace policies may well be blanketed temporarily by topical problems--what I have in mind, for example, is the budget and finance discussions just ahead of us--but that they will ultimately be the central topic of the next few years. Much of what will be carried into the peace discussion here and there definitely cannot meet with our approval because the unconditional desire for peace alone does not yet provide a solid foundation for a practicable policy aimed at preserving peace.

Nevertheless, two positive aspects of the broad peace discussion seem to be particularly noteworthy: In a society which not only calls itself democratic but wants to live democracy through the active participation of the citizens in the political doings, such discussions, waged intensively and also controversially, should be taken for granted as a democratic process.

The second aspect seems to me to be even more important: Probably never before in German history has the longing for peace been more deeply rooted in our people than it is now. It is a visible expression of a change in spirit, reflecting the turn away from aggressive military thinking which more than once inflicted great sorrow on our own people and on others.

The longing for peace on the part of the overwhelming majority of the people in this country and their will for peace probably are part of the most valuable achievements and of the most encouraging developments which democracy has produced. It is important to preserve this in the future as well.

Whenever the CDU/CSU talks about peace and safeguarding peace, it really means "armament" exclusively--including the prefixes "pre" and "counter" for armament. As for the CDU/CSU is concerned, the oft-cited NATO dual decision has long ceased to matter. It merely serves as a vehicle for an essentially farther reaching policy which can only be termed fatal in its consequence should it ever prevail.

What the union parties pursue is the fundamental turn away from, and destruction of, peace policy and the return to a political way of thinking and acting which generally is summed up under the label "policy of strength."

The CDU/CSU claims that it adheres to the NATO decision. This isn't true. In reality, the union parties have long abandoned the dual decision.

In a so-called argumentation aid "for the topical peace discussion" issued by the CDU leadership in May, the authors exclusively camp up with "arguments" for massive counter-arming but with none concerning the sense and usefulness of negotiations. The news magazine DER SPIEGEL (issue No 26 dated 22 June 1981) in phrases well befitting this particular case characterized the spirit of this evil concoction. "At some points it reads like an instruction sheet for psychological warfare dating back to the 1950's and 1960's."

Nobody who objectively and soberly analyzes the realities will be able to deny that a new situation has emerged as a result of the Soviet Union's SS-20 missile armament and that many people is Germany and in Europe are concerned by this new arms potential, and justly so, because they feel threatened.

How credible anyway are politicians who try to make us and others believe that the defense readiness of the young people will be enhanced if one tries to make them believe that there are good and bad missiles--we, of course, having the good missiles and the communists the bad ones--instead of convincing them of the concept of our defense policy?

The foreign and security policies of the CDU/CSU, which are hostile to detente and solely based on armament and the pursuit of power, not only testify to a shocking lack of imagination but also contribute to the jeopardy rather than to the preservation of peace. This policy is incapable of peace.

For all of us together, it must be one of our most essential tasks in the immediate future to make it clear to the citizens, to a greater degree than heretofore, where the actual adversaries of a peace policy aimed at understanding and detente are to be found in our country.

Anyone dodging this task must be prepared even now to share in the responsibility for the consequences that might emerge from their activity or, better yet, from their inactivity.

Cordial greetings to you, Herbert Wehner.

STUDENTS OCCUPY IRANIAN CONSULATE IN BERLIN

LD040916 Hamburg DPA in German 0839 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] Berlin/Bonn, 4 Aug (DPA)--The Iranian Consulate General in Berlin was occupied this morning by about 30 Iranian students opposed to the regime. Several telephone callers to DPA said this was done in protest against the executions in Iran and at the same time in support of the "national resistance council." After about an hour, the police cleared the building, the interior furnishing of which is said to have been completely devastated, and took most of the occupiers into temporary custody.

The occupiers, who are apparently members of the Cisnu student organization and the Muslim student organization, threw furniture into the consulate garden. From outside, where 80 more Iranians had gathered, stones were thrown at the walls and windows.

At the time of the occupation, six members of the consulate were in the building. Five of them shut themselves in a room. At first, the students announced that they had taken Consulate General Iraj Taqizadeh hostage.

Of the 105 Iranian students arrested in Bonn yesterday, following the occupation of their country's embassy, 9 are still in police custody today.

MAUROY, KENYAN VICE PRESIDENT DISCUSS TIES

PM031427 Paris LE MONDE in French 29 Jul 81 p 8

[Text] On 27 July, Pierre Mauroy received Mwai Kibaki, Kenyan vice president and finance minister, who is heading his country's delegation to the World Bank consultative group meeting in Paris 28 through 30 July. The premier's office indicated that this "particularly fruitful and warm" meeting provided an opportunity for a broad review of the future of French-Kenyan relations and the pursuit of the North-South dialogue.

"Cooperative relations between the two countries," the Hotel Matignon explained, "will be strengthened both at the financial and at the cultural and technical levels."

Regarding the North-South dialogue, the Kenyan vice president was anxious to stress the "wave of hope" which Mitterrand's election aroused in Africa.

According to Kibaki, "in Ottawa (at the industrialized countries' summit) France was regarded as the developing countries' spokesman and it is expected to play a decisive role at the meeting which will be held shortly in Cancun, Mexico" (preparatory ministerial meeting for the North-South summit).

Finally, Kibaki was anxious to point out that his country "intends to remain faithful to the principle of respect for the existing borders in Africa."

CONGO LEADER GRANTS INTERVIEW, MEETS WITH MARCHAIS

LE CONTINENT 28 July

PM031455 Paris LE CONTINENT in French 28 Jul 81 p 2

[Lucien Ahonto and Mohamed Maiga interview with Congolese President Denis Sassou-Nguesso in Paris; date not given]

[Excerpt] LE CONTINENT: Some sources recently mentioned the possibility of a Soviet military base in the Congo. What are the facts?

Denis Sassou-Anguesso: The People's Republic of the Congo signed a treaty of friendship with the Soviet Union during our official visit to that great friendly country. This treaty is not a secret document. It has even been published. The Congo houses no foreign bases on its territory and the Brazzaville authorities firmly maintain that situation. There will be no foreign bases now any more than in the past.

LE CONTINENT: Is the left's arrival in power in France likely to speed up a rapprochement between Paris and Brazzaville?

Denis Sassou-Nguesso: The left's arrival in power is a crucial event in France because it fulfills the long expectation of the vast majority of the French people and will certainly alter the political context of French-African relations. It will undoubtedly provide a new basis for cooperation between our two countries and we have great hopes that it will be extremely fruitful.

LE CONTINENT: Are there some points on which you will concentrate during your discussions with the French authorities?

Denis Sassou-Nguesso: No special points. We will discuss cooperation as a whole to see what new directions it could be given in view of the fact that the French authorities have expressed the strong determination to have a new type of cooperation with the Third World. Therefore, no special points will be raised.

L'HUMANITE 29 July

PM031529 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Text] Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso, president of the People's Republic of the Congo, who is on an official visit to Paris, had a meeting with President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee on Tuesday [28 July]. After the lunch, he said that the talks confirmed the French Government's new line.

President Denis Sassou-Nguesso, accompanied by several of his ministers and by the ambassador of the People's Republic of the Congo in France, also met with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais.

The very warm talks related in particular to the new prospects for cooperation between our two countries opened up by the political change in France.

On that occasion, Georges Marchais recalled the PCF's proposals in favor of a new world economic and political order and expressed the French Communists' solidarity with the efforts being made by the Congolese people for their independence and development.

PCF'S GREMETZ MEETS WITH PCP LEADER CUNHAL

PM031658 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Text] PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal had a meeting on 27 July with PCF Politburo and Secretariat member Maxime Gremetz and Central Committee member Jean-Claude Lefort. The PCF representatives also met with PCP Political Commission and Secretariat member Joaquim Gomes and Central Committee member Albano Nunes.

Topical questions relating to the international situation also were raised. The PCP and PCF representatives reaffirmed their mutual solidarity with the struggle waged by the two parties and expressed the will to continue to act to strengthen the fraternal ties of friendship, cooperation and solidarity which unite them.

L'HUMANITE ASSESSES OTTAWA SUMMIT OUTCOME

PM031016 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Martine Bulard commentary: "American Leadership?"]

[Excerpt] "We took an understanding attitude but we did not make concessions." This assessment by Mr Allen, adviser to the U.S. President, sums up perfectly the results of the Ottawa summit.

The United States did water down some of its general statements of intent, but in practical terms, it made no step forward. It will pursue its policy of expensive credit and a high dollar rate, extorting its tribute from its partners' economies and stifling the developing countries financially.

It stepped up pressure on the six to close ranks behind it and to form a bloc against the socialist countries. It obtained broad satisfaction.

Reagan is, therefore, satisfied. And he intends to say so loud and clear with two aims--to show those on the international stage who might have doubted it that the balance of forces remains intact and U.S. leadership undisputed, and to try to extend his political base in his own country where the increase in the military budget, the cuts in social spending and the fall in purchasing power are likely to pose serious problems.

It is in this international and national framework that we should place his postsummit statement to the NEW YORK TIMES and Washington POST that he was "surprised by the determination (of F. Mitterrand) regarding the Soviet threat. His statement on the present and future position of his country (in this connection) might have been made by myself or somebody else."

That is a matter of personal opinion.

What is certain is that the joint foreign policy communique retains that idea of a so-called "Soviet threat" so dear to the Americans. It is regrettable that, in its first international conference, France did not assert its original path in this sphere too, its intention to reject any alignment with any power--including the United States--as, moreover, F. Mitterrand's election program stipulates.

As for the interest rates and the dollar, it was obvious from the start that the Americans would not bend their policies. It would have needed adequate pressure from the other countries present. However, the difference in the economic goals pursued by the FRG, Britain and France are too great for the Europeans to respond with the necessary energy.

PCF POLITBURO REVIEWS POSTELECTION SITUATION

PM031346 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Jul 81 p 3

[Text of PCF Politburo communique issued 29 July: "Using Every Opportunity To Progress"]

[Excerpts] The PCF Politburo published the following communique yesterday.

The Politburo has assessed the situation in France 5 weeks after the parliamentary elections, the PCF-PS government agreement and the start of a new policy.

We have a constructive attitude in this unprecedented situation. Our activity at all levels is directed toward one goal: to fulfill the French people's aspirations, to successfully bring about change. This positive behavior reflects our fundamental policy: to use every opportunity to progress toward the economic, social and democratic changes necessary to our nation. Such opportunities now exist.

In this spirit, the Communist ministers are participating in the goverment, helping to draw up and implement the policy which reflects the majority options expressed during the presidential election. The Communist deputies are behaving seriously and responsibly as a full component part of the majority.

In this same spirit, all Communist militants are setting themselves the task of helping working men and women to take part in social, economic and political life and to intervene in the affairs which concern them. This is their raison d'etre. They are trying to do this, on the one hand, by activity with the workers on very diverse spheres, thanks to each cell's initiatives. And, on the other hand, they are trying to do this by making as big a contribution as possible to action by the trade unions, organizations and associations. In all cases, they are trying to ensure that the workers' needs and aspirations are expressed as well as possible and are fulfilled.

The Communists want the nationalizations to be carried out without delay, in keeping with the pledges made. They are taking part in the debate on decentralization with a view to giving this great reform its full democratic context.

The Communists are cooperating in drafting a new law on radio and television. Indeed, it is imperative to establish a responsible, equitable and truly pluralist media. This requires special short term measures to immediately end the discrimination which, for 25 years, has prevented pro-Communist journalists from taking part in radio and television news.

PCF MINISTER 'PERFECTLY AT HOME' IN GOVERNMENT

PM031007 [Editorial report] Paris L'HUMANITE in French on 27 July 1981 carries on page 3 a 1,700-word Jean-Luc Mano interview with Anicet Le Pors, minister for public office and administrative reforms, one of four PCF ministers in the French Government. Le Pors describes the criteria on which he based his choice of staff for his Ministry, the current wage dispute with the civil service trade unions and his department's role in the decentralization policy. Asked whether he feels free to act or whether he feels like "a hostage within the government," Le Pors replies:

"It would be a misunderstanding of our party and, in any case, a misunderstanding of me personally to think that I might one day be anybody's hostage. Of course, there may be discussion on this question. But the Communist ministers are full ministers. There is no problem in that respect. I think that all the Communist ministers would say: We are perfectly at home. At the present stage, no policy problems exist although that is not to say that there are no conflicting ideas, alterations, explanation--in short, a government's ordinary work. As far as I am concerned, I repeat that I am perfectly at home in the government."

LE MONDE VIEWS GRANTING OF ASYLUM TO BANI-SADR

[Editorial: "The Price of Asylum"]

[Text] By coincidence, Bani-Sadr requested asylum in France, where he spent many years in exile during the shah's reign, at the same time Defferre was explaining French policy on the Basques in Madrid.

The French Government can pride itself on not selecting the people it welcomes on the basis of their political opinions. Persecuted people from the Eastern bloc countries, from Southeast Asia or Latin America have long found refuge in France on the same terms. Moreover, the broader and more varied the spectrum of political refugees who find asylum on French soil, the easier it will be for the government to justify its protection of the adversaries of a particular regime.

It is a matter of principle, as Cheysson asserted on 20 June in a premonitory statement: "We will be intransigent," he told the French diplomatic press. "Yes, France is the homeland of human rights. We will never hand over a political refugee, whatever happens. If Bani-Sadr comes here as a political refugee tomorrow, he will, of course, be protected."

However, the French Government must make sure that the ousted president's airplane was not hijacked. If Bani-Sadr and his friends used violence or threats to make the crew fly the airplane to France, he would have a nonpolitical charge against him and the French Government would be in a tricky position.

France already has welcomed Bakhtiar, the shah's last government chief, and, above all, Imam Khomeyni, who, it is true, was not "technically" a refugee since he was in possession of a regular Iranian passport. Hence, he did not feel bound by the reserve which France asks refugees to observe on its territory and was not slow to call on his compatriots to revolt.

For a country to be sought after as a place of asylum is an honor which has some drawbacks. The host governments are, moreover, now better equipped to face this situation. Until recently diplomatic relations arrogantly disregarded human rights. They were relations between governments and did not have to take account of regimes' human quality. This amorality--if it can be so described--in relations has been attacked since the last world war by the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the creation of the European Council's Human Rights Commission and Court and the CSCE.

The implementation of these statements and the action of these institutions, however, often conflict with the obligations of "noninterference" in internal affairs which were proclaimed at the same time. The democracies, which all too often pay for the shortcomings of jurisprudence in this sphere, would benefit from reminding all kinds of dictatorships of their international humanitarian pledges.

FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL SET TO VISIT CHAD

PM031118 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Ambassador Jean-Pierre Campredon, a senior official in the External Relations Ministry, soon will visit Ndjamena, according to a good source in Paris. This mission, the first by the French Government since Francois Mitterrand was elected, will make it possible to establish direct contact with President Goukouni Queddi. Contact was first established between the Chadian National Unity Transition Government and the new French Government in June when Chadian Foreign Minister Acyl Ahmat handed Jean-Pierre Cot a message from President Goukouni Cueddi to President Mitterrand.

RED BRIGADES MURDER HOSTAGE ROBERTO PECI

[Text] Rome, 3 Aug (ANSA)--The body of Red Brigades hostage Roberto Peci, the last of four the urban guerrillas kidnapped this year as part of what they described as their "spring campaign", was found on the outskirts of Rome early this morning after anonymous phone calls to ANSA's central office and a number of Roman dailies.

Peci, brother of Patrizio, the first leading Red Brigades member to turn states evidence, had a white cardboard placard with the words, "death to the traitors", lying next to him. The body was found just before 0500 GMT in a broken-down house near Rome's Capannelle race-track, about fifteen kilometers south from the city's center. Peci's body was face up with his hands handcuffed on his chest and his eyes blindfolded. Caliber 7.65 cartridges were found nearby, leading investigators to believe that he was slain with a pistol or a sub-machinegun.

The first impressions of the coroner imply that he was killed only a couple of hours before the body was found. The first phone-call was made just after 0400 GMT.

Peci was kidnapped on June 10. On April 27, the Red Brigades kidnapped Campania regional councillor Ciro Cirillo, a leading Christian Democrat notable, slaying two of his body-guards. Cirillo, whom the urban guerrillas accused of masterminding plans to relocate thousands of poor Neapolitans after last November's earthquake, was released 88 days later.

On July 23, the Red Brigades released Alfa Romeo executive Renzo Sandrucci, but Montedison executive Giuseppe Taliercvio was killed and his body left at Mestre near Venice on July 5. Taliercvio was claimed by the Red Brigades to have refused to cooperate in his "peoples trial". Peci was slain even though he apparently collaborated.

The death-sentence was announced even though, following Red Brigades' requests to hear the views of their imprisoned leaders, organizations of unemployed workers and workers in struggle, the general verdict was that he should be released. The decision to execute him was announced Friday. "The execution of Traitor Robert Peci is a fundamental and irrenounceable act in the tough path towards building the combatant communist party", said the statement found in Naples.

According to the Red Brigades, and the version of events narrated by Roberto Peci from his imprisonment, he came under heavy pressure from the police when arrested for radical leftist activity not linked to the Red Brigades. According to this tale, he agreed to collaborate with the Carabinieri in bringing in his brother who was allegedly already showing signs of wanting to emerge from clandestinity.

According to Roberto Peci, his brother was picked up in a negotiated arrest in Turin, at the end of 1979 and, after settling on terms with anti-terrorist Chief Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa, was sent back into the field to provide more information. His final arrest, or first arrest if the official version is correct, was in February last year.

One of the Red Brigades demands was that the acts of Roberto Peci's questioning, including a videotape, should be carried in full by Italian newspapers and other information media. The only press organs which agreed were the Socialist Party daily, AVANTI, the new left spokesman, IL MANIFESTO, the radical left paper, LOTTA CONTINUA, and some of the information channels controlled by the small Radical Party.

Even if with some delay, Patrizio Peci and his lawyer issued a statement denying Roberto's version of the events, and their sister, Idfa, yesterday did likewise in an open letter. Peci's testimony,, which led to the arrest or slaying of scores of urban guerrillas, earned his special treatment under legislation passed with his case in mind and designed to encourage other people in a similar position to "repent".

Spadolini Reaction

[Text] Rome, 3 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini greeted the slaying of Red Brigades hostage Roberto Peci today as indicating that the urban guerrillas have regressed to the "tribal stage of family vendetta."

"The new Red Brigades homicide confirms their vocation to death and their rejection of all the rules of mankind and reason," he added. "The state can never negotiate with murderers and torturers", he said. "Its response will always be a battle without quarter to re-establish democratic order, to defend the right to life and the liberty of its citizens".

Spadolini also confirmed that he hopes further steps will be made towards encouraging urban guerrillas to turn states evidence, as Roberto Peci's brother, Patrizio, did. Spadolini said he hoped the government and Parliament would proceed further in "strengthening the legal defenses for those who leave armed gangs, ensuring clemency and the concrete protection of the state" on a "guaranteed path of return to legality."

[Excerpts] Rome, 1 Aug (ANSA)--A Rome court today ruled that the daughter of Licio Gelli, the fugitive venerable master of the secret Propaganda Two Masonic lodge, can be released on bond. In its ruling today, the Rome court fixed bail at 100 million lire, about 85 thousand dollars.

PCI'S BUFALINI COMMENTS ON EUROMISSILE ISSUE

PM310945 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 26 Jul 81 pp 1, 16

[PCI directorate member Paolo Bufalini article: "Euromissiles and SS-20s; There Are New Proposals, So Why Do You Not Negotiate?"]

[Excerpts] I read in a Bonn dispatch yesterday that Willy Brandt had made a relatively reassuring statement concerning the possibility of a resumption of the East-West dialogue to limit medium-range missiles in Europe. Apparently he said that following the Ottawa summit, Reagan's assurance that the United States will start negotiations with the USSR to this end as soon as possible was likely to dispel uncertainties and eliminate mistrust. We appreciate Brandt's efforts to restore the East-West dialogue and nurture confidence in the possibility of halting the current arms race; however, we do not feel at all reassured by Reagan's statement and remain worried by the Ottawa conclusions.

Indeed, we are convinced that the negative elements, albeit amid substantial contradictions and deep-rooted opposition, which characterized this recent meeting of the governments of the world's seven most highly industrialized countries, must be denounced and made known to the peoples masses and to all those concerned about the future of peace, because only a mobilization of the public and a struggle by all peace-loving forces can succeed in reversing the present trend and ensure a new start to the detente process.

It must be stressed that when Brandt expressed his cautious confidence, he was referring primarily to his recent talks with Brezhnev, from which it seems that he derived his conviction that the Soviets sincerely want the objective of the limitation and balanced reduction of weapons to be achieved. Indeed, as far as the European theater missiles in particular are concerned, Brezhnev apparently outlined to Brandt the possibility of a kind of moratorium that would constitute a major new step forward.

The proposed moratorium would work as follows: As soon as negotiations begin, both sides would cease deploying new missiles in Europe. It would only affect deployment. There is no stop on the manufacture the missiles or on the construction of launch sites, however. It is known that as far as the U.S. "Euromissiles" (Pershing and cruise missiles) are concerned, they have only just started to be manufactured and that they will certainly not be ready for 2 years. The Soviet Union, however, can deploy one SS-20 every week. Therefore, the kind of moratorium that Brezhnev apparently discussed with Brandt would halt the deployment of Soviet missiles while U.S. missiles would continue to be manufactured. Therefore, according to rudimentary logic, the ritual formula repeated by our own prime minister, among others, that "the moratorium proposed by the USSR is unacceptable because it would increase the imbalance in the USSR's favor" is incomprehensivle. Exactly the opposite is true!

It is well known that we Italian Communists have adopted stances and acted in connection with all major international issues in a spirit of absolute objectivity, not hampered by any ideological preconceptions. When we have had disagreements with the Soviet Union we have expressed them clearly; we condemned the intervention in Afghanistan.- With regard to the alleged imbalance in the USSR's favor in European Theater missiles, we have pointed out that it is a very complex issue that cannot be separated entirely from the U.S. forward based missile system and from many other military and political factors. However, neither have we denied that the specific problem of a possible imbalance in this field might arise. Therefore, we have urged immediate negotiations to achieve a balance at the lowest possible level. This remains our position. The aim must be both to dismantle the number of Soviet SS-20s that constitute an imbalance, and to halt the deployment of the Euromissiles--as the first step toward the liberation of the whole of Europe from nuclear weapons, toward the destruction of all nuclear weapons and toward a balanced reduction of all weapons.

But it is necessary really to want and to facilitate negotiations, both by adopting a political strategy aimed at peaceful coexistence and cooperation among states with differing social systems and by abandoning all objectives of supremacy, and through statements and deeds designed to reduce tension, to reassure the other side and to restore a climate of trust. But the Reagan administration is doing the opposite. Its strategy is summed up in the following objective: a United States that is stronger than anyone and that dominates everyone else. It is true that Reagan claims to want to begin negotiating with the Soviet Union by the end of the year, but meanwhile he is issuing peremptory enjoinders to it.

Unfortunately, in Ottawa, Europe yielded in almost everything to the U.S. demands (with the exception of Schmidt's downright refusal to cease trading with the Soviet Union). Europe had to submit to the continuation of the U.S. economic and monetary policy that is exporting inflation and unemployment to our countries. With regard to the Middle East, it backtracked from last year's Venice statement, which was itself unsatisfactory, but which did acknowledge the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and the need to involve the PLO in negotiations. And, most serious of all, there was a basic acceptance of the following stance presented by the United States and France negotiations with the USSR can only start when the West "has restored the military balance with the USSR." This is an illusory and harmful line (partly because meanwhile the USSR would not remain idle in the face of a threatening United States aiming to lay seige to it.)

P.S. I now read that the USSR's defense minister has written as follows in PRAVDA: "If the NATO countries deploy no new U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, the USSR is willing to reduce the present number of medium-range nuclear missiles deployed in its Western areas. We are willing to sit down at the negotiating table tomorrow, if you like and, observing the principle of equality and equal security, to negotiate the limitation (or, still better, the reduction and even a substantial reduction) of medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe." This is another step forward, another gesture of detente by the Soviet Union, which confirms my previous remarks.

PCI SENDS MESSAGE TO SPANISH COMMUNIST CONGRESS

PM040848 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 28 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] Rome--The PCI will be represented at the Spanish Communists' congress by Directorate member Comrade Pietro Ingrao and Central Committee member Comrade Giuliano Pajetta.

The PCI Central Committee has sent the PCE the following message. "On behalf of all Italian communists, the PCI Central Committee sends its warm and fraternal greetings to the 10th PCE Congress. The ties between our parties are long standing and profound and have been strengthened through shared major struggles against imperialism, for peace and for the development of democracy, to build new roads for democratic advance to socialism.

"We hope that these friendly relations between our parties will be increasingly strengthened on the basis of the principle of the independence of every communist party. We are now facing a burdensome crisis which is affecting even the Western capitalist societies that in past decades achieved a considerable economic development and improvement in the working masses' living conditions. The conservative forces are trying to recover full freedom of action to attack the gains wrested by the workers, to make them bear the cost of the crisis and to stifle the new demands for freedom and power that have emerged amid major popular struggles. Over Europe looms the attack by the new U.S. leadership which is acting to restore its economic and political supremacy, to subordinate the European economies to its own interests and to impart a new thrust to the arms race, while tensions between the United States and the USSR are being exacerbated.

"In our country, we are struggling to defeat the conservative offensive, for a European initiative to facilitate negotiations between the superpowers for an arms reduction based on a balance on the European Continent and for thorough structural reforms and changes in production that will create new and satisfactory sources of work and use science, technological innovations and the natural environment to satisfy profound human needs. We are fighting for a reform of the state that will democratize the public machinery, deal a blow to the old and new patronage nurtured in our country by the DC power system and impart effectiveness and honesty to democratic life.

"This transformation of the state structure is needed also to defeat antidemocratic subversion, to eradicate terrorism and violence and to give the democratic institutions the power of attraction.

"We are convinced that for this struggle to succeed the role of the people's Europe must increase. The major swing to the left in France, the strong recovery in several European countries by peace movements opposed to a nuclear disaster, the critical debate that has opened up within many European socialist and social democratic forces and the great victory achieved by the progressive alignment in Italy against the clerical forces in the 17 May referendum and the overall advance by the left and decline of the DC in our country's 21 June elections are in our opinion all events that demonstrate the major potentials that exist. We have also hailed with great interest the troubled renewal process that has begun in Poland and are watching attentively and sympathetically the action of the new Polish United Workers Party leadership to tackle and surmount the serious difficulties and the errors of the past, on the basis of the workers' consensus and involvement.

"In this harsh and difficult situation, which present a wealth of opportunities, however, we believe that a major role belongs to the West European communist parties in achieving multifarious and pluralistic forms of unity and convergence among the democratic and leftwing forces and building tools and policies for the democratic and leftwing forces and building tools and policies for the democratic planning of the economy and an advance to socialism, based on making the most of the workers' participation in the government of society.

"The subversive conspiracies, the spreading violence and the corrupt methods and apportionment of the state pursued by the old ruling classes threaten to cause a crisis of confidence in democracy even among broad strata of the people. We consider it more necessary than ever to struggle for democratic institutions capable of transforming social relations, combating the bureaucratism and inefficiency of the public apparatus and connecting parliament's central and national tasks with a broad network of autonomies and widespread grassroots democratic organizations. In this way, we are trying in our present struggles to embody the principle that a socialist society must be based on the people's consensus, on broad and profound political and civil freedoms, on a free dialogue among a plurality of political forces and social bodies and on respect for every country's independence.

"In view of the complex transformations in the capitalist societies, we believe that the success with which working class' leading role is established depends on the extent to which it remain in contact with the new demands expressed by the young people, women and new intellectuals of our time. We draw from all this a strong confirmation of the validity and topicality of Eurocommunism, a stimulus to a dialogue with the most vigorous forces of the Catholic world and of the European left and the need to work for a strong internationalism based on every country's independence, on solidarity among the peace-loving and progressive forces against imperialism and against all power politics and on a constructive response to the tragic problems of famine and Third World development.

"These are the reasons for our watching your work and your struggle very sympathetically and attentively. When a coup was attempted to deal a blow to Spain's young democracy, our people very forcefully expressed their outrage and their profound friendship toward popular and democratic Spain. We are in favor of Spain's full participation in the EEC and of Spain's increasingly strong and independent involvement in building a democratic Europe committed to defending its independence, to acting for peace, negotiation and the development of positive relations of trade and cooperation between East and West and to laying proper foundations for North-South dialogue. We are convinced that Eurocommunism can and must play a major role in building this Europe. Good work, comrade delegates. Long live the friendship between our peoples. Long live the PCE."

COMMUNIQUE ON PCP MEMBERS' VISIT TO MONGOLIA

PM031046 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 23 Jul 81 p 3

[Apparent text of 12 July Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party-PCP joint communique]

[Text] At the invitation of Comrade Yumjaagiyn Tsedenbal, general secretary of the MPRP Central Committee, PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal, accompanied by PCP Central Committee Candidate Member Antonio Orcinha Rodrigues, paid a friendly visit to the Mongolian People's Republic [MPRP] 9-13 July 1981.

During their stay in the MPR Comrade Alvaro Cunhal and the comrade accompanying him took part in rallies devoted to the 60th anniversary of the Mongolian people's revolution and had the opportunity to acquaint themselves with the Mongolian people's successes in building socialism.

Meetings and talks took place between comrades Alvaro Cunhal and Yu. Tsedenbal in which Comrade Antonio Orchiha Rodriguez, candidate member of the PCP Central Committee, Comrade D. Molomjamts, member of the Politburo and Secretary of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party [MPRP] Central Committee, and Comrade T. Balhaajab, member of the MPRP Central Committee and chief of the MPRP Central Committee's Foreign Relations Section, took part.

In the course of these meetings and talks, which took place in an atmosphere of friendship, mutual understanding and fraternal solidarity characterizing relations between the two fraternal parties, comrades Alvaro Cunhal and Yu. Tsedenbal exchanged views on issues of the international communist and workers movement and of current world developments.

The Portuguese communist leader informed Comrade Yu. Tsedenbal about the PCP's struggle in defense of and for the consolidation of workers' rights, democratic freedoms and other gains of the April 1974 revolution which overthrew the fascist dictatorship in Portugal, for the consolidation of national independence and against Portugal's entry into the EEC and against the deployment on Portuguese territory of U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles.

Comrade Alvaro Cunhal expressed high esteem for the Mongolian people's historic successes in building socialism, as well as for the MPRP's foreign policy efforts, aimed at strengthening the MPR's unity and fraternity with the Soviet Union and the other countries of the socialist community and at the consolidation of peace and security in Asia and throughout the world.

Comrade Yu. Tsedenbal expressed high esteem for the PCP's tireless efforts to organize and bring into the struggle the working class and the people's masses, to unite the democratic forces in defense of the constitutional system, ensure Portugal's economic development and political independence and strengthen the unity of the international communist and workers movement and of all anti-imperialist forces.

At the same time the two leaders expressed satisfaction at the great successes achieved by the workers and peoples of the entire world in the struggle for democracy, national independence, socialism and communism. They expressed their deep concern about the current international tension caused by the aggressive policy of U.S. imperialist circles and of NATO's militarist clique, who are intent on dragging the world toward a nuclear catastrophe.

The two sides ascertained that the acceleration of the arms race, the unbridled increase in military budgets and the intensification of the militarization of economic life and of interference in other countries' internal affairs demonstrate that imperialism's most aggressive forces are launching a new offensive with the aim of preventing the development of the workers and peoples' liberation struggle, of blocking the path of national independence and social progress chosen by an increasing number of states and of curbing the successes in building socialism and communism.

Within this framework the two sides vigorously condemn the decision to place U.S. nuclear missiles on the territory of the Western European countries--a factor imperiling peace and security in Europe and the world.

The PCP and MPRP leaders expressed their deep concern about the broadening of political and military cooperation between Washington and Beijing, whose leaders arbitrarily arrogate to themselves the right to proclaim various regions of the world as areas of their "vital interests" or to "teach lessons" to other countries. The PCP and MPRP leaders emphasized the dangers of the Chinese leaders' hegemonism and expansionism.

The two sides believe that the Soviet proposals put forward by the 26th CPSU Congress and confirmed by the USSR Supreme Soviet's appeal "To the Parliaments and Peoples of the World." Corresponding to the fundamental interests of all peoples and to the aims of strengthening peace and international security constitute a sound basis for negotiations aimed at concluding agreements on limiting an ending the manufacture of the incessantly accumulated weapons of mass destruction, as well as on their abolition.

The PCP and the MPRP believe that there are no more important and urgent tasks within the current context of the international situation than ending the arms race. Implementing real disarmament measures, dispelling the threat of a nuclear war and immediate commitment to a constructive and peaceful dialogue on contentious issues of international life.

The PCP and MPRP leaders find that the current international situation urgently requires that the communist and workers parties of the entire world and all progressive forces make further efforts with a view to preventing another world war and to safeguarding the peoples' peaceful future.

The two parties emphasize that the peoples' struggle for democracy, social progress and national independence constitutes a valuable contribution to barring the way to imperialism's aggressive policy and to defending peace and international security.

The PCP and the MPRP express gain their internationalist solidarity with the struggle of the peoples, the fraternal parties and the progressive forces subject to oppression by fascist and reactionary dictatorships.

They express their internationalist solidarity with the struggle of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America for freedom and national independence and against the aggressive maneuvers of imperialism, neocolonialism, racism and Zionism. They declare themselves in favor of a political solution to the problems concerning the Near and Middle East, the Mediterranean, the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf.

They express their solidarity with the people of Namibia, who are struggling for their independence, with the People's Republic of Angola and the People's Republic of Mozambique, which are the victims of acts of aggression by the South African racists, and with the Palestinian people and the people of El Salvador.

The two sides declare their support for the April revolution in Afghanistan, whose people are waging a courageous struggle for their genuine freedom and for national independence against the intervention in their country's internal affairs by imperialist reaction and the forces of hegomonism and expansionism.

The two sides expressed their solidarity with the heroic struggle of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea, which are resolutely defending their people's revolutionary gains and their sovereignty and territorial integrity against the Chinese militarist clique's attacks.

The PCP and the MPRP express their conviction that the communists and the patriotic forces of the Polish People's Republic will be able to extricate their country from the crisis situation, repel the forces of internal counterrevolution and international reaction and strengthen the socialist system.

The two parties believe that the unity of the international communist movement and friendship, cooperation and mutual solidarity among the major revolutionary forces (the socialist countries, the working class in the capitalist countries, the national liberation movement and the progressive countries) are of crucial importance for the success of the struggle for peace, democracy, social progress, national independence and socialism.

The two sides ascertained with deep satisfaction that relations between the PCP and the MPRP are developing and broadening yearly, in the interest of the strengthening of the unity of the world communist movement and of the joint struggle waged against imperialism.

JUSTICE MINISTER RETURNS FROM PARIS TALKS

LD032338 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] Spanish Justice Minister Fernandez Ordonez, on his arrival back in Madrid from Paris, where he held talks with his French counterpart, said that on the question of terrorism the new French Government has an overall attitude that is totally different from that of its predecessor; it has now become clear to the French Government that they have to help us in this matter.

Fernandez Ordonez said it still remains to be decided exactly how far that help will go and what areas it will cover.

The Spanish minister handed his French counterpart a document outlining the legal bases of the Spanish position.

Fernandez Ordonez' impression after his meeting is that the French position with regard to extradition remains as it was at the start; that is, it will be decided by the French Government and President Mitterrand once a close examination has been made of the Spanish applications.

GOVERNMENT QUESTIONED ON 'SECRET U.S. BASE'

PM040816 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 29 Jul 81 p 12

[Text] Madrid, 28 Jul--Socialist group deputy Jesus Fuentes Lazaro has submitted a question to the government concerning the possible existence of a secret base in the locality of Sonseca (Toledo).

The deputy states that according to a magazine there could be a secret U.S. base disguised as a meteorological station which is in fact engaged in monitoring underground nuclear explosions conducted by other powers.

Fuentes Lazaro asserts that this report has not been denied by the government and echoes the unease and anxiety among the inhabitants of Sonseca, and for this reason believes that a clear reply is imperative.

Because of all this, he put the following questions to the government:

Is the existence of a secret U.S. base in the town of Sonseca a fact?

If that is the case, why has this information been concealed from the inhabitants? What dangers would the presence of a secret base entail for the town's inhabitants?

If that is not the case, why has the report not been denied to avoid alarming an entire town?

The talks were attended on the Egyptian side by Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Minister of State for Presidential Affairs, Culture and Information Mansur Hasan, Foreign Ministry Frist Under Secretary Dr Usamah al-Baz and Egypt's Ambassador in London Hasan Abu Sa'dah.

The British side was represented by Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Douglas Hurd, Foreign Ministry Under Secretary George Brown, the assistant Foreign Ministry under secretary and Britain's Ambassador to Cairo Michael Weir.

The talks began with a 1/2 hour tete-a-tete meeting between President as-Sadat and Mrs Thatcher, following which members of the Egyptian and British delegations joined the talks.

As-Sadat: 'Splendid' Discussions

NC031624 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 1500 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] The discussions President Anwar as-Sadat held today with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ended at 1530 Cairo time. A 1-hour closed meeting was held between President as-Sadat and Mrs Thatcher followed by a meeting of the two delegations.

President as-Sadat described the discussions as splendid, saying that he has often described Mrs Thatcher as an iron lady.

Following the meeting, Foreign Ministry First Under Secretary Dr Usamah al-Baz made a statement in which he said: All subjects on the agenda were discussed at these meetings. The most important issue discussed was how to achieve tangible progress, especially regarding the Palestinian question, on the premise that we must steadily proceed toward a comprehensive settlement, particularly in light of the events that recently have taken place in the region, including the Israeli aggression against the Lebanese cities and the cease-fire that followed among Israel, Lebanon and the Palestinian resistance.

Asked whether there were new ideas concerning the role of the European Council in settling the Palestinian issue, Dr al-Baz said: The discussion dealt basically with the hope for the continuation of the active European role. Pointing out that the United Kingdom is now the chairman of the EEC ministerial council, he said that there were no definite ideas and that this matter is being debated by the Europeans. However, he added, what is important is that the European role should remain active and should develop, particularly after the Venice and Luxembourg declarations.

Dr al-Baz also said: We consider the European move a positive factor. We hope the Euorepan activities in this respect will intensify because the European states are qualified to perform an active and constructive role in achieving a rapprochemnt among the various sides and in working for a comprehensive settlement.

Egypt's 'Ali Comments

NC031942 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 1830 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] In an exclusive statement to our radio team in London, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali said that today's discussions between the Egyptian and British delegations dealt with issues related to the question of peace in the Middle East and with giving impetus to the efforts for reaching a settlement. He added that the Palestinian question and the issue of peace received top priority at these discussions, which also dealt with relations between Britain and Egypt.

'Ali added that the European role was discussed in general in full coordination with the United States. He further said:

[Begin recording] Undoubtedly, the exertion of efforts by all states vis-a-vis and Middle East question is of special importance to the question of giving impetus to the process of peace. Here lies the role of the European Community in its quest for establishing peace and stability throughout the region. In view of the interlinkage of the interests between West Europe and the United States, the discussions have actually assumed dimensions of possible cooperation to give impetus to the peace process. [end recording]

The foreign minister added that the discussions also dealt with the Lebanese problem within the framework of a comprehensive settlement in the area. He said that what has been achieved by Philip Habib, the envoy of U.S. President Ronald Reagan, constitutes a good beginning toward the comprehensive settlement, starting with a cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian forces in Lebanon and between Israel and the PLO in Lebanon.

In conclusion, the deputy prime minister and foreign minister said that views were identical on most of the opinions expressed and that there was agreement on the concept of peace in the area.

UK Sources on Talks

NC031756 Paris AFP in English 1744 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] London, 3 Aug (AFP)--The British Government will push ahead vigorously with a European Middle East initiative, informed British sources said here today following talks between visiting Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

The three-hour talks, followed by lunch, reportedly dealt mainly with a possible resumption of Palestinian autonomy talks between Israel, Egypt and the United States.

Both British and Egyptian officials believe it necessary for Palestinian representatives to take part in overall Middle East peace talks, but that such negotiations should take place in a framework creating "a climate of confidence" for all parties.

The European Economic Community's (EEC) Venice declaration remains at the basis of any European initiative in the Middle East, official British sources added.

This declaration called on Arab countries to recognize Israel's right to "safe borders," and on Israel to recognize Palestinian rights, including their right to self-determination.

Informed sources here said that Lord Carrington, current president of the EEC's Council of Ministers, might be ready to meet Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat on condition that such a meeting would help further negotiations in the Middle East.

Lord Carrington might also visit the Middle East, but not before clarification of Israel's and the United States' positions, sources said.

President as-Sadat is now waiting for next April's final Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai desert, under the terms of the September 1978 Camp David agreements with Israel.

According to British sources, the United States no longer believes it can win over Arab countries to the Camp David peace process.

A British initiative in the Middle East could only prove effective if carried out in conjunction with U.S. diplomatic action. Both the British and the Egyptians are reportedly ready to approach Washington with a view to obtaining agreement on Palestinian participation in peace talks.

Lord Carrington reportedly intends to ask EEC foreign ministers next month to agree to several new measures on the Middle East. Britain would like the EEC to actively support the Lebanese Government, including military aid, and would like Israel to grant greater freedom of movement to people in the occupied territories, and end Israeli settlements in the occupied Jordan West Bank.

No mention was made of military sales to Egypt, but observers here noted that Cairo seemed interested in buying British tanks and naval units.

President as-Sadat is expected tomorrow in Washington for talks with President Ronald Reagan. He is also due to meet with representatives of Jewish organisations in New York, before travelling to Plains, Georgia, for talks with former President Jimmy Carter. On his return home, he will stop over in Vienna for talks with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky.

As-Sadat Meets Fraser, Others

NC032228 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2018 GMT 3 Aug 81

[Text] London, 3 Aug (MENA)--President Anwar as-Sadat this afternoon met successively at his place of residence in London with Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser, British opposition leader Michael Foot and London Mayor Ronald Gardner-Thorpe. President as-Sadat met afterward with former British Prime Minister James Callaghan and with members of the British-Egyptian parliamentary group, which consists of a group of members of the British House of Commons that holds contacts and coordinates its activities with a similar group of members of the Egyptian People's Assembly. The president then met with Lord Sieff, a senior British businessman and a delegation of British businessmen led by British Foreign Trade Ministry Under Secretary Roy Williams.

Following these meetings, Mansur Hasan, minister of state for presidential affairs, culture and information, told Egyptian journalists that at his meeting with the Australian prime minister, President as-Sadat explained the Egyptian view on the Middle East peace process, what has been achieved so far and the future of this process, as well as ways of bolstering it with a view to achieving a comprehensive peace.

Mansur Hasan added that during his meeting with Fraser, the president explained that it is necessary in the next stage to concentrate on the essence of the problem--the Palestinian question--and that Egypt welcomes the cease-fire which was reached after the recent crisis in Lebanon because it considers it as a very important event in the region that could be exploited to take positive steps along the path toward a comprehensive peace in view of the fact that the cease-fire has been reached between the two main parties to the problem--Israel and the Palestinians.

The Egyptian minister of state for presidential affairs, culture and information said that the discussions at the meeting also dealt with the question of the multinational force. Hasan asserted that Australia fully supports Egypt's peace efforts and that it shows great enthusiasm for whatever may lead to fruitful results.

In his statement, Hasan also said that the efforts to form a multinational force were explained. It also was made clear that we invite all states which support the peace process and have an interest in its establishment, particularly the free world states, to contribute according to their resources to this process.

Asked what took place at President as-Sadat's meeting with the mayor of London, Hasan said that this was a courtesy visit during which the mayor welcomed the visit by the president in his name and on behalf of the British masses. He also expressed his own appreciation of the president's efforts to achieve peace in the region.

Concerning the president's meeting with James Callaghan, Hasan said that there was an exchange of information and views on the situation in the Middle East and on the Palestinian question.

On the president's meeting with British opposition leader Michael Foot, the Egyptian minister of state said that the president explained to Foot the situation in the region, his views about the forthcoming steps and the topics which he discussed with the British prime minister this morning. Hasan added that the president emphasized to Foot and to all those he received today that, regarding the Egyptian-Israeli treaty, the peace process is proceeding very seriously and that all parties are sincerely implementing their commitments in the treaty on schedule. He also emphasized that the final Israeli withdrawal from Sinai will take place in April 1982 and that we must continue our efforts afterward to attain the final goal--comprehensive peace. This requires the unification of all efforts, particularly by the United States and the West European states.

Concerning the president's meeting with the chairman and secretary of the Egyptian-British parliamentary group, Hasan said that the discussions dealt with the same topics. He added that the peace process on the Egyptian front has been fully completed. He said that concerning the other Arab rights, the Camp David agreement is a great achievements as far as the drawing up of the broad lines (?of a solution) to the problem is concerned.

Hasan further said that the president emphasized that Egypt's aim is to achieve a comprehensive peace and to find a just solution to the Palestinian problem. The president also emphasized that Egypt is ready to discuss any serious plan that could be an addition to what has been agreed upon in the Camp David agreement and would achieve the ultimate goal sooner and that Egypt will support any move by any state, including the Arab states.

To a question on the president's meeting with Lord Sieff, Hasan said that Lord Sieff briefed the president on many economic projects in food security and clothes manufacturing in Egypt, which many companies are now discussing in Egypt itself. Lord Sieff told the president that the total sum of the reports which the companies' experts submitted so far indicate that there are huge potentials for (?agricultural) production in Egypt and that the experts are currently carrying out studies that would achieve an increase in production not only in the new lands but also in already cultivated lands. Their studies, he went on, state that it is possible to increase the yield of Egypt's cultivated lands, particularly of the exportable products.

Hasan further said that the president met with a group of the chairmen of the boards of directors of major British companies that are currently conducting various projects in Egypt and that each chairman reviewed the project which his company is contributing to and the present stages of implementation.

ARCHBISHOP ADDRESSES MAKARIOS MEMORIAL SERVICE

[Speech by Archbishop Khrisostomos at a memorial service for former President of Cyprus and Archibishop Makarios at the Kykkos Monastery on 2 August—live]

[Excerpts] Mr President, this year too we are honoring the memory of the always remembered Ethnarch Makarios. We have again come to this sacred place to worship piously and with hearts that are bleeding from agony and pain we have ascended the high mountaintop of Kykkos, which holds within it, as a sacred amulet, the remains of that great leader. We are also here to lay on Makarios' tomb scented laurels showing our respect and appreciation as well as our love and gratitude. We have come again this year to relive his lofty visions, to be re-christened in his spirit, to be identified with him for a short time and together to ascend the high spirits of his majesty.

Four years have passed since his passing and we feel that we have lost our orientation, perhaps because we have not remained faithful to his counsel, some deliberately and some perhaps in good will. We have torn the banner of his militant course and everyone has taken and is waving the piece that fits his own position and his own interests.

The darkness is great and the agony shocking, because 7 years have passed since the tragedy of the Turkish invasion and its consequences have not changed. The enemy is continuing to hold our lands, our uprooted brothers have still not returned to their ancient homes, the relatives of the missing persons are continuing to burn inside the cauldron of their pain and drama, and all of us, at least those who do not care about what we shall eat and drink today but for the future of this country and people, seeing and realizing the situation that has been created among our people since he left us are spiritually shocked. There is no longer a militant mood anywhere; there is no intention for offerings and sacrifices. There is inactivity, passiveness and indifference at all levels toward events. In our political life, intense partisanship and personal aspirations are dividing the people's unity and undermining and destroying the foundations and institutions of our struggle. In our daily life, unbounded materialism and the pursuit of transient affluence are daily plunging the people increasingly deeper into forgetfulness of their duties and responsibilities. The false euphoria that is created every now and then by the impressions cultivated by foreigners, and unfortunately by our people too, regarding an alleged good atmosphere at the intercommunal talks, about an alleged Turkish intention and mood to solve our problem through the submission of constructive proposals, suspends all our activities in the international arena, nourishes delusions and puts to sleep our people's interests and destroys irreparably their militant spirit. Furthermore, and even worse, the impressions absolve Turkey of guild and elevate it before the eyes of international society.

In view of this tragic situation, as the leader of Apostle Barnabas' Church, our orthodox church which in times of flood has been the ark for the nation's rescue, I address myself to everyone, to men and women, to responsible and irresponsible people—if currently it is permissible to have irresponsible people in such tragic events--and ask them to wake up, to activate themselves, to join a campaign and to rally. We ask them to realize the deadly dangers that the continuation of the Turkish occupation and the presence of the invader's armies on our island entail, and together with us to ponder the responsibilities and the duties we have toward the motherland; toward our national, physical and spiritual survival; toward those people who maintained this land intact and delivered it to us intact; toward our fathers; toward our children; and furthermore toward all Hellenism.

First of all, by sweeping aside our differences and placing as our primary concern not our partisan or personal interests but the vindication of our struggle, we are asked to rvise this struggle's tactics and to ponder again its aims.

Is or is not our struggle for the liberation of our enslaved lands; is or is not our struggle for the recovery of our ancient homes; is or is not our struggle for the return of all refugees to their ancient homes, as at least we are declaring; is or is not our struggle for equal citizenship throughout the island for all citizens? If you answers are yes, and if these are the goals of our struggle, then we should stop deceiving the people that through the intercommunal talks, which are held under the presence of the well-armed legions of the invader and from time to time and at periods in order to deceive us and put us to sleep and deceive international public opinion, we shall be enabled to achieve these goals.

In our struggle and its development we must stop depending on the procedure of the intercommunal talks, because the goals of our struggle are different. Our struggle--if it is what we have said--aims at the liberation of all our land, aims--as we claim--at the return--I stress--of all displaced persons to their ancient homes [applause], while the intercommunal talks aim, and should aim, at the cultivation of a good atmosphere of mutual trust between the two communities and the pursuit of ways for smooth coexistence.

Otherwise, if our struggle continues to hinge on the outcome and the course of the intercommunal talks, we shall be deluding ourselves, we shall be accomplices to Turkey's policy, which by presenting the Cyprus problem as an intercommunal dispute succeeds in justifying both its invasion and the continuation of its presence in Cyprus and makes permanent and consolidates the results of the invasion, that is, occupation and parition.

It is time to understand that we must separate the procedure of the intercommunal talks from the substance of our issue, which is the invasion and occupation, from our struggle, which as I have said aims at the restoration of freedom and justice over all of Cyprus. Otherwise, the intercommunal talks will begin whenever Turkey wants, will stop when it does not need them and will continue without results when Turkey wants to foil the issue's internationalization until every bastion for struggle we have in Cyprus or abroad has been destroyed or rendered useless.

Greek Cypriots, shake off the lethargy into which the temporary solution of life's economic problems has possibly plunged you. Close your ears to the sirens of inactivity and seemingly rational defeatism. Do not accept the valium tranquilizers which the heralds of the heartless logic of realism offer you [to suppress] your apprehension of the future. Stand on the bastions like indomitable fighters, as Makarios wanted you to, in order to save the fatherland, for the national survival of our people. Open your hearts and your thoughts to the voice of duty, to the voice of logic that is clear and free of ulterior motives, because if our passive stance continues, if we allow defeatism to destroy every militant bastion, if we delude ourselves into thinking that we shall liberate our lands and regain our rights through smiles and talks with the Turkish Cypriots, if we think that by constantly conceding we will win the support of foreigners and persuade Turkey to come to its senses, then you should never expect to see the liberation of our enslaved lands, you should never expect to see the recovery of our ancient homes, you should never expect to see the roads reopen for the return of our displaced brothers, and you should never expect to see our churches in the north reopen and hold services. They will remain mute, deserted and desecrated to testify with their silence and emptiness not so much to the barbarity of the invader but to our own worthlessness, our own cowardiece, our own shame and the cowardice and shame and humiliation of all modern Hellenism.

Even if we are persuaded to accept a solution that directly or indirectly will give Turkey the possibility of creating a bridgehead in the north, then woe to us because not even the south will remain free, and one day we or our children, uprooted from this land of our fathers and dragging with us the rags of our shame and worthlessness, shall seek refuge in another land inorder to weep from that land over our lost fatherland. This is why the revision of the struggle's tactics is imperative, this is why it is imperative to join a campaign and rally all our people's forces, all the nation's forces, every group and every citizen who does not want to see Cyprus become Turkish.

Everything else should be swept aside, should be put at a lower priority. The struggle for the liberation of our enslaved lands, for Hellenism's survival on this island that was bequeathed to us by our fathers comes above all.

All of us should become soldiers here in Cyprus, every inch of our land should be transformed into a castle and into trenches of resistance. And abroad, we should draft all Hellenism's forces whenever they may be. We should draft all the peoples and men who are struggling for the same goals we are, who are struggling for freedom and justice, draft them into a world crusade for the restoration of justice in Cyprus by using and transforming every rostrum offered to us into a bastion for a struggle for the projection, the clear, militant projection, and demand for our rights.

Let us not forget that the people who are currently strengthening Turkey for their own interests have the same interests in Greece. Through a nationally dignified stance, Hellenism must force those people to comprehend that these interests cannot continue as long as the injustice against Cyprus' Hellenism continues. For this reason, we demand that official Greece make the solution of Cyprus Hellenism's dramas the first issue in its national policy. We also ask that it not wonder who will expel the invaders from Cyprus, but that it realize that it has a duty and debt to do so both as the motherland and as a guarantor power.

We stress this specifically today because we have the honor of having with us his excellency the Greek foreign minister Mr Konstandinos Mitsotakis. We welcome him warmly to our country, we thank him because he has not considered Cyprus to be very far away and has come and visited us to attend this memorial service for Ethnarch Makarios and pay tribute to him with us.

KHARAVYI Rejects Speech

[Editorial: "Inadmissable, Provocative Speech"]

[Excerpts] At a crucial and historic turn of the Cyprus issue, while our people are anxiously awaiting developments in intercommunal dialogue, at a time when prudence and sang froid are necessary because our people's future depends on the correct or wrong handling of developments, Archbishop Khrisostomos once again made an inadmissible and irresponsible speech, creating confusion and division among our struggling people.

While speaking at the memorial service for late President Makarios; while praising with words Makarios' personality as a courageous fighter, a "calm, persevering friend of peace" and a "realist," Archbishop Khrisostomos attacked in harsh words the line charted by Makarios in 1977 and openly supported that "the revision of the struggle's tactics is imperative." He violently attacked the intercommunal talks, which he described as a "mockery of the people," silently passing over the fact that the procedure of talks commenced under Makarios' leadership following the decision of the national-ministerial council. Moreover, he ignored that the intercommunal talks are being conducted in accordance with the UN decision and under the guidance of the UN secretary general. He also intentionally ignored the fact that Makarios and Denktas signed the four guidelines for a Cyprus solution in addition to which there is also the 10-point [May 1979] summit agreement, which determines the procedure and targets of the intercommunal talks.

The archbishop's speech was provocative and insulting for all the patriotic forces struggling on the basis of the Makarios line and resisting the imperialist plans to partition Cyprus and convert it into a NATO base. The archbishop claims that "we lost our orientation" after Makarios' death.

It appears that the archbishop is preparing to head all those forces militating against the Makarios line and the 1977 line of the national-ministerial council. We cannot find any other interpretation.

If he follows this course, we warn him that he will find himself in the same bloc with those who undermine the state foundations of the Cyprus Republic; with those who do not desire a solution through the United Nations but with the intervention of the imperialists. However, the archibishop's place is somewhere else; by the side of the patriotic, pro-Makarios forces in support of patriotic unity. This unity can be achieved only on the line that Makarios courageously charted in 1977 taking into consideration the tragic situation created by the coup d'etat and invasion. He charted that line not because of defeatism but because of political realism and deep patriotism. We do not benefit by denying reality. An untenable policy leads to absolute destruction.

EDEK ISSUES STATEMENT ON MITSOTAKIS VISIT

[2 August statement issued by the press office of the socialist EDEK Party]

[Text] Mitsotakis was invited to Cyprus at an inopportune time, before the Greek elections.

Cyprus Hellenism considers the brotherly Greek people to be their principal mainstay, and warmly welcomes their representatives. Unfortunately, however, Mitsotakis' record on the Cyprus problem has justifiably created uneasiness, and the people went to the airport to express this justified uneasiness.

We greet this decision of the people and consider it an honor to have participated in the expression of this uneasiness.

Irresponsible elements threw eggs at Mitsotakis' car, something we condemn. At the same time, however, we stress that genuine manifestations of uneasiness, because of Mitsotakis' entire stance, were indispensable and necessary.

Even before starting an investigation, the police leadership attributed the incidents to EDEK followers.

The question arises: At whose suggestion was the "police" contention made?

And it is being ascertained that:

The "brain" behind the "police" contention has supplanted judicial authority and is secretly judging and sentencing citizens.

Following the advance condemnation, the police naturally confined their investigation to EDEK.

Certainly the police will be asked to justify their "contention" and the government its stance.

Through its position, the government's journalistic organ has precharted the stance of the police, despite the publication of photographs presenting a different picture.

The goal is to ease the people's justified uneasiness, both because of Mitsotakis' various statements and because of the official Cypriot side's stance, specifically on the secret--even from the National Council--contacts with Haig and Mitsotakis' inopportune invitation on the eve of elections in Greece, and Cyprus' resultant involvement in Greek affairs, perhaps owing to the fear that PASOK will assume power and will put an end to the secret NATO talks.

The government is exposed both because of the timing of the invitation and the handling of the entire issue. Following the government's stance, which tends to convert Cyprus into a police-party state, the citizens do not feel secure.

O AGON URGES UNIFIED GREEK POSITION ON CYPRUS

NC090906 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 4 Aug 81 p 1

["My Opinion" column by the observer: "Two Voices, Two Lines"]

[Excerpts] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis watched last Sunday (over Ethnarch Makarios' grave) the squabbles between the Cyprus state and the Cyprus church over the policy that should be followed on the national issue.

Moreover, he heard two voices, expressing two different lines, disputing over which is the correct course for the Cypriot people's salvation. Mr Mitsotakis heard the archbishop calling the intercommunal dialogue a "mockery" and demanding a revision of the struggle tactics. He also heard President Kiprianou defending the dialogue and saying that the government will continue with the dialogue until the last hope is exhausted.

Last Sunday, Mr Mitsotakis saw and heard a great deal; certainly, he must have realized much more and, as a result of the contacts he will have with party leaders, he will see most clearly that:

—Everybody here has his own line and policy on the Cyprus issue and his own "prescription for salvation," which is different in substance from the line and prescription of the others. Mr Mitsotakis will realize most clearly that everybody in Cyprus goes his own way and THERE IS NO COMMON LINE OR COMMON GOALS, NOR DO WE KNOW EXACTLY WHAT WE ASPIRE FOR. [all capitals denote boldface as published]

We say one thing and we mean another; we declare one thing and do something different. One cannot find two coinciding views. We say we want a substantive dialogue and yet we are conducting a parody of the dialogue. We say the dialogue should be abandoned, but we do not know what to substitute for it. We declare that only the United Nations and internationalization will save us, but we later ascertain with disappointment that resolutions and moral support cannot by themselves save us. We orient ourselves toward a militant struggle but, finally, we ascertain it will result in losing the whole of Cyprus.

Therefore, we believe that Greece's main and primary concern at this time is to assist and contribute toward an endeavor to chart a common line in Cyprus on the Cypriot issue.

Because the leadership here has refused to move in this direction, since it has shown indifference and underestimated this element, Greece should undertake the initiative. Greece should ignore any reaction and summon all the political leaders around the same table to try and agree on a common line on the national issue. Because, if there is no cmmon line or unity among the Greeks on the national issue, it is futile to expect that we will be able to make the necessary decisions to reach an agreement with the Turks....

GREEK EMBASSY CLARIFIES MITSOTAKIS-GOBBI MEETING

NC040927 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] The Embassy of Greece has issued the following statement in connection with the meeting held between Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus:

In order to put an end to relevant speculations, the Embassy of Greece would like to state categorically that Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' meeting with UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus Mr Gobbi, was arranged on 15 July at the request of Mr Gobbi. The fact that the meeting was not mentioned in the program for Mr Mitsotakis' visit--which, does not specify any private meetings of the foreign minister but only mentions the times of such meetings--is at the request of the organizers, to enable as much flexibility as possible for the program so as to satisfy more requests for meetings.

I SIMERINI SAYS TURKISH PROPOSALS RELEASED

NC020924 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 2 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] According to information received by the I SIMERINI correspondent in New York, the Turkish side's proposals are already ready and have been given to UN Secretary General Waldheim, the U.S. administration and the governments of the guarantor forces, Greece and Britain.

The Turkish proposals are expected to be released to the Greek Cypriot side on Wednesday, 5 August. However, it has not been ruled out that Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who arrived in Cyprus the day before yesterday, will preliminarily brief the Cyprus Government on the content of the Turkish side's proposals. Moreover, according to information from diplomatic circles, Mr Mitsotakis' visit to Nicosia is directly related to the issue of the Turkish proposals.

These sources assess that this is evident by the fact that Mr Mitsotakis is being accompanied by a group of high Foreign Ministry functionaries responsible for Cyprus affairs.

Meanwhile, both the United Nations and the others that were notified of the Turkish side's proposals describe these proposals as "serious."

According to our New York correspondent, a UN representative stated privately to him: "The Cyprus Government must be careful not to adopt a negative stand, because this will hurt it diplomatically."

The UN representative further said that if the new effort to break the deadlock fails, then the Cyprus issue will enter a new, long-term deadlock and will be frozen.

ALITHIA BELIEVES ONLY WEST CAN HELP CYPRUS

NC030937 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 3 Aug 81 p 3

[From the "Judgments and Comments" column: "Will the Government Understand This?"

[Text] The fact that the Cyprus Government and specifically Rolandhis asked the United States to play a more active role in the Cyprus question was not to the communists' liking. They are besides themselves and screaming because they know very well that U.S. intervention can bring about positive results and prove in practice that the Western factor can help in the settlement of the Cyprus problem, if we ask it to, as opposed to Moscow which gives us help and support only in words.

Now the question is: Will the government understand that Cyprus' true interest dictates a change in our foreign policy and our turn to the West and that in serving this interest it should insist on Western intervention and ignore the croaking of the red frogs which is so detrimental to the country?

CONTINUATION OF NEW DEMOCRACY PROGRAM STATEMENT

Part Four

NC011600 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 24 Jul 81 p 5

[Part Four of New Democracy government program to be implemented in the next 4 years--all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 4. SECTORS: INDUSTRY, ENERGY, MINERAL WEALTH

A. INDUSTRY

The development of industry primarily belongs to private initiative.

This philosophy is expressed by the policy that is being followed by the government as well as by the policy that has been planned by New Democracy for implementation in the coming years. As much as is possible, industrial development must be left to the private sector, and the greatest possible use of resources for investments in the industry, particularly small- and medium-sized enterprises, must be pursued. This is because freedom of the individual is broadened through the free economy system and a better return is achieved. The state's active intervention takes place, and it is imperative that it must take place, in those isolated cases where the private initiative is absent or insufficient, or in cases where favorable conditions--the foundation--for the sector's development must be created.

New Democracy has not left these principles as a document devoid of content. It has promoted them for implementation. The laws on incentives (since 1976 and after), the activation of investing organizations and the implementation of other institutional and administrative measures, mobilize the sector (by securing work for tens of thousands of people, saving foreign exchange and so forth) despite some stagnation in investments. If this stagnation in investments continues, it will lead to decline and downgrading of production with aftereffects on the employment sector. The results would be painful if development laws were not implemented, laws which were to lead simultaneously to decentralization and regional development. It is characteristic to note that there are signs of "fatigue" (because of generally unfavorable economic conditions in the international field and for other reasons, even reasons within the enterprises themselves) in old family industrial enterprises in Attiki. On the other hand, enough potential is noted in the new industrial areas of the country that have been established as a result of the incentives for regional development.

In order to continue and step up industrial development on a healthy foundation, in addition to the complex of measures already in operation, New Democracy has defined the basic directives of the policy which it will implement in this field during the coming years as follows:

From the viewpoint of infrastructure, the ETVA [Hellenic Industrial Development Bank] program for industrial regions (nine such regions are already operating) will be continued at a decisive and faster pace compared to the past. Gradually, a considerable number of industrial regions will be put into operation; the ones which are already full will be expanded wherever possible.

Moreover, a sales network for foreign markets will be organized to assist exports, while joint warehouses will be established in foreign countries to store exportable products.

From the point of view of state initiatives, state activities will be solely limited to those fields where the dangers and the great size of investments surpass the possibilities of private initiative; the efforts already taking place shall be continued.

Specifically, there will be intensification of the efforts for research of the country's subterranean wealth; this could lead to the establishment of new industries or the discovery of more oil deposits; there will be promotion of the procedure for the further manning and development of defense industries which serve the basic goal of maintaining the country's defense capability and at the same time save valuable foreign exchange resources by replacing imports and by creating important prospects for exports for which provision is made by the programs of ETVA and ELEVME [Greek Industrial and Mining Investments Company] (petrochemical, metallurgical and so forth).

The above new aims also serve the goal for the development of high technology industries in our country. Such a development will gradually reduce the dependence of Greek industry on foreign industry in the field of technology and will correspondingly create opportunities for the export of technology from our country to third countries. In order to strengthen this possibility, strong incentives have already been approved and will be implemented for the development of applied research in Greek industry.

In connection with the reformation of the monetary-economic, administrative and business structures of our industry, it has been decided to create a special system to assist those (problematic) industries which are faced with monetary-economic problems, and thus strengthen the basis of their capital and reduce monetary-economic expenses. Beyond all this, the necessary incentives will be created to achieve the following goals that would improve the financing of industrial enterprises:

1. Specifically, the government will revise the law on the merging of industrial enterprises to broaden existing incentives, particularly for the establishment of major units.

2. The government will encourage, as much as possible, the establishment of joint enterprises with multiple effect; strengthen the capital position of the enterprises, secure the conveyance of technology under favorable conditions and the opening of new markets.

On of the most important factors for the reformation of our system of finance is the money market. Every effort will be exerted to develop a healthy money market; thus, law 876/78, which has not yet been effective because its implementation coincided with a period of strong anti-inflationary policy, will be strengthened. By drawing capital from the money market, we will both achieve financing benefits, and also effect substantive administrative changes, such as the creation of capable cadres for the administration of enterprises, particularly for administrations that do not control the majority of shareholders.

This New Democracy policy steadily leads the industry to the hands of private initiative. It strengthens the industry and precludes "socialization" which is imminent from elsewhere. This most clear policy is mutually supplemented by law 1116/81 which, among other things, directly finances the enterprise which wants to invest as much as 60 percent of the total value of the investment.

B. ENERGY

The securing of the necessary quantities of energy at the lowest social cost, so that the country's rapid economic development will not be interrupted, will continue to be the basic goal of the New Democracy energy policy for the next 4 years. To implement this goal, plans have been prepared to carry out the following in the following fields:

Oil Policy:

By 1984 additions and improvements to the state oil refinery will be completed. Thus, the state oil refinery will be internationally competitive. At the same time, there will be further decrease of lead in the gas and of sulphur in diesel oil. Sufficiency in oil products has been fully secured by means of interstate or other agreements which have been signed, as well as because of our excellent relations with the Arab states.

Local Energy Resources;

The mere fact that 500 billion drachmas will be invested during the 1980-1989 period for the construction of new stations operating on lignite and of new hydroelectric stations reflects the magnitude of the work being carried out to further utilize our own energy resources. Analytically:

1. Lignite: the use of lignite for the production of electric power will rapidly increase during the 1980s. It is expected that the annual output of lignite will reach 75 million tons as compared to about 20 million tons in 1980.

Thus: By 1990 the total power of stations operating on lignite will be tripled. The contribution of lignite to the production of electric power will exceed 76 percent by 1990, as compared to 46 percent in 1980.

Along with this, plans are being prepared to utilize small lignite deposits for other uses of lignite (central heating systems in small cities, supply of plants and so forth).

2. Waterfalls: During the next 10 years, 26 new hydroelectric units will be put into operation and thus the total power of these units will be more than doubled. With the construction of these projects, agricultural economy will benefit considerably, since 4,340,000 donums of land will brought under irrigation by 1990, compared to 860,00 donums in 1980.

3. Oil: All necessary credits will be provided to intensify the suberranean exploration for oil deposits by the DEP [Public Petroleum Corporation] itself or in cooperation with foreign firms.

4. Other forms of energy; Geothermal electric power stations will be established on the island of Milos. The research for the location of geothermal fields will be intensified (Lesvos, Evvoia, Macedonia and so forth).

The installation of solar collectors will be expanded so that by 1985 we shall be able to meet 2 percent of our energy needs through the use of solar collectors. Thus, improvement of the necessary incentives is being considered. Research program for the use of wind energy will be developed to establish units at Cyclandes.

The completion of research work where promising radioactive metalliferous deposits have been noted in Macedonia and Thrace will make clear the exploitation of the deposits; however, the commencement of their exploitation will depend on the decision to establish nuclear stations. In any case, research work will be carried out in both central and southern Greece to locate similar deposits. The final decision to introduce coal and nuclear energy as medium-term substitutes for oil will be made without delay, but not lightly, and after weighing Greek and international factors and in accordance with the country's interests.

The removal of the natural gas plant from the center of Athens and the establishment at the Aspropirgos oil refinery of units for the production of city gas from naptha, along with the compulsory installation of networks in the new buildings to be constructed, will decisively contribute to the combating of environmental pollution and at reducing the use of other forms of energy. Whether natural gas will be introduced, or not, will depend on the development of the question of international prices.

Saving energy: In view of the fact that in the long run the energy crisis will become more acute, it is necessary to continue the drive to save energy. Thus, the following will be pursued: recycling of energy; utilization of the cheapest form for every use; introduction of new technology to improve the degree of performance and systematic maintenance of energy consuming machinery and installations.

The policy for the next 4 years in the field of energy is a continuation of the one which has been recently defined and which has resulted in limiting to as little as possible the consequences from the international oil crises. The consequences from these oil crises would have been disastrous if measures were not taken during the 1975-1980 period. These measures were the following:

The modernization of the state refinery.
The revision of agreements.
Further utilization of lignite deposits.
The operation of six new hydroelectric stations and the planning of others.
The introduction of mild forms of energy (such as solar energy collectors).
The pumping of the Thasos oil, following the improvement and revision of the pertinent agreements. The Thasos deposit will meet 13 percent of our oil needs, while research work is continuing in various parts of the sea and the land; credits spent for this purpose solely during 1980 total 2.6 billion drachmas.

C. MINERAL WEALTH

There cannot be rapid economic development of the country without the proper utilization of the natural resources. Precisely for this reason, the New Democracy governments have proceeded both with the strengthening of the programs for the extraction of ores and minerals, and with the development of industrial units for concentrates and for the metallurgical processing of the extracted raw material. Thus:

The mine and the plant for the production of asbestos fibers was inaugurated (April 1981) at Kozani with the total investment of 3.5 billion drachmas. The foreign exchange benefit to the country as a result of the operation of this plant will exceed $65 million per year. The foundation stone for the ferrochrome plant at Almiron, Magnisia, was laid (March 1981), with a total investment of 3 billion drachmas. The plant will become operational in 1984 and will utilize the chrome deposits at Vourinos, Kozani.

A metallurgical complex is about to be built in eastern Macedonia to utilize the deposits of lead and zinc found at Evros, Kilkis and Thasos. A sulphuric acid plant and a unit for valuable metals (gold and silver) will be included in this complex. The total amount of investments is 15 billion drachmas.

A study is being prepared for the establishment of an alumina plant with an annual capacity of 1 million tons to utilize the large deposits of bauxite in the country. A semi-industrial unit will be established at Epirus for phosphorite concentrates. A unit for iron ore concentrates is planned at Serifos.

At the same time, the research to locate new deposits and to increase the potential of the ones already known is being intensified. It is worth noting that during 1980, 861 million drachmas in credits were spent solely through the Institute for Geological and Mineral Research, as compared to 54 million drachmas in 1974; a total of 64,000 meters of borings were carried out in 1980 as compared to 7,280 in 1974. The state and quasi-state organizations which have been established to utilize the mineral wealth have studied and have been carrying out investment programs the cost of which exceeds 20 billion drachmas.

For the 1982-1985 period, New Democracy has prepared an ambitious program for intensive mineral research that will absorb an average of 2.5 billion drachmas per year. This amount does not include the equally important expenditure for oil research. Borings will exceed an average of 100,000 meters every year. As a result of this research, which is taking place throughout the country, it will become possible to establish the exploitation feasibility of various minerals, such as gold, copper and so forth, and to locate new deposits (such as lead, asbestos, phosphorite). One should note in the research field the activities being planned by DEP [Public Petroleum Corporation] (research for oil), by DEI [Public Power Corporation] (research for new lignite deposits and geothermal fields); and by EEAE [Greek Atomic Energy Committee] to locate radioactive minerals.

[Text] 5. SECTORS: FINANCING-TRADE

A. FINANCING

New Democracy's basic goal in the financing sector is to set it free from all detailed controls and regulations by the monetary committee. At the same time, the sector's adjustment to the principles of a free democratic economy will be completed. The measures for this adjustment have been studied, in fact, in detail. The implementation of this policy has been announced through the policy statements of the current government, but, as has already been stressed, its complete implementation will be made as soon as economic conditions permit. Specifically:

1. In addition to bank financing, other forms of financing will be developed, and competition in the banking sector will be strengthened through the development of more banks of various forms and specialities.

This means that every Greek will have the right to obtain credit financing, and, at the same time, he will be able to choose among various institutions and forms of financing.

2. Current restrictions for the financing of certain activities will be abolished. By inference, all legitimate economic activities are considered productive, and they will be financed within the limits of the credit expansion specified by the monetary authorities.

3. The financing of the activities of the state and of public enterprises will be guaranteed, but not through the compulsory redistribution of financing resources.

These activities will be sufficiently financed, either by special credit organizations or by the special money market in which the state, public enterprises, credit institutions and any other organization will dispose their shares of various forms.

4. Interest rates will be freed and other restrictions on our banking system will be abolished.

The role of the monetary authorities will be limited to the supervision and control of the economy's general fluidity, the establishment of regulations that will guarantee the credit worthiness of banks and other credit organizations, and the more general supervision of the money market's operation, so that the interests of both depositors and borrowers can be absolutely guaranteed. Monetary authorities will give special care to the guarantee of competitive conditions in our financing system.

Within the new system and under the pressure of competition, banks will have the facility to exercise true bank credit, that is, negotiate with their clients conditions for loans and rely on the evaluation of the work's productivity and not on real collateral.

5. The financing of agriculture will be guaranteed through specific measures.

Through the transformation of the agricultural bank into a credit agent, in which cooperatives will in fact participate, credit facilities provided by the EEC will be better exploited, and through the bank's appropriate reorganization, an effective and low interest financing will be offered to farmers. Within the framework of the new system, farmers will be able to receive financing freely from other banks.

6. Great facility will be given to the financing of small- and medium-sized businesses under favorable conditions.

For this purpose a special financing organization will be established which will deal with:

--The long-term financing of small businesses with sufficient capital and favorable confitions.

--The granting of technical and organizational help and information on all aspects of its activity.

--The organizing and economic strengthening of supply and export joint ventures by small- and medium-sized enterprises.

--The construction of multistory buildings which will be leased or sold under favorable terms to small- and medium-sized businesses.

--The financing of small- and medium-sized businesses for the leasing of modern capital equipment.

At the same time, all banks in general will deal with the financing of artisans and small- and medium-sized businesses and it is envisaged that they will organize special branches or special services whose exclusive task will be to serve artisans' credit needs.

7. Housing credit will be expanded.

In this connection it is envisaged that housing credit will also be exercised by the existing investment banks or those that will be established. The financing of this sector will also be based on the issuance of special property bonds and on the establishment of mutual funds for land. Plans for these innovations are already ready and will be implemented as soon as the necessary legal arrangements have been made.

8. Consumer credit will be increased.

To serve consumers, consumer credit will be substantively expanded and generalized through various systems so consumers may be supplied with more goods without becoming the objects of exploitation. Thus, many parasitic and paramonetary circuits operating on the economy's fringes will be eliminated. Specifically, the installment system of sales and the system of credit cards, which will be issued both by credit institutions and by businesses, will be generalized and an impetus will be given to the development of new forms of consumer credit.

9. A comfortable financing of exports will be guaranteed.

Plans have been made to reorganize radically the system for the financing of exports so that it may be adjusted to the new economic conditions. Emphasis will be given to the true financing of exports, that is to the granting of export credits, which also constitute a strong means for the promotion of Greek exports, while the financing system will enter a new framework. In the first stage, a system will come into force for export credits that will be similar to those in force for small businesses, which will be fed by special attachments on bank deposits. To promote exports and especially to support the activity of technical companies abroad, the institution of the capital for the guarantee and promotion of exports will be expanded and reorganized to make it an effective and flexible organ for the promotion of our exports and their insurance against political and other dangers.

10. Foreign exchange restrictions will be eliminated.

In the foreign exchange sector, Greece's integration to the European monetary system will be promoted, something that entails significant advantages, since it has been proven in practice that the drachma has been effectively linked to the European monetary unit. At the same time, the abolition of all foreign exchange restrictions will be promoted so that the influx of capital may be significantly enhanced and Greece may develop into a regional EEC center for brilliant financing in the Middle East area.

11. The capital market will be activated.

In the capital market sector the incentives, which were established through the special law enacted in 1978, despite the fact that they are considered satisfactory, did not function effectively because the rise in the interest rates for deposits, which are tax free, to levels that are unprecedented for our country, almost exclude investment in shares. It is believed, however, that when interest rates return to more normal levels, the incentives will again function and the capital market will be strengthened.

Through the above measures, the Greek economy will acquire a sound system of circulation with many arteries and with a variety of blood infusions.

The effort for the improvement and reform of our banking system began after the change in regime, and thus far several institutional and administrative changes have been made. These include the establishment of an intrabank money market; the setting free of interest rates and other deposits in foreign exchange; the issuance of bank bonds; the linking of the drachma with the European accounting unit; the negotiation of the drachma at the Paris exchange; the operation of an intrabank market for foreign exchange; the simplification of procedures for the opening of banks' and the increase in credits for housing, exports, small businesses, agriculture and investment.

TRADE-DISTRIBUTION

The restoration of conditions that will allow the unimpeded operation of market forces and the creation of rational systems for distribution and trade constitute the basic direction of government policy in the trade sector. It is a policy that has begun being implemented and will be completed in the coming period.

The implementation and promotion of this policy will be based on the following measures:

--The strengthening of the financing incentives for the unification of mercantile enterprises and their completion through tax incentives and other institutional measures that will guarantee the establishment of large mercantile units.

--The strengthening, with similar measures, of the establishment of supply and consumer cooperatives.

--The enactment of special incentives and a new institutional framework for the development of trading companies [last two words printed in English] which will operate principally in international trade and will specifically promote Greek exports.

--The creation of a complete and rational system for the distribution and trade of agricultural produce. The first step in the creation of this system will be the establishment of eight local markets that will come into operation very soon. In these markets, the producers will be able to bring and sell their produce directly to wholesale merchants. The program will be completed through other special measures which will promote the standardization and packing of agricultural produce as well as its advertising.

--The reorganization of the operation of central markets for wholesale trade in large consumer centers so that the establishments of monopolistic situations inside them can be precluded.

--The strengthening and expansion of the institution of people's markets.

It should be stressed that all these measures have already been studied and are either on the way toward implementation or the necessary preliminary preparation, and the relevant draft bills are ready for advancement in the near future.

In addition to the above-mentioned institutional measures, the New Democracy government will immediately complete the liberation of the market from the remaining controls after it has replaced the necessary organs, which influence the market, with controlled imports or other economic measures of intervention for the consumers' protection. The market forces will operate freely and trade will be controlled only in order to avoid excessive profits in instances where oligopolistic and monopolistic situations create such temptations.

In what specifically concerns this point, New Democracy has already created the necessary institutional framework and the state services which supervise the creation of monopolistic situations and intervene with very strict sanctions wherever such phenomena appear. Trade is a vital operation for the economy and inside it the merchant the producer and the consumer must have the feeling of just treatment.

However, an indispensable element for the existence of these prerequisites is freedom of the market. It is not possible to have lower prices through state control over trade and even worse through nationalization or "socialization." Trade is the specific sector in which it is necessary for market forces to operate unhindered to close the gap between the producer's price and the price the consumer pays. The state's role should be limited to the guarantee of competition and to the aiding of the cooperative movement so that it may play an active role in the distribution and trade of agricultural produce.

Currently in Greece a large gap exists between the prices the producer enjoys and those paid by the consumer both for agricultural produce and for industrial products. In addition to other things, this phenomenon is due to the excessive number of shops (we have as many shops as Britain whose population is five times and national income eight times larger) in conjunction with the small size of commercial units and the system of administrative interventions by the state. Consequently, since administrative interventions are already being restricted within the framework of the policy for the liberation of market forces (without abandoning the consumer's protection), and the measures which have been planned for the creation of large and competitive forces are being promoted toward implementation, the gap in prices between producer and consumer will be limited to the internationally accepted standards.

GUNAYDIN DETAILS PROPOSALS FOR CYPRUS TALKS

NC011230 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 25 Jul 81 pp 4, 8

[Resat Akar report]

[Text] It is now certain that the intercommunal talks intended to seek a solution to the Cyprus issue will gain impetus and that the parties concerned will submit new proposals in August. It is reported that the Western powers, which favor an immediate settlement of the Cyprus issue in view of the serious development in the Middle East, are bringing pressue to bear on the Turkish and Greek leadership. It is also reported that for the first time the Greek Government has been putting extremely heavy pressure on Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou.

On the other hand, it is persistently rumored that Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who will be visiting the Greek Cypriot sector at the beginning of August, and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen, who is expected to visit the island some time during the same period, will hold a meeting at the Ledra Palace and discuss the final form of the proposals. It is alleged that importance is being particularly attached to the territorial proposals that the Turkish side is submitting as part of a package deal, that the touristic section of Varosha will be opened to settlement under the surveillance of the United Nations and that about 30,000 Greek Cypriots will be allowed to settle in areas where border adjustments will be made. It is thus thought that the Turkish Cypriots will be allowed to retain only 32 percent of the land. It is further reported that the proposals package to be submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side includes the following demands. A biregional federation is to be established.

The security of the Turkish Cypriot community will be guaranteed and the Turkish Cypriot community will be administered by the Turkish Cypriot administration and the Greek Cypriot community will be administered by the Greek Cypriot administration. The question of freedom of movement will be discussed at a future date.

The "equal" rights and powers of the Turkish Cypriot community will be recognized in the federal government to be formed. The economic embargo being imposed on the Turkish Cypriot people will be lifted. The Turkish Cypriot community will benefit from foreign aid. The Nicosia international airport will be run jointly.

The Turkish Cypriot community's security will be guaranteed by the Turkish fatherland. It has also been learned that the proposals to be submitted by the Greek Cypriot side will insist on freedom of movement and that they stipulate that the Turkish Cypriot side should retain only 28 percent of the island.

TERCUMAN CRITICIZES SECURITY COUNCIL'S SECRECY

NC011148 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 30 Jul 81 pp 1, 14

[Editorial by Nazli Ilicak: "A General Appraisal..."]

[Excerpts] The legal reforms undertaken since 12 September are being carried out in strict secrecy. Newsmen are exerting great efforts to obtain some information concerning "the universities law," "the associations law," "the trade unions law" and other laws, but most of the information appearing in the press is incomplete and inaccurate. It would be extremely gratifying if all problems could be discussed comprehensively without having to face faits accomplis. For instance, the use of the Turkish Radio and Television Network for this purpose would be very appropriate.

However, the principle of secrecy has been chosen. Ministries draft laws on which the National Security Council Secretariat may hold different views, in which case the draft is amended by the Secretariat. Then the matter is again referred to the Security Council and certain sections are reviewed. While all this is being done, we have to act as mere onlookers.

A consultative assembly allowing publicity for discussions could throw some light on the issues and enable the masses to watch events from close quarters. This would be a significant step on the path to democracy. The accumulation of the pre-12 September events compel the administrators to restrict rights in various fields. But as we have already stated, failure to discuss issues adequately because of adherence to the "principles of discretion and secrecy," hinders the softening of the reaction to conform to the realities of Turkey. The legal order of Turkey is probably being reconstructed, but several groups are unfortunately being excluded from these efforts. They are being treated as mere onlookers.

VOTCP ON PRESS REPORTS OF COMMUNIST ARRESTS

TA010831 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 1 Aug 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] Dear listeners, lately the extremist reactionaries have intensified their aggressive campaign against the democratic and progressive forces. Reports by reactionary press organs claim that 2,000 progressives and antifascists have been arrested in the last 6 months. As part of an extensive slander campaign, the reactionary press organs identify those arrested as the members of the Turkish Communist Party. Their aim in doing so is to accuse them of illegality and to facilitate their conviction. Heavy torture has been used to force the arrested democrats to sign false confessions to being communists.

It will be remembered that not long ago a progressive patriot, who committed suicide in Golcuk, wrote in a letter he left that he had been forced under torture to sign false declarations and that others were being submitted to the same ordeal.

What are the reasons that have led to the intensification of this slander campaign? One reason is that the day of the trial against the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] members is approaching, and the office of the military prosecution has found out that the NAP committed all its murders hiding behind the lie of the communist threat, preparing for an armed uprising. The lie of 2,000 communists being arrested and the demand by Takkeci, the military prosecutor and a mafia man for the death sentence of 52 Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions officials are efforts to prepare the grounds for the defense of murders committed by the NAP and to save the chief murderer Turkes and his accomplices from the gallows.

Another reason for the intensification of the campaign of pressure and blackmail is that the U.S. imperialists are attempting to transform our country into a tool of their adventurous foreign policies in order to use it as a base of aggression against the socialist countries and the neighboring Arab countries.

During his visit to Ankara, Komer, a CIA agent, exerted efforts overtly in a bid to transform hostility against the Soviet Union into official foreign policy and to portray the Soviet Union as the supporter of terrorism. All these statements were published in the bourgeois press organs.

It is as a result of all this--encouraged by the Pentagon--that the extremist reactionaries began their aggressive campaign against the democratic forces. In a bid to find false evidence for the Pentagon lies of Soviet support to terrorism and for stories told by CIA agents, thousands of persons are being subjected to torture.

An end must be put immediately to this crusade organized against the democratic forces; tortures must stop, and the thousands of countrymen being detained for no reason at all must be released. In a bid to intimidate the democratic forces, the reactionaries are openly proclaiming before the public that 2,000 persons have been arrested for being communists. However, just because of this, the progressives, democrats and decent and just people should not keep quiet in the face of this insolence. To express its solidarity with all detained antifascists and democrats and to resist pressures and aggressions is the unquestionable and major task of the democratic forces.

TCP'S BILEN GREETS BULGARIAN COMMUNIST PARTY

TA040728 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Congratulatory message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to Bulgarian Communist Party Central Committee on the latter's 90th anniversary]

[Text] Dear comrades: On behalf of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee, all Turkish Communists and our country's working class, I would like to send my revolutionary struggle greetings and my congratulations to the Bulgarian Communist Party [BCP] on its 90th anniversary. The BCP, which is the continuation of the old Social Democratic Party, has played a leading role in glorious and difficult struggles that brought the Bulgarian toilers and people to their present position. Today the Bulgarian people still cherish the ideas and principles of people like Dimitur Blagoev and Georgi Dimitrov.

Our country's working class, its peace-loving and democratic forces, are pleased to observe the neighboring Bulgarian people's achievements on the path of socialism. They highly appreciate the efforts exerted by the People's Republic of Bulgaria for international peace and cooperation in the Balkans and Europe.

The TCP attributes great importance to the promotion of friendly relations and cooperation between Turkey and Bulgaria. The links between the TCP and the BCP develop within the framework of principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

We wish the 90th year of the BCP to be a year of further gains in the cause of peace and socialism and of further advancement in the building of a developed socialist society. With our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilan [dated] 3 August 1981

GENSCHER REJECTS USSR CRITICISM ON DISARMAMENT

LD041634 Hamburg DPA in German 1522 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Bonn/Moscow, 4 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has emphatically rejected the latest Soviet criticism of the Western attitude to disarmament negotiations. A Bonn Foreign Office spokesman said today that this criticism shows once again "the frantic Soviet efforts to sow mistrust between the European NATO partners and the United States." If the Soviet Union wants to make a contribution, it "had better stop its medium-range weapons buildup against West Europe and reduce it instead of engaging in polemics."

This morning, the TASS agency said that the U.S. Government and NATO only seem to be prepared for negotiations with the Soviet Union in order to "break" the "surge" of protests in Europe against the deployment of American medium-range weapons.

PRESS ON U.S. VIEW OF DEFENSE CUTS, DOLLAR SURGE

DW041024 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 4 Aug 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG editorializes: An old conflict has erupted again between Bonn and Washington: U.S. concern about the German defense efforts is conveyed to the Federal Government in rather blunt terms. Bonn may justly be amazed at the forms in which this is done but not so much at the contents because the coalition is perfectly aware that by its decisions on the increase in the defense budget, it is lagging behind the growth rate of a real 3 percent promised in 1978. Yet, the Federal Government has good reasons for its decision. One should not make it too easy for oneself by immediately deducing a decrease in defense capability from the moderate growth rate now envisaged. After all, not all expenditures for the Bundeswehr ultimately are a contribution toward defense. Apart from that, Bonn has long been the model child in the alliance without this having any exemplifying effects on the rest of the partners. The Federal Government need not be distracted from its course by the U.S. criticism thus far.

RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf stresses: The U.S. haste is not in keeping with the German yardstick. During the past few years, the buildup and the improvement of the Bundeswehr has been continued with a high financial expenditure whereas the United States is just past a shocking reduction of its armed forces combined with a tangible quality loss in the individual branches of service. The United States is in the process of correcting past mistakes. The Bonn budget for 1982 is not yet final. It will be necessary to do some reconsidering, despite all strong words uttered yesterday. But, what can be railroaded through parliament with respect to external security in view of the basic feelings prevalent in the biggest government party? This is the crux of the matter.

The editorial of FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU says: To anybody staring as intensely on military growth rates as does the U.S. Government, Bonn's intention not to allow the FRG defense budget to grow without limitation must appear like treason. But experience teaches that the defense budget, like all budgets, contains some rotten wood that can be cutaway without any danger to defense. Still, behind all this is also a fundamental difference in social philosophy. The Federal Republic's austerity measures are an attempt to save in the most balanced way.

The U.S. Government in that respect makes it easier on itself. It can better afford to invest a lot of money in new armaments because it does not even pursue that budget balance. As a consequence, the social network in the United States, which is large-meshed anyway, will become even looser. Granted, we cannot prescribe to the Americans their social policy, yet we here in Europe at large, and in Germany in particular, should stick to a good tradition.

In conclusion, some editorial comment on the development of the dollar exchange rate: FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: The strength of the dollar has turned into a signal for the political assessment of the Reagan administration and for the steadfastness of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board with respect to stability policy. No matter what degree of skepticism toward Reagan's home economy might be indicated, at the moment, especially after the passage of the tax reduction schemes, the U.S. Government is accorded a good will bonus which finds expression in good assessment of the dollar in external economics. Beyond all financial causes of the movement of the exchange rate, this exchange rate also reflects the assessment of the policies of both the government and the Federal Reserve Board. It is not exaggerated to talk of a Reagan dollar.

MUENSTER WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN writes: Yesterday's dollar shock clearly shows how precisely the foreign exchange markets react to an overall political climate because the jump over the sound barrier of DM2.50 is attributable to two major causes: on the one hand, the strict Reagan policy strengthens worldwide confidence in the U.S. economy and, on the other hand, a strong currency always profits from crises in other countries--such as in Poland just now. There were times--albeit long ago--when the German mark also was traded in keeping with these criteria and counted among the world's strongest currencies. But ever since the record overall trade deficit, the record state indebtedness and last but not least the record interest rates resultant therefrom have pushed the former economy makers off their pedestals, the German mark is going downhill.

KIELER NACHRICHTEN comments: The experts widely disagree in their assessment of the increase in the exchange rate. They list many individual factors. They talk of super interest rates as well as of the crisis in and around Poland and of allies in Japan and the Federal Republic who are reluctant to live up to their defense tasks. Yet, political crises so far have always benefitted the material values. In the event of the danger of war, one bought gold instead of currencies. Why should this be different now? Without any proof, and based solely on a pure advance confidence bonus on the international level, the dollar must be considered overrated.

PAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. LAW OF SEA STANCE

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

DW041133 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 4 Aug 81 p 4

[Commentary signed HVB.: "Billions at the Sea Bottom"]

[Text] In Geneva, 163 nations are making a renewed effort to save what is perhaps the most important diplomatic treaty of the postwar era; it had been threatened with collapse in March by an abrupt change of stance on the part of Washington under the Reagan administration: the maritime international law for two-thirds of the terrestrial surface which is to replace 4 centuries of classical Law of the Sea. The Law of the Sea Conference had been expected in March to wind up its treaty after 8 years of negotiations when it was caught unaware by the U.S. announcement. Washington terminated the position adopted under four preceding presidents, desiring to review hundreds of clauses again.

What Reagan promised for the resumed round of conferences is mere consultations, not true negotiations. The background of these delaying tactics is rather transparent. An internal power struggle has not yet been settled. The core of the new Law of the Sea contains an element of dirigisme to which big U.S. corporations like Lockheed, U.S. Steel and Kennecott Copper have always raised objections. They want to reserve for themselves the extraction of the deep sea minerals with their billion dollar profits. The future of the treaty now depends on the strength which these private capitalist forces wield under Reagan.

The industrial nations led by the United States have granted to the developing countries a structure of partial dirigisme in the ownership of the sea treasures to be extracted, to obtain in return the rights of passage and overflight on a worldwide scale which are essential for the nuclear deterrence strategy of the Western superpower. This is also the reason why the Pentagon is bound to advocate a success of the Law of the Sea Conference, hence, what will be shining through in Geneva is the status of this paradoxical controversy between America's capitalists and military people.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

DW041151 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 4 Aug 81 p 9

[Commentary signed K.V.: "Troubled Law of the Sea Conference"]

[Text] Storm is threatening at the international Law of the Sea Conference which has been continued in Geneva this week. At this conference, the Third World is nervous and impatient because the new U.S. Government intends to review the existing text of the negotiations from top to bottom. Washington primarily objects to the evisaged regulations of dirigisme for deep sea mining. True to his economic policy, President Reagan demands as much private economic initiative as possible for the opening of the rich ore deposits at sea bottom as well.

The majority of the conference participants, in contrast, urges an international authority management. Entirely new forms of protectionism are to be tested because the raw material countries on the continent wish to be protected against maritime mining. Furthermore, a controlled economy is envisaged in such a way that the entrepreneurs and countries who have developed an efficient maritime technology are supposed to cede that technology at a discount rate. In that way, the legal claim of the developing countries to the forcible transfer of technology would be anchored for the first time. The right to property would be grossly disregarded by such an international convention.

So far, the Federal Government has opposed such a sea bottom regime to no avail. Now it has a strong ally: the United States. The developing countries are wrong if they believe that their salvation lies in economic dirigisme. They should allow themselves to be convinced that their demands for more equality of chances can be better fulfilled in a market-economy system--this applying to deep sea mining as well.

DIE WELT: U.S. COMBATS COMMUNISM AT DOORSTEP

[Manfred Beuber commentary: "At the Doorstep"]

[Text] The patience of the elephant does not last forever if he is tantalized to the quick by mosquitos--this is what Hemingway might state today in a parable on Cuba.

Under the heraldic figure of the Republicans, the United States no longer puts up with the harassments which are being intensified at the very time Moscow is accusing the United States of aggression and lacking receptiveness to talks everywhere.

The Reagan administration intends to show, at its own doorstep, how serious it is about containing communist influence in the world. Nicaragua is so painful that El Salvador must be saved under all circumstances. Washington no longer acts out of the defensive but now prepares in U.S. public opinion a political offensive against the subversive incubator Cuba.

The State Department is considering an intensification of Havana's boycott and a strengthening of the military presence in Florida and on the U.S. base of Guantanamo on Cuba. Other governments of the Western hemisphere are urged to again keep their distance from Cuba as Brazil has done already. Washington plans to counteract the deportation of criminals from Cuba to the United States by means of forcible repatriation; they have a "Radio Free Cuba" in mind and diplomatic initiatives aimed at causing the withdrawal of Cuba from Angola and other areas of intervention.

And they want to give exiled Cubans more rope. Brezhnev may well learn that his slogan of "peaceful coexistence" not preventing the support of "liberation movements" can work both ways.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR 'EVASIVE' ON ELYSEE MEETING

PM041354 Paris LE MONDE in French 2-3 Aug 81 p 14

[Text] Chervonenko, USSR ambassador to France, was evasive 31 July when he left the Elysee after his first meeting with Mitterrand since the latter's election.

"Our attention was focused on the question of security in Europe," the ambassador said. It is known that the Moscow press presently is leveling a growing number of criticisms at French policy on defense and security in Europe and especially at the statements made by External Relations Minister Cheysson who is accused of encouraging the arms race.

The ambassador evaded journalists' questions on a French-Soviet "crisis." "I am leaving," he said, "with the view that the president is concerned that the balance in Europe be maintained. I gathered that France will make efforts in this direction.... I am leaving the Elysee with the hope and even the assurance that the joint efforts of France and the USSR will contribute to solving the most acute problems in international life, although we have different viewpoints on some questions." However, Chervonenko did not specify which problems.

Asked whether France had modified its position on the balance of forces in Europe since Mitterrand has been in power, the ambassador replied that he had not observed any change. "That does not mean," he added, "that we must not seek a path toward balance."

Questioned on bilateral relations, Chervonenko said: "We must consider the way in which French-Soviet relations will develop now that the left is in power in France. It seems to me that the national interests of France and the Soviet Union will converge on the path of friendship and cooperation."

No plan for a summit meeting was mentioned, he said. "It will take time to plan some things," he said. "This subject will be discussed when the time is right."

Chervonenko specified that supplies of Soviet gas to France would be discussed at the next meeting of the French-Soviet grand commission in Moscow in November. "We hope that relations will expand since that corresponds to the national interests of France and the USSR," the ambassador concluded.

The Elysee has made no comment on this meeting.

L'HUMANITE REPORTS PCF MESSAGE TO PCE CONGRESS

PM041403 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] The PCF delegation, headed by Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz and comprising Central Committee member Jean-Claude Lefort and Roger Trugnan, had lunch with Santiago Carrillo on Wednesday afternoon. In the morning, the PCE congress heard the French Communists' message. Following are excerpts from it:

"Your congress is being held in a complex situation. Indeed, imperialism is trying to revive bloc politics, maintaining seats of tension and zones of war and making use of the arms race. In our view, this counteroffensive, which is also being waged inother spheres, still cannot disguise the world's evolution in favor of the social, national and human liberation forces. The scale of the peoples' struggle for peace and disarmament in particular bears witness to this. It is shown by the extent of the demonstrations and stances in many European countries against the decision to deploy new nuclear missiles on our continent and in favor of immediately opening negotiations on all medium-range missiles and the reduction of all armaments. In your country, it is seen in the people's opposition to Spain's entry into NATO."

After stressing the new situation created in France by the left's victory and the Communists' intention to work to successfully bring about the democratic change chosen by the French people, the message states: "Resolutely pursuing the strategy of our 22d and 23d congresses, we are struggling for a social transformation which will push democracy further forward than it has ever gone, to the stage of self-managing, democratic socialism. In our view, this choice constitutes the modern and realistic answer to the needs of French society. To this end, we are taking action to unite all the people's forces in struggle and union, drawing support from each step forward and progressing toward our objectives.... Ties of solidarity forged long ago exist between Spanish and French Communists. Our heartfelt wish which, we are convinced, reflects the wish and hopes of the workers and democrats in our countries is to strengthen them in mutual respect, in the interest of our two peoples, of peace, social progress and democracy."

TWO OF BANI-SADR ESCAPE CREW SEEK ASYLUM

[Text] Paris, 4 Aug (AFP)--Two of the four members of the air crew which flew former Iranian President Bani-Sadr to France have asked for political asylum, a reliable source said today.

No details about the men have been revealed. All that is known is that they have left Evreux, west of Paris, where their aircraft landed on 29 July, for an unknown destination. The other two crew members have asked to go back to Iran. They are now at the Iranian Embassy in Paris, the same source said. On their arrival the airmen told French authorities that they had been ordered to fly to France. They asked to go home as soon as possible.

The Boeing 707 which was used for Mr Bani-Sadr's escape is still standing on a runway at the air base, where a close watch is being kept on it.

The Iranian Embassy here later today denied that two of the four crew members who flew Mr Bani-Sadr to France were currently at the embassy. The embassy spokesman gave no further details on the whereabouts of the crew.

[Text] London, 4 Aug (MENA)--Today at about 1210 Cairo time, President as-Sadat held a news conference at the Egyptian Embassy in London where he replied to newsmen's questions.

Also attending the news conference were Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Minister of State for Presidential Affairs Mansur Hasan, Minister of State for Health Dr Mamduh Jabr and Egyptian Ambassador in Britain, Hasan Abu Sa'dah.

The president started the news conference, saying: In the name of God. I would like to say a few words before we begin. I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for the pleasant meeting with and the gracious invitation extended by the prime minister. I am grateful to the people of the United Kingdom.

I wanted to come here so I can express my gratitude to them for the understanding and sympathy expressed daily by them through the letters I receive in Cairo.

In addition to that, the queen has graciously asked me and my wife for lunch after our meeting here today. Therefore, I would like to express my deep gratitude to the queen, to the prime minister and the people of the United Kingdom. I also wish to thank you for coming here.

Question from a British journalist: Your talks referred to the EEC's initiative concerning the Middle East. What chance does this initiative have?

Answer: I visited the EEC Parliament last February and delivered a speech in the Parliament in which I asked that all the efforts exerted by the EEC and the United States be coordinated so as to make the Palestinians and the Israelis sit together and exchange mutual recognition at one and the same time.

This is the correct way to resolve the whole problem. Before I arrived here, a great event took place when a cease-fire was attained between the Israelis and the Palestinians for the first time in 48 years--when the state of Israel was established. This cease-fire has been attained through the United States and Saudi Arabia.

I consider this to be a turning point and I believe that the correct way is to build on this cease-fire the next step which I mentioned to the EEC Parliament, namely, mutual recognition between them. This will pave the way for the overall settlement we all desire.

Question from the BBC: What is the role that can be specifically played by Britain in this initiative?

Answer: I discussed this question yesterday with Prime Minister Thatcher and Lord Carrington. As you heard a short while ago, this time it is not only the United States that is required to exert the necessary efforts but the 10 EEC countries and Great Britain which will be heading the EEC for the next 6 months. When I met with Lord Carrington earlier this year, in January, he was already well informed of all details relating to this problem in addition to its vast dimensions. Therefore, it is a very fine thing that he will be heading the EEC for the next 6 months. As I told you, we have also studied the great event embodied by the attainment of the cease-fire, how it was attained as well as the possible alternatives that can be added to the peace process, namely, the United Kingdom, because not only are U.S. efforts required during the next phase but those of the EEC as well.

Question from the American television representative: It seems that Saudi Arabia will be a party to the Camp David accord. Am I correct, and will this suprise us in the coming months?

Answer: Until this moment they are against me and Camp David. However, what we have already ahcieved is what we are all seeking for the sake of peace. So I will frankly say in the United States that the step which has been reached, namely, the cease-fire, and the efforts made by Saudi Arabia enjoy our souport and should be supported by all of us, and we have to specify the coming stage, namely, mutual recognition.

Answering a question from a BBC correspondent on Begin's intransigence and his undermining of the peace efforts, President as-Sadat said: You are right in using the word "undermining", because this is what I mean. Three days after our meeting in Sharm Ash-Shaykh, the raid on the Iraqi nuclear reactor took place. Then came the raid on Beirut and the victims and the dead. All this was a tragic and sad act carried out by Israel. However, all this should not dishearten us. On the contrary, it should enhance the efforts to achieve peace. I believe that it has been proved now that the only alternative is peace.

Question: Will you pressure President Reagan to get him to condemn those Israeli actions and suspend the delivery of the F-16 aircraft to Israel?

Answer: I will discuss the problem and the entire peace process. I will leave it to him to choose the course of action. However, I will ask two things: First, that the United States continue to play the role of a full partner, as was the case during the term of President Carter. Second, that the time has come for the United States to change the conditions set for not contacting the PLO, conditions that Israel put in the second disengagement agreement. There is an important reason for this, namely, there is a cease-fire between the Israeli and Palestinian sides, although Begin insists that the cease-fire is not between him and the Palestinians but between him and the Lebanese. However, the essence is that there is a cease-fire between them and that it is logical for the United States to continue to contact the two sides.

Question: What is your chance in the United States of convincing President Reagan to open lines of communication with the PLO, and what about Israel's influence in Washington at the present time?

Answer: It is up to Reagan to choose the way. However, I have stated my opinion, which will reach him before my arrival there.

Question: The Israelis feel that Europe has taken an unsympathetic attitude toward Israel. These is also the fact that the PLO is continuing to practice terrorism, as well as the Soviet role of providing the PLO with many weapons?

Answer: In my opinion, the Israelis have no right to complain about the question of weapons because Israel is not only in a superior position but it is also fully armed. Israel has the most sophisticated weapons. However, when I ask the Europeans to join the United States in the coming step, I say that this is very important in order to give Israel security, not only from the United States but also from Europe, and remove its feeling of insecurity.

Question: By your request to Reagan to open lines of contact with the Palestinians--do you mean the PLO? And have you asked Britain to do the same?

Answer: Yes, the PLO must not be excluded. However, it is not the only party with which a dialogue must be held. I have informed Thatcher and Carrington of my views and I have left it up to them to decide.

Question: Some commentators have said that your meeting with Begin in Sharhm Ash-Shaykh before the Israeli elections helped him win the elections?

Answer: No, not at all, I did not help him and I did not aim to help him. He invited me to visit a part of my country, Sharhm Ash-Shaykh, which I had not seen before. You know there is a personal relationship between Begin and myself. I believe the election results are a proof of this because Begin lost the elections. In the previous elections he won 52 seats, while this time he won 48 seats. In the previous elections, the Israeli Labor Party won 42 seats, while this time it won 47 seats.

Question: Are the Americans reluctant about the EEC stand toward the Middle East? And will you convince Reagan of the usefulness of allowing the Europeans to participate in the peace process?

Answer: From what I know from my personal contacts, I do not subscribe to your view that the Americans want to exclude other efforts. On the contrary, from what I have learned about recent meetings, the United States welcomes any effort that is in line with the Camp David agreement. This is what I know and I believe it is correct.

Question: What is your view of Lord Carrington's proposals for conditional recognition of Israel by the Palestinians and does this mean the Palestinians of the PLO?

Answer: I do not want to involve myself in what the Palestinians say. All I can say is that a great event has taken place for the first time since 1948, which is the cease-fire between the Palestinians and Israel. The Palestinians say they will respect the cease-fire. The two sides must sit down together. This can take place through the United States or Saudi Arabia, which contacts the Palestinians and the Syrians, and through the United States, which contacts Israel. Let them arrive at this.

Question: Do you speak about the PLO specifically or about the Palestinians in general?

Answer: There is a resolution stipulating that the PLO is the sole representative of the Palestinians. However, when I visited Jerusalem I met at the Dome of the Rock with hundreds of Palestinian women who complained to me that for 10 years no one had cared about their suffering and that their husbands, brothers and sons were in Israeli prisons. In any case, the PLO is not the sole representative of the Palestinians. There are also the Palestinians who are living under the yoke of Israeli occupation.

Question: I would like to draw your attention to your other neighbor, Libya. What role is Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi playing at the present time?

Answer: You know that there were contacts initiated by Al-Qadhdhafi when I met with his cousin in my native village, Mil Abu al-Kawm, on Christmas. I then met again with his cousin in Paris during my visit to the European Parliament. A month ago, I received a message from Al-Qadhdhafi through a third party, a European head of state. In all these contacts, I explained my viewpoint to Al-Qadhdhafi. I clearly said that we are against his attempts in Chad. He sent me a recent message about the spheres of influence, but I totally rejected it.

Question: The autonomy talks on Gaza and the West Bank are currently suspended. Do you believe that you should go beyond the framework of the Camp David agreement to get these discussions resumed?

Answer: Let me tell you and my colleagues in the Arab world and Saudi Arabia, which I hail because it did the right thing regarding the cease-fire between the Palestinians and Israel and I hope it will do more for the sake of the question of peace, that the Saudis and the others rejected the Camp David accords even before reading their provisions. They started their opposition before accords were signed at the White House. They started their opposition when we returned to Washington from Camp David, even before the agreement was declared.

They are now talking about another initiative or another trend that they will support. I attach no importance to this. Quote me as saying that if there is an alternative to what we have committed ourselves--comprehensive peace--then I am ready to debate and approve it if it is proved that it will lead to comprehensive peace. But I say no to the mere demand of setting aside the Camp David agreement without an alternative to it. If there is something better than the Camp David agreement, then I will not object to it and I will declare my position. I sincerely declare that the Camp David agreement as a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel is the only reality prevailing in the region, where rapid changes have been taking place in the last few years.

The emirates in the Gulf, the problem of energy, the problems between the emirates and the United States, the Iranian revolution, the Iraqi-Iranian war, the Lebanese tragedy and what happened in Mecca constitute a big change, but the only prevailing reality is the Camp David agreement and the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel. If we cannot find anything better, then let us decide to stick to this.

President as-Sadat added: Time passes and the time factor should be taken into consideration. However, when facing a difficult problem like the one we are trying to solve--a complicated and difficult problem to this extent--I believe that we need patience and perseverance as we did following my visit to Jerusalem. Several campaigns were launched during the 10 months that followed my visit to Jerusalem and until the holding of the Camp David meeting. But in the end, we sat at Camp David and reached an agreement. The matter might need some time. This time, all Europe is with us and so is the United States.

Question: Since the autonomy talks will be resumed, could you, Mr President, tell us what is the major obstacle and how would you overcome it? What will take place after the final Israeli withdrawal from Sinai and how can an agreement on autonomy be reached?

Answer: As for the first part of your question, there is a gap between us on the interpretation of the provisions of the agreement or its framework, but I cannot declare this publicly. What I would like to say is that we have learned a very important lesson: Even when we differ, we should sit together to discuss our differences as civilized people.

As for the second part of the question, President as-Sadat said: Egypt has a historical role in the Arab and Islamic world. This does not mean that the final Israeli withdrawal next April will make us change our stands, adopt a hard line or return to the Arab slogans. Egypt will continue the way it is. There is no problem between me and Israel regarding Sinai or the final withdrawal. The problem relates to a comprehensive peace and the Palestinian question. We recently signed in London the agreement on the multinational force.

Our delegates, that is, the delegates of Egypt and Israel, will meet on 20 August to agree on the measures for the final withdrawal. There is no problem between Egypt and Israel, but we have a responsibility. It is our responsibility to achieve a comprehensive settlement and proceed in the right direction with the Palestinian question, through full autonomy which we agreed upon in the Camp David framework.

Question: What are the chances of changing UN resolution 242 and the role of the United Nations in the Middle East process"

Answer: I do not advise this at all because resolution 242 is the basis of the Camp David agreement. Why should we shake this basis now? We have gone past this resolution and the cease-fire between Israel and the Palestinians in a great achievement which has gone beyond this.

Concerning the mutual recognition between the Palestinians and the Israelis, his excellency said: I believe that if they continue, as I ask, to achieve the next important step, which is similtaneous mutual recongition, then they will reach the same conclusion we reached in the Camp David agreement. It would then be possible for the Palestinians and Israelis to sit together and this would be very good.

Question: Do you believe that Begin is prepared to reach a comprehensive settlement?

Answer: I cannot talk on behalf of my friend Menahem Begin, but I can say that we have committed ourselves to this and until now he has not retreated from this step between him and myself.

Question: Concerning Begin's establishment of more settlements and calling the West Bank Judea and Samaria, do you believe that there is any indication that Begin will change his mind?

Answer: Let me tell you that before my initiative in 1967, I visited Ceausescu in his capacity as my friend and the friend of Begin and asked him the following two questions: Is the man serious about achieving peace and is he strong enough to face the Knesset and Israeli public opinion? Ceausescu convinced me that the man was serious about achieving peace and that he was very strongf. He has actually proved this. Until something to the contrary happens, we will continue our efforts and will remain patient and perseverant.

Address to Egyptian Community

NC041956 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1630 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] London, 4 Aug (MENA)--President Muhammad Anwar as-Sadat has affirmed that with the October war, we proved ourselves and restored the world's confidence in us and our Arab nation, which they have classified as the sixth power.

Directing his comments to the Egyptian community in Britain and Ireland, President as-Sadat said: You have the great duty of bearing the trust and assuming the responsibility of completing Egypt's reconstruction with science and faith, so as to make up for what we have lost. We will build Egypt with only Egyptian hands. He added: Egypt is above everything. It is above parties, leaders, selfishness and rancor. Here follows the text of the president's address at the meeting:

In the name of God, brothers and sisters, the Egyptian family in Britain and Ireland: It gives me the greatest pleasure to meet with you here today and to bring you greetings from your kith and kin in Egypt, who are hopeful that you will carry out the task for which you have come here. You are aware that we are preoccuped with reconstruction, and we are almost starting from zero because in the past we lagged behind the technology of the world around us. We must make up for what was lacking in our ambitious programs and that is why your learning and knowledge of modern technology must be ambitious, in order to enable us to complete the programs we have started.

Your heard me say before that we will build Egypt only with Egyptians hands and that we do not need anyone from any country whatsoever. We do not need anyone from any country whatsoever to build our country. You also heard me say in my conversations with the Soviet leaders when I met with them four times in 1 year, I used to start by saying: I do not want any non-Egyptian soldiers to fight our battle. I have also said the same thing to the Americans. I have said that we do not want any foreign soldiers to fight our battle; we want arms only, and we will undertake to defend ourselves. The battle of reconstruction is no less significant, because in it the Egyptian man is aiming for his peace and security in the interest of, and for the whole of Egypt.

Your task is very great. You must return to us equipped with the most modern things of the world in order to make up for the backwardness we have lived in in the past. I fully support the son who spoke from Ireland about throwing light on all the issues of the hour. I want this session to be a dialogue instead of delivering of speeches. The dialogue might be more useful through the questions the sons will raise on the various stands or any stand that may not be completely clear. I fully believe this will be a better procedure. In conclusion, I hope you will return soon to us equipped with the weapons of science, because the state we are building is a state of science and faith.

Let us restore the trust to Egypt which is above everything, above parties, leaders, selfishness and rancor. More than this, may Egypt continue to exist--Egypt, which is working hard so that we will succeed in putting it in a position befitting it in today's world.

I thank God that the world, after the October war, got to know Egypt and fully appreciated all of Egypt's steps. I tell you that wherever I go, every person I meet volunteers to give us anything we ask for instead of the look of pity that used to be directed to us before. We have proved ourselves and we have regained the world's confidence in us and in our Arab nation, which they have classified as the sixth power. You have a big responsibility to perform: To bear the trust and the responsibility, because our generation has only a few years left and you have to assume the responsibility in order to complete the reconstruction and so that with science and faith you will build Egypt and make it dignified, proud and strong in today's world. Thank you.

The students then addressed questions to President as-Sadat. Zayn al-'Abidin ash'Sha'rawi, a student in the United Kingdom, asked: Two years after the Camp David agreement, what is your concept of the final stage of the agreement in light of the changes in Europe and the United States and before your visit to the United States, and your opinion of the changes between Israel and the Palestinian resistance?

The president answered: We signed the Camp David agreement, as you remember, in September 1978. They will be 3 years old in 2 months, and they are divided into two parts. The first part concerns Egypt and Israel and relations and peace between us. The second part concerns Palestinian autonomy. In implementation of the first part relating to Egypt and Israel, we regained 80 percent of Sinai in the first 6 months after the signing of the agreement and the treaty in March 1979. We will retrieve the remaining 20 percent next April. After we return from our tour, Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali will hold a meeting in Cairo to agree on the details of the final withdrawal, which will take place on 25 April 1982. Some might doubt that this issue is the subject of argument or discussion. The first part of the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel is proceeding very normally. Neither we nor Israel have any complaints at all. You have heard about the multinational force which will guard the borders between the two countries. The Israeli parliament has endorsed it and Reagan has sent it to the Congress and the Senate. We have sent it to the People's Assembly. It was approved by an overwhelming majority in Israel. There are no problems in this regard.

We are ready to discuss anything. The two sides are fulfilling all their commitments. In line with the political methods and concepts here, the Western world imagines that after Egypt takes over the second part of Sinai, we will either adopt a new stand and a hard line toward Israel or we will return to the Arabs and enter the Arab nation's whirlpool of Arab unanimity. Egypt's line and your line stems from Egypt. The final withdrawal from Sinai on 25 April will not change anything in Egypt's line. Egypt has an Arab and Islamic responsibility.

Therefore, the final withdrawal and the restoration of all of Sinai will not change Egypt's stand or make us adopt a hard line and return to the Arab slogans. Egypt has a historical Arab responsibility. I gave an example of this when I addressed the University of Alexandria. When the Arabs wanted to establish the Arab League, they went to King Faruq. He was not a progressive or favorite leader, but he represented Egypt. They could not establish the league before they all went to him and signed the agreement. Egypt will always be the one to make the decision.

Could anyone else have been able to nationalize the Suez Canal at a time when two great empires had emerged victorious from a war? When the United States insulted Egypt, the counteraction was not only an answer to the insult but it was a blow to imperialism as well.

The Arabs possess petroleum, but they only spoke about increasing production and prices after I adopted the decision to start the October war. The price of petroleum increased 11 fold, from $3 to $33. Who has been making the decisions since the days of Faruq and 'Abd an-Nasir? I adopted the war decision in April 1973 and I told Hafiz al-Asad in Burj al-'Arab in April 1973: If you don't enter the war in 1973, I will do so alone and I will not outbid you. Who adopts the fateful decisions? Egypt's responsibility will not end when all of Sinai is recovered. The problem ended when the Egyptian flag was raised in al-'Arish. A plane takes 25 minutes to cover the distance between Cairo and al-'Arish and only 7 minutes to cover the distance between al-'Arish and Lod Airport. Sinai has been restored and we do not have a problem. We are exercising our leading role without doing any wrong to anyone. The first part of the Camp David agreement has ended. Regarding the second part, which concerns autonomy, the Arabs began opposing it even before reading the Camp David accords. When we went to the White House to sign the accords, the opposition began. They have not read the contents of the Camp David accords. Some allege that we speak for the Palestinians, that we have undertaken their responsibility and are negotiating on their behalf. This is not true. Others say that we have assumed the role of the Arab nation to determine the fate of Palestine. Neither the one nor the other allegation is true.

The second part of the Camp David accord stipulates that the Israeli occupation will end after 5 years, that the Israeli military government will fall the day the results of the autonomy elections are announced, that Israeli civilian rule will end and that Israel will withdraw to positions of security and not occupation in the West Bank and Gaza sector. The Arab political prisoners will return to their relatives and the Palestinians will rule themselves for 5 years and will sit with Egypt, the United States, Israel and Jordan after 3 years to determine their future.

Instead of being permanent, the occupation is fixed by a 5-year transition period. Furthermore, when sitting with us after 3 years, the Palestinians will have the right to veto anything in the self-determination process that will be discussed later. Egypt does not speak about the Palestinian question nor on behalf of the Palestinians. No one has the right to do so. I stated at Camp David that not Carter, Begin, myself or Egypt have the right to determine anything for the Palestinians in their absence. We are ending the permanent occupation, and they have the right to oppose anything. We have never tackled the essence of the Palestinian question because no one other than the Palestinians has that right. I have not assumed the role of the Palestinians nor that of the Arab nation.

A very important event took place last week. A cease-fire was declared between Israel and the Palestinians for the first time since Israel's inception. The initiative was American and it was the Saudis who exerted the efforts. Let us be just. The Saudis are against us and they have not read the Camp David accords. They have been hard on us, but what happened last week is very significant. It is the first time since Israel's establishment that the Palestinians announced that they will accept a cease-fire and respect it.

This is the result achieved in the 3 years since the Camp David agreement was signed. The Arab nation is paralyzed and fragmented and Egypt, which they wanted to isolate, is the one to act. Yasir 'Arafat says he will respect the cease-fire. Saudi Arabia carried out its role. Our other brothers deal with the Palestinians and the Syrians in the way they understand--they provide the check. What happened last week is a glorious action and a turning point. I discussed it with Mrs Thatcher and Carrington. The almost impossible step has been taken. Let us proceed to the next step. Let the Palestinians assume their own issue. Let them come to al-'Arish with Israel and simultaneously declare mutual recognition. The door to a comprehensive settlement will be opened because the solution of the Palestinian problem will open the door to ending the entire Arab-Israeli conflict.

It does not embarrass me to say that the effort exerted by Saudi Arabia is one that no one else could have exerted. Let Saudi Arabia continue on that road so that they may embark on the second step--simultaneous mutual recognition between the two sides. Let the Palestinians then hold their own destiny in their hands, as the Algerians had done, and negotiate with the Israelis to take back their land and discuss their question. No one but the Palestinians can do this. We will not permit anyone to deal with the Palestinian question in their absence. This is the picture of the entire situation.

Departure for U.S.

NC041634 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1622 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] London, 4 Aug (MENA)--President Anwar as-Sadat and the delegation accompanying him left London for the United States at 1800 Cairo time, concluding a 2-day official visit to Britain.

During his visit, President as-Sadat held discussions with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, dined at the table of Queen Elizabeth of Britain, met with Egyptian students in London and held a news conference.

As-Sadat was seen off at the airport by the British foreign secretary's special representative, Edwin Arozmis, Egyptian Ambassador in London Hasan Abu Sa'dah, Egyptian Embassy staff and sons of the Egyptian community in London.

UK DECLARES SOVIET DIPLOMAT PERSONA NON GRATA

LD042148 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1901 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] London, 4 Aug (PA)--A Russian diplomat was today ordered out of Britain by the Foreign Office, who would not say whether it was in connection with espionage. Viktor Lazin, second secretary at the Soviet Embassy in London, has been declared "persona non grata" and given seven days to leave.

The Soviet charge d'affaires, Vladimir Keline, was summoned to the Foreign Office earlier today and told Lazin was engaged in "activities incompatible with his status as a diplomat."

Mr Lazin is the first Russian to be ordered out since 1971, when 105 officials went in a government showdown on spying and a ceiling of 47 was placed on embassy diplomatic staff. Then, Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home warned the Soviets that any future officials found involved in cloak and dagger work would lead to staff at the embassy being further reduced. The Foreign Office said in accordance with that policy the number of staff was now being reduced by one to 46.

A spokesman added: "We cannot comment further on the facts of the case."

There has so far been no response from the Russians but the Foreign Office said: "We hope they will not react in a way which may prejudice the development of our relations."

Mr Keline was seen by acting permanent under secretary at the Foreign Office, Sir Edward Youde, and the meeting was cordial and brief. Lazin, who sometimes spells his name Lazine, has been in Britain for four years. He is married and lives in an exclusive house owned by the embassy in Earl's Terrace, Kensington.

His job at the embassy is not detailed in the Foreign Office list of foreign diplomats in London. He is listed simply as a second secretary.

In the big clearout of spies from Britain in 1971, relations with Russia plunged to a icy low. A spokesman at the Soviet Embassy said "We cannot make any comments." But the Foreign Office is awaiting possible reprisals, such as tit-for-tat expulsion by the Soviets of a member of the British Embassy in Moscow.

Soviet Ambassador in London Mr Victor Popov is not in Britain at the moment, otherwise he would have been summoned to the Foreign Office to be given the news instead of his charge d'affaires.

SECRETARY OF STATE CITES ULSTER MAJORITY VIEWS

PM041546 Paris LE MONDE in French 2-3 Aug 81 p 2

[Henri Pierre interview with British Secretary of State for Northern Ireland Humphrey Atkins; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Why have the British, who succeeded in settling the difficult Rhodesia problem, still not found a solution for Northern Ireland?

[Answer] Because it is an entirely different problem...Some 60 years ago, 1.5 million inhabitants of Northern Ireland decided, by a substantial majority, to remain in the United Kingdom. The inhabitants in the southern part of the island think that Ireland should be a single political entity, hence, the remaining difficulties.

[Question] You seem to intend to revive the power sharing solution (sharing political and administrative power--LE MONDE note) which failed in 1974. Do you think that it has more chance of succeeding today?

[Answer] I don't know. In 1973, the government managed to convince the leaders of the Protestant majority of the need to share powers with the Catholic minority. Unfortunately, their troops opposed that. The experiment only lasted 6 months. It is possible that power-sharing was not acceptable in the form in which it was proposed in 1973 but that it might be acceptable in different forms.

Involving the Catholics in the Administration

[Question] Hasn't the time come to seek a solution which would take account of what is called the "Irish dimension?"

[Answer] No, because two-thirds of the inhabitants of Northern Ireland are passionately determined to remain in the United Kingdom. They will never agree to hand over power to what they rightly regard as a foreign country. But the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland should be able to reach a better understanding than in the past. That is why the London and Dublin prime ministers are holding regular meetings. But that in no way alters the essential fact that the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland do not want to join the republic. Democracy requires that we respect their view.

[Question] So you are maintaining a status quo which is not producing results and about which the Catholic minority is complaining?

[Answer] The status quo is what the majority wants and it is working well. The difficulty is that there are not enough locally elected representatives involved in running affairs. The minority complains that it has been excluded from power by a majority exercising its authority in an unjust way. I don't know whether that is true. At present, the British Government is directly running local administration and is doing so in a just way.

[Question] But doesn't the guarantee given to the Protestants that no constitutional change could be made without the population's approval amount to giving the majority the right of veto, enabling it to oppose any change?

[Answer] That guarantee, given and confirmed by all governments, is simply the right of peoples to self-determination. It would be undemocratic to disregard it. But we certainly do not want to restore the system of government which existed between 1921 and 1971, dominated by the Protestant majority, in which the minority had no chance of gaining power. That created problems and aroused a feeling of injustice. The government would like to find a way of involving Catholic representatives in the running of public affairs.

Bobby Sands' Election

[Question] With regard to the Belfast prisoners, international opinion thinks that the British have been intransigent. Wouldn't a little flexibility on their part have made it possible to avoid the present painful situation?

[Answer] In keeping with the recommendations of the Human Rights Commission in Strasbourg, we carried out 12 changes in the prison system last summer, improving the prisoners' living conditions. Not only did the protesters not take account of that, but they took a regressive step in starting the hunger strike. In what way have we been instransigent? The government is prepared to change the prison system still further, not under constraint, but respecting the basic principle that a crime is a crime even when it is inspired by political motives. Moreover, that view is held by all the Western governments and by the pope.

[Question] But surely this hard line has enabled the IRA to score points in world public opinion?

[Answer] Yes, it probably has. The unfortunate deaths of the hunger strikers are attracting media attention and the IRA is taking advantage of that to spread its propaganda.

[Question] Didn't Bobby Sands' election in Fermanagh in the spring destroy the British Government's argument that the IRA is isolated within the Catholic community?

[Answer] No, because given the limited choice between a republican Catholic and a Unionist Protestant, the Catholic voters--who form a clear majority in that constituency--preferred the former. That was predictable.

NEWSPAPER CONTRASTS UK-SOVIET NAVAL STRENGTHS

PM041158 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Aug 81 p 4

[Desmond Western report: "Russian Fleet Signals Danger in Baltic"]

It is part of a process in which Russia is increasingly flexing her muscles at sea.

Russian naval activity is expected to grow significantly over the next four years and by the mid-1980s her fleet will have reached its peak strength. In the latter part of the decade it will get smaller as some ships become obsolete.

All Western governments have been warned by NATO and their own defence planners that 1985-86 is a time when Russia will have attained the peak of her military power and the threat to world peace will be greater than ever before.

The period of greatest Russian strength coincides with that when the Royal Navy will be at its weakest. By the end of 1983 a total of 19 ships including 13 missile destroyers and frigates will have been scrapped or sold--a third of the total in full commission today. But the first of the planned type 23 frigates is not expected to be fully operational much before 1990.

Similarly, the building rate for nuclear submarines, currently one order every 15 months, will not be stepped up. There will be 12 fully-operational nuclear submarines by 1966.

In the Commons defence debate last month it was stated that the first order for a type 23 frigate would be placed by 1983. But a fortnight later, in the navy debate, Mr Goodhart, under-secretary for the armed forces, said it was hoped to order the first by the middle of the decade.

The concentration of Russian amphibious ships in the Baltic now includes their largest, the 13,500-ton Ivan Rogov, which arrived there for the first time yesterday. This ship is designed to operate both helicopters and hovercraft and with her arrival the Russian ships are thought to have practically a complete division of marines embarked, along with tanks, armored cars and other weapons.

The Russian force also includes the 42,000-ton aircraft carrier Kiev. She too, has never operated in the Baltic before.

[Text] National Unity Party (NUP] leader Mustafa Cagatay has announced the ministers of the new Turkish Cypriot Government. The Turkish Radio and Television office in Cyprus reports that president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] Rauf Denktas today at 1030 received Cagatay, who was designated to form the new government following the 28 June elections. Cagatay submitted the list of the new government members to the president for approval.

In a statement after his meeting with the president, NUP leader and Prime Minister Cagatay said the president had approved the new cabinet. Cagatay's new government is composed of the following ministers:

Prime minister: Mustafa Cagatay
Public works, reconstruction and communications minister: Mehmet Bayram
Interior, foreign and defense minister: Kenan Atakol

All the ministers of the new government are members of the NUP which has won 18 seats in the 40-seat Turkish Cypriot Communal Assembly. According to the Turkish Cypriot Constitution, the government program must be presented to the Assembly within a week. There is no confidence vote needed for the government; however, seven members of the Assembly can sign a petition for a censure motion against the new government.

'No Confidence' Vote Sought

TA041624 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] The Communal Liberation Party [CLP] and Republican Turkish Party [RTP] leaders, Alpay Durduran and Ozker Ozgur, have each issued a press release in connection with the establishment of the new government. Durduran said in the press release that the CLP would submit a motion for a vote of no confidence with a view to ensuring the establishment of a government that could enjoy the confidence of the legislative assembly, instead of the National Unity Party [NUP] government which the CLP believes cannot serve the people. Durduran said the party's authorized bodies were already taking the necessary steps and that the decision to do so was made very quickly. RTP leader Ozgur said the opposition holds more than 20 seats in the assembly and that it was the duty of the opposition members to topple the NUP government through a no confidence motion. Ozgur said that he was calling on the parties outside the NUP to carry out their duties with solidarity and cooperation.

Cagatay Addresses Cabinet

TA051342 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has said that the concrete and substantive Turkish Cypriot proposals would be handed to the Greek Cypriot side at the Cyprus intercommunal talks this afternoon. Mr Cagatay was speaking at this morning's first meeting of the new cabinet. He said the Cyprus problem was in a sensitive and critical phase in the search for a solution. He added that the Turkish Cypriot community was continuing its approach to a solution of the problem with good will. He expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriot response to the concrete Turkish Cypriot proposals would open the way for a solution of the Cyprus problem.

PAPER EXAMINES TURKISH CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

NC050713 Ankara YANKI in Turkish 3-16 Aug 81 p 8

[Article: "Proposals for 12 August"]

[Text] Both President Reagan and Foreign Minister Turkmen have expressed hope. Reagan said: "We can begin hoping that the Cyprus issue is heading toward a just, realistic and lasting settlement." Turkmen, on the other hand, said: "We are about to enter a turning point in the Cyprus dispute. If the attitude of the Turkish Cypriot community is reciprocated, there can be tangible progress toward the settlement of the dispute during the month of August."

Rauf Denktas, who had cooled off a little on his way to Ankara [in his capacity as the leader of] the unfortunate "nationalist fronts," has reached an identity of views at the capital [Ankara] on "submitting tangible proposals on the territorial issue." But in the proposals which Turkey [as published] will submit to the Greek Cypriots on 12 August, no mention will be made of either territorial concessions or the percentage of the territory to be ceded.

It can be said that Turkey is planning to return to the Greek Cypriots certain small parts on the present frontier, particularly the village of Akincilar (Louroujina) a village near Nicosia and the village of Yesilirmak (Limnitis) in the west. Some observers, assisted by experts, reckon the extent of the land to be ceded by "Turkey to the Greek Cypriots to be about four percent."

If the Greek Cypriots accept the Turkish proposals, Turkish Cypriots living in the areas to be returned will have to be resettled in the north.

No one is curious to know how the Greek Cypriots will react to the view that "Turkey is going to provide a map concerning the territorial changes and that this is an important step." An observer who is closely watching the events said: "Naturally they will consider nothing to be adequate."

Not only the territorial issue but the all-important constitutional matters too will be taken up during the 12 August negotiations. Last week, the BOZKURT newspaper, a Turkish Cypriot daily, carried an eight-point list of proposals to be submitted by the Turkish side. Most of these eight points were already known. BOZKURT had not touched at all on the territorial issue. The following were among the points disclosed: The division of the island into two regions; adherence to the principle of equality; postponement of the question of the freedom of movement to a later date; Turkey continuing to provide security for the Turkish Cypriot community on the island; the lifting of the economic embargo imposed on the Turkish Cypriots; joint management of the Nicosia International Airport; and the Turkish Cypriots benefiting from foreign aid.

RIGHTWING GROUP SETS FIRES; EMERGENCY DECLARED

[Text] Athens, 4 Aug (AFP)--Strong winds rapidly spread fires possibly set by right wingers north of the Greek capital today. A state of emergency was declared tonight. In the suburbs Greek Vice President Evangelos Averof was in charge of units battling the blazes.

Mr Averof, the defense minister, said on television it was a great disaster. Although a number of houses have been destroyed, no casualties were so far reported. A spare of fires across the country which began yesterday and left a West German tourist dead prompted Prime Minister Yearyios Rallis to appeal for public calm after a special cabinet meeting here. Earlier today, Greek authorities said a total of about 100 fires had broken out both on the mainland and in the islands.

At dawn today a previously unknown organisation calling itself "Blue Archer" claimed responsibility for starting a number of fires. Tonight the group threatened to light more blazes unless leaders of the 1967-74 military regime were amnestied quickly. In a later statement to newspapers here the organisation threatened to blow up the Greek Parliament and the capital's Hilton hotel too.

Mr Averof said there was no proof the suburban fires were set deliberately but that their simultaneous spread was suspicious.

More on Fires

NC042208 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Many houses and large areas of forest are being destroyed by large fires which broke out early this afternoon in the northern suburbs of Athens and which have spread because of violent winds. The fires have spread from Boyiati to Melissia and to Ne Apendeli. The area of eastern Attiki has been declared in a state of emergency by order of the Ministry of National Defense. The prefect for Attiki appeals to owners of water tankers to help put out the fire.

The army has undertaken the general effort to combat the fires. The coordination council for help, which is at the National Defense General Staff, is taking measures designed to help in the immediate discovery of fires throughout the country. The army and air force are participating.

CONTINUATION OF NEW DEMOCRACY PROGRAM STATEMENT

Part Six

[Part six of New Democracy government program to be implemented in the next 4 years--all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 6. NEW ERA FOR OUR AGRICULTURE--PRINCIPAL GOALS OF AGRICULTURAL POLICY

The great change in Greek agriculture is our entrance into the EEC. It is typical that 1 year has not passed since we entered the Common Market and the Community's help has become substantive with an improvement in our farmers' income as the direct result. The payment of the EEC subsidies for oil has begun and it is foreseen that 2.15 billion drachmas will be paid to us for this purpose. Subsidies for our grains, vegetables and fruits will be paid beginning in the next few days. Payments to inhabitants of mountainous and island areas also will begin within the month. This payment per family will fluctuate according to the case from 26,000 to 100,000 drachmas per year. In addition to this, the EEC will finance various infrastructure projects for the trade and distribution of our agricultural produce.

Currently, our agricultural policy is exercised within the EEC framework. This framework is not unflexible and it is formed with our active participation since our country is an equal and full member of the European Community which has a market of about 300 million consumers. Thus, together with the declared support of other states which face similar issues, the Common Agricultural Policy will be guided toward even greater strengthening of Mediterranean produce (as ours are), strengthening of the incentives of the structural policy which concerns us (like reorganizations) and strengthening of development programs for problematic areas.

The principal goals of our basic internal agricultural policy remain for the coming period:

1. Reduction in the price the producer enjoys and the consumer pays.

2. Increase in productivity.

Regarding the first goal, we will seek to close the gap from the current ratio of one to three to a ratio of one to two as it is in most EEC countries. This means that intermediaries will be abolished and trade in produce will be carried out by the producer himself. As a result of this change, the producer's income will be substantively increased without imposing on the consumer.

First, this change will be achieved through the creation of the necessary infrastructure. The special regional programs that have already been announced will be implemented. In the first stage, 8 slaughter houses, 20 packing houses with the necessary storage and cold storage areas, storage areas of 465,000 cubic meters, wineries and wine storage tanks, oil storage tanks and drying halls will be constructed and especially the system of local authorities will become operable beginning with the first eight (Ierapetra, Mesara, Khania, Rethimnon, Preveza, Ilia, Messinias and Lakonias), the construction of which will be inaugurated late in 1981. Through the local markets, the foundation stone has been laid for purging the system for the distribution of agricultural produce, abolishing intermediaries and reducing the gap between the prices of the producer and the prices the consumer pays. Every local market is a complete complex with storage areas, areas for the movement of cars and areas for the sale of produce by auction and so forth, where the produce comes into direct contact with the wholesaler or the cooperative. The system will be completed with well-organized central markets and with the establishment of organizations for the advertising of agricultural produce.

REVOLUTION IN THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

The sector, however, where a true revolution will take place will be in the radical reform--transformation one could say--of our agricultural development's agents. Thus far, our cooperative movement has been operating within the limited boundaries of our agrarian policy which has been characterized by strong state intervention and control. Within the EEC framework, cooperatives acquire another dimension since instead of narrow trade unionist organs, they clearly become development agents with a strong role in these sectors: distribution of the various supplies and agriculture needs (fertilizers, seeds, pesticides, animal feed etc); exercise of commerce and distribution of their produce in all stages from packing to sale to retailers; exercise of industrial-agricultural and consumer credit--at this point, it also should be mentioned that the Agricultural Bank of Greece will be converted into a joint state and cooperative agent with multilateral and obvious profits; the supply of consumer goods which serve farmers; and the professional education of farmers.

However, the basic element for the development of the cooperative movement within the EEC framework is freedom. If they so desire, farmers can operate within the cooperative framework. But they can also operate as individuals if they ascertain that it is to their interest. Thus, farmers and cooperatives in our country also will operate within a harmonious aggregate without the coercion of free farmers into predetermined forms that are based on foreign models and do not fit at all the feeling of personal liberty and independence of the Greek farmer. Cooperation is again optional in the more specific sector of collective cultivations. It can take place through the free participation of the farmer and his land without expropriation of his property, whether permanent or temporary.

Furthermore, additional incentives will be given to cooperatives so that they may merge and unify, if they so desire, and thus constitute live units that will be able to conquer new markets abroad and expand in all relevant necessary activities (commerce, transport, processing, exports and so forth).

HUMAN FACTOR

The New Democracy program attaches special significance to the role of the human factor in agriculture and the following have been planned in this sector: a program to encourage the farmers' stay in agricultural areas, especially young people; a radical review of the system of social insurance for farmers which within the next 5 years will approach the protection enjoyed by the large majority of workers in urban areas; during peak periods, seasonal work in agriculture will be served by individuals whose main profession is not agriculture; an intensive program for the development of agrarian tourism; and a program for agricultural further training and briefing, the main burden of which will be borne by cooperative organizations.

To increase productivity, which is the second principal goal, the program of land improvement projects will be promoted with emphasis on small irrigation projects and the participation of farmers. The goal is to irrigate an additional 1.1 million donums in the next 5 years. The most important projects will be: Maritsa River, Argolis valley, Pinios Potamos and Alfios Potamos, Pirgos, Drama, Preveza-Thesprotias and western Crete. In the second stage and after the completion of the feasibility study, depending on its result, the project for the diversion of the waters of Akheloos Potamos to the valley of Thessaly, which is of historic significance, will begin. The effort in this field will be completed with systems for the improvement of irrigation techniques and with the expanded program for the reorganization of cultivation that has already been announced. Furthermore, programs aiming at the enlargement of agricultural plots, the restoration of landless farmers, the avoiding of the fragmentation of agricultural lands and the strengthening of group cultivations will continue.

Within this framework, industrial fruit groves will be established to reduce the production cost of fruit. Agriculturists regularly (and extraordinarily if there is need) will visit all villages in the country, while visits by Greek farmers to agricultural and cooperative centers in various European states will be organized so that experience and personal understanding may be acquired on issues of development of production and productivity.

The decision that the producer should sell in any market he desires without a special license is also significant. Special branch programs like those of the development of flower growing, apiculture, cattle breeding and so forth will contribute to an increase in productivity.

The price of electricity for all agricultural uses will be reduced for the immediate reduction of production costs and agricultural businesses will be exempted from contributing to the Greek radio-television and to the other charges which burden the cost of electricity. Consideration also is being given to extend support to agricultural production through a reduction in the cost of fuel. Finally, the issue of finding the most suitable ways for providing low interest loans to the various sectors of agriculture is being examined.

Finally, the New Democracy program gives emphasis to the organizing of the exploitation of the country's closed bays (Amvrakikos Kolpos, Vistonis Limni, Kalloni, salt marshes and so forth) which, in conjunction with environmental protection, can be transformed into centers for the production of thousands of tons of fish and crustaceans.

BIG STOPS FOLLOWING THE CHANGE IN THE REGIME

The Greek farmer constitutes the steady foundation and support of every Greek effort. New Democracy and its governments have manifested with all means their affection and care for the development of the agricultural sector and the increase of farmers' income. Typically, only the following will be mentioned which have taken place during the exercise of agricultural policy in the period after the change in the regime to date:

--Payments and subsidies totaling 251 billion drachmas have been given to support agricultural income during the 6-year period of 1975-80. This sum was transferred to agriculture from the economy's urban sector and represents 30 percent of the urban income's increase.

--At the same time, the government significantly increased the prices of agricultural produce so that currently these approach--with a small difference--corresponding communal prices or in certain cases have exceeded them.

--During the same period, pensions by the farm insurance organization were significantly increased so that, taking into consideration the 50 percent increase that was recently given, pensions have reached a level that is eight times higher than 1974.

--About 5 billion drachmas will be spent on agricultural housing in 1981 as against 158 billion in 1974.

--The untaxable amount of gross income from agricultural businesses has been increased from 140,000 to 1 million drachmas.

--The exemption of agricultural cooperatives from income tax has been restored, retroactively from 1972.

--Agricultural and stock breeding plots up to 40 donums with a value of 75,000 drachmas per donum have been exempted from inheritance, donations and dowries tax.

--Tax on property transfers of up to 40 donums have been abolished.

--Irrigated areas have been increased from 8.4 million donums in 1975 to 9.1 million donums in 1980. It is foreseen that in 1981, 250,000 donums will be added to irrigation. The entire effort is taking place through a significant international financing by the European Investment Bank and the World Bank which, on the one hand, support a number of great irrigation projects (Arta, Maritsa River, Serrai, Alfios Potamos, Ierapetra, western Crete and so forth) and, on the other hand, support unitary programs for the execution of small irrigation projects by producers.

--Programs for the utilization of pasture lands, the improvement of animal stock and, more generally, strengthening of stock breeding have been promoted again with the help of communal resources.

--Incentives have been given for the enlargement of businesses, the possibility for the utilization of expanses that have been abandoned and significant exemptions to landless farmers who participated in previous land distributions.

--About 1.2 million donums have been given to landless farmers.

--A law has been passed to strengthen cooperatives and the education of cooperative cadres has been economically strengthened.

--Agricultural implements have been exempted from taxes and custom dues.

--The special charge for the transfer of agricultural plots has been abolished.

--Eight markets for fruits and vegetables have been established.

--Special programs for the development of mountainous districts have been prepared.

--The implementation of a special program for agricultural tourism in mountainous areas has begun.

--Extensive programs are being implemented (10.55 million donums) for forest development and afforestation has been increased (220,000 donums).

--Fish breeding has been strengthened and the renewal of fishing ships' mechanical equipment has been subsidized and fish resources have been protected.

--In conclusion, it should be noted that the aim of the New Democracy agricultural program is to let Greek agriculture enter a new era. In income, pensions, cultural opportunities and, more generally, standard of living for Greek farmers will approach workers in towns, while cooperative organizations will be literally transformed into collective organs for the development of entrepreneurial activity, provision of education and technical and entrepreneurial advisers, distribution of agricultural supplies, organizing commerce for agricultural produce and, more generally, into a more effective, vital system of organizations that will aim at one, and only one, goal: the elevation of the farmers' living, social and cultural standard.

Part Seven

[Part Seven of New Democracy program to be implemented in the next 4 years--all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 7. SECTORS: HEALTH-WELFARE-SOCIAL SECURITY

Health, welfare, and social security are the sectors to which the New Democracy governments have given and continue to give special importance.

A characteristic of this interest is the fact that public expenditure on health has been increasing at a pace much higher than the increase in the national product, as well as the increase in state expenditure in other fields. And this policy will be continued until the level of provided services covers everyone in the best way and without causing any hardship to the citizens. It is in the light of these principles that the New Democracy program has been planned for the next period.

The goals and measures have been specifically determined as follows:

A) HEALTH

1. The medical services, through further promotion of decentralization, will be properly assigned throughout the country and high-level services will be available outside the major urban centers as well. Therefore, transfer to major urban centers will take place solely in exceptional cases. The framework for achieving this goal as well as those cited further below is included in the law on "measures for the protection of health" that has already been prepared.

2. Special emphasis is put on primary health care, that is, the prevention of diseases, the offer of medical advice, timely diagnosis and treatment on the spot.

3. Medical and pharmaceutical treatment will be improved within the framework of the policy to elevate medical services. To carry out these goals and thus so that every Greek may enjoy full medical treatment whenever needed, New Democracy will proceed with the following arrangements:

HEALTH CENTERS

There will be radical reformation of outpatient treatment. This will be achieved within 5 years through the establishment of about 150 health centers. Every health center will have four to nine doctors and corresponding hospital and auxiliary staff and will be supplied with the basic equipment for a physician's office, with an x-ray machine, an electrocardiograph, a small septic hospital, a microbiological laboratory and an ambulance.

It is expected that every health center will have eight satellite clinics--the existing rural clinics will be used as basis for the satellite clinics. In this way, the whole country will be covered by these 150 health centers. Thus: A) there will be one center for every 8,000 to 20,000 people and one doctor and one nurse for 2,000 to 3,000 people; B) these people will be able to get to a health center within a 30-minute maximum, and every health center will have direct contact with or connection with a major general hospital, which will not be more than 40 minutes away. Every health center will be visited regularly, twice a week, by specialist doctors from the regional general hospital. All the health centers will operate on a 24-hour basis and their mission will be to provide local treatment and to follow up patients, to carry out basic laboratory and clinical tests, to give first aid and to follow up those who leave the hospital.

The establishment of these health centers aims at the following:

--to avoid inconveniencing the citizen because of frequent and unjustified movements to hospitals of urban centers.
---to avoid overloading these establishments.
--to achieve preventive medicine and medical enlightenment through frequent and direct contact of the population with medical staff.
---the prevention of diseases: local treatment; introduction of the family doctor for every Greek family.

During the first phase in the next 2 years, 1,800 hospital beds will be added through the establishment of three major hospitals at the regional medical schools operating at Ioannina, Patrai and Iraklion. At the same time, an additional 1,000 beds will be provided in the rest of the country and more beds will become available at existing hospitals due to better organization.

A gradual reduction is planned in the number of patients per ward and the replacement of low-capacity state and private hospitals with others of higher capacity. A state medications organization will be created to control the entire medications preparation, marketing and importation organization.

The incentives given for the movement of medical personnel to areas which lack the necessary personnel will be increased. Thus, among other things:

--A full tax and import duty exemption will be given for the purchase of a physician's office and pertinent equipment. Doctors who work outside big urban centers will easily obtain financing.

--The untaxable income of doctors and nurses living in cities with a population up to 10,000 will be doubled.

The effort to elevate the educational and professional standards of those who work with health establishments will be continued. There are plans for the continuous training of doctors. Special measures will be adopted to simplify and improve medical care for public servants (for example, abolition of bureaucratic procedures and of confirmation notes by the doctor in charge along with the introduction of complete machine accounting for the institution). The procedure required today for the departure of an insured person from the country and his admission to a hospital abroad will be simplified.

Welfare

The program envisages the permanent flow of social services to all those population categories that need state assistance, namely, working mothers, orphans, handicapped persons, the aged, the earthquake stricken and others. To achieve this, the following will be implemented in the future:

Special geriatric clinics will be built at major general hospitals during the next 2 years.

There will be a family planning center in every district in 5 years, as well as a center to fight thalassemia in 2 years. These centers, together with the special units for prenatal diagnosis, which are now in operation and will be expanded in Ioannina, Patrai, Iraklion and Alexandroupolic, will help decrease the number of children born in our country with incurable diseases.

Within 2 years, premature and newborn intensive care units will operate in all provincial university centers, and within 5 years in the district capitals.

The housing of all refugees will be completed within the next 3 years. A total of 17,000 exchangeable agrarian plots will be given free to the farmers who cultivate them.

The farmers' debts for exchangeable plots given to them will be canceled.

C) SOCIAL SECURITY

The New Democracy program envisages the expansion, improvement and simplification of the social insurance system. The pension of all Greeks will follow the cost-of-living increases and will be improved in buying power, while, at the same time, the whole system will operate efficiently without inconveniencing the citizens. The following has been planned for the social security sector in the coming years:

From the day of his birth and throughout his life the citizen will be insured. A national insurance system will be chartered which will do justice to the weak and safeguard the rights gained by the insured and pensioners and which will consolidate an insurance policy for all people, without discrimination or privileges.

Medical and nursing care will become a simple and easy possession of the insured with an improved substructure and increased coverage.

There will be fairer distribution of pension payments brought about by reducing the gap between small and large pensions. The lowest pension limit for all insurance organizations will be considerably improved. The coverage of the entire employed population with a second auxiliary pension will be completed.

The transfer of the insurance scheme from the private sector to the public sector will become a reality.

State insurance will be expanded to cover the clergy.

Insurance coverage for agricultural production damage caused by adverse weather conditions and other fundamental dangers not covered today (animal capital, beekeeping, flower growing and others) will be expanded.

The remaining social resources will be transferred to TEVE [Greek Craftsmen's and Tradesmen's Insurance Fund] to help this fund improve it grants.

The procuring of insurance coverage for the problem groups of the population (handicapped people and so forth) who are not covered by any [insurance] establishment will be completed so that these fellow citizens, who have been unfortunate in life, may be able to cope with their living expenses.

There will be full utilization of the insurance organizations' capital reserves so that they may bring about greater profit that will help improve the organizations' economic effectiveness and the position of the insured people.

A bank of working people will be established with the funds of the insurance organizations so that they may be better activated.

The unification of services for the medical treatment of insured and retired people living in the countryside--this would make simpler and fuller the provision of services to them--will be carried out.

The procedure for machine accounting of insurance organizations data will be completed; the introduction of modern methods will provide immediate services to the people concerned.

What Has Been Achieved Following the Change in Regime

The achievements in the fields of health, welfare and social insurance during the 1975-1980 period constitute a guarantee for the implementation of the measures which have been cited and which will be carried out in the next [4-year] period. During the past 6-year period, among other things, the following have been accomplished in the health and welfare fields:

--Pharmaceutical treatment to the rural population has been expanded.
--The health booklet for children has been introduced.
--Doctors serving in rural areas have been placed on the permanent establishment.
--Special programs for blood donation, inoculation and for briefing the people on various questions (smoking and so forth) have been introduced.
--There has been improvements of medical services, and it is worth noting that the rate of infant mortality has dropped.
--New hospitals have been built--such as those at Khalkis and Verroia; a number of hospitals at Kardhitsa, Rethimnon and Khalkidhiki are under construction. Along with all this, the procedure for the establishment of big university hospitals at Patrai, Ioannina and Iraklion has been completed.
--The drive for administrative decentralization has been advanced so that medical services may be as close to the patients as possible.

--Benefits to prolific families and to families with four children have been expanded since 1979. Thus, the number of families receiving benefits has been doubled--from 19,000 to the current 40,000.
--The monthly bonus paid to 149,000 children has been increased by 50% for the fourth child of the family and by 100 percent for the fifth child and for every additional child.
--The monthly bonus paid to 18,000 children not cared for has been increased by four times.
--Numerous (about 130) children stations and children welfare centers have been established in the cities and the countryside. These stations can care for 8,500 children below the school age. The construction of many more children stations is continuing.
--The ban on the employment of handicapped people by the government, the corporate bodies of public law and by public utility organizations has been lifted.
--A special institution has been established in Magnisia for children facing serious problems. A national institution has been established for the reinstatement of handicapped persons. An institution for deaf and dumb people has also been established in Thessaliniki.
--A program to protect elderly people has been implemented for the first time. This program provides for medical care, entertainment, and occupational therapy for these people. Special institutions for elderly people have also been established.
--Financial assistance of many million drachmas, drugs, tents and so forth have been granted to families hit by acts of God. For the first time a monthly bonus was paid for the lease of houses by families hit by the earthquakes.

In the social insurance field, among other things, the following have been carried out:

--The insurance grants to the rural population have been increased several times. Thus in 1974 OGA [Farm Insurance Organization] paid a total of 4.5 billion drachmas in the form of pensions and compensation; in 1981 this amount will total 45 billion drachmas. Because of the increase in this expediture by 10 times, it has been possible to do, among other things, the following:

A. During the last 7 years, the payment of pensions to rural citizens has been increased by eight times; recently a separate pension was paid to 185,000 peasant women.

B. The number of peasants receiving a pension from the OGA has risen to 730,000 people. In addition, free medical, pharmaceutical and hospital treatment is provided to the entire rural population.

--Insurance for the entire active population has been completed and elderly people who were not covered by social insurance have been paid pensions for the first time. The IKA [Social Insurance Foundation] has been expanded throughout the country to cover workers and employees of all categories. As a result of recent measures, another 10,000 working people have been provided with insurance coverage.

--The minimum amount of pension paid has been considerable increased. For example, the minimum amount of a pension paid by the IKA in 1974 was 2,100 drachmas. In 1981 this amount has been increased to 9,000 drachmas. The TEVE pension which was 1,250 drachmas has reached 6,000 drachmas.

--The 35-years-service period has been introduced for the retirement of people employed in the private sector. This means that an IKA pensioner can now retire 9 years earlier than before.

--A policy readjusting the pension drawn by IKA pensioners has been adopted and has been based on the wages paid to unskilled workers.
--An auxiliary insurance fund for salaried employees has been established. This means that working people will be able to draw a second pension.
--A total of 200,000 old IKA pensioners have been promoted by 3 grades without extra payments by them.
--The whole system of insurance funds by branches (Drivers Retirement Fund, TEVE, Merchants Insurance Fund) has been revised and, as a result, the grants to those insured with these organizations have been increased.
--Transfer of state insurance to the private sector has been introduced.

OFFICIAL SAYS STATISTICS SHOW IMPROVED ECONOMY

TA042046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 4 Aug 81

[Text] Recent statistics show that the Turkish economy is improving. The president of the state statistics institute, Nihat Guner, held a news conference in Trabzon where he said that besides the improving economy there was a parallel growth in the gross national product. He said exports have been on the increase since last September, and that this year's exports through June were 92 percent more than the corresponding figure for last year. Guner noted that exports this year reached $1,957 million. Of that amount, 54 percent were industrial exports, 20 percent were agricultural exports and the rest were metallurgy and other exports.

Guner pointed out that the inflation rate had dropped to 35-40 percent this year. He added: We believe the inflation rate will remain at this level.

VOTCP: TCP GREETS SOUTH AFRICAN COMMUNISTS

TA310950 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 31 Jul 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen's message to the South African Communist Party Central Committee on occasion of the party's 60th anniversary--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades: On behalf of all Turkish communists and the Turkish working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates and extends its revolutionary struggle greetings to the brotherly South African Communist Party on occasion of the 60th anniversary of its establishment.

The South African Communist Party, established under conditions of a strenuous class struggle, has resisted all enemy attacks under difficult conditions despite the harshest persecution and the sacrifice of thousands of members and leaders. During its 60-year history, the party has never made any concessions from the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. It has always greatly valued solidarity with the party and country of the great Lenin. It has organized the struggle of the masses. Today, together with the African National Congress, it is in the frontlines of the struggle waged by the South African people against imperialism, its tool which is the Botha regime, racism and racial discrimination. It is forming the unity of the most extensive anti-imperialist forces.

We, Turkish communists, would like to reiterate our brotherly solidarity with the struggle of South African communists on this glorious birthday.

Comrades, U.S. imperialism and NATO sovereign circles have increased their pressure on our country which is being administered by a military dictatorship since 12 September 1980. Pressure and blackmail aimed at making Turkey the aggressive tool of imperialism against neighboring socialist countries and the Arab peoples is mounting. The anticommunist attacks of the most reactionary, pro-American and fascist forces within and outside the armed forces and the junta against the Turkish working class and its organizations is increasing. The TCP is struggling under strenuous conditions to form a single front by all national democratic forces for peace, national independence, employment, bread and freedom, and against imperialist pressure, the exploitation of monopolies and dependence on NATO.

On its 60th anniversary, we wish the South African Communist Party great success in its arduous struggle. With our communist feelings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 30 July 1981

[Excerpts] The Hague, 4 Aug (AFP)--Queen Beatrix tonight designated two men to undertake negotiations to form a cabinet to fill the void existing since the right-of-centre coalition of Liberals and Christian Democrats lost its majority in the May 26 parliamentary election. The negotiators are Johan Kremers, Christian Democratic governor of Limburg Province, and Ed Van Thijn, Socialist member of Parliament. One of the main differences remaining to be resolved during the cabinet negotiations will be the disagreement over whether American nuclear weapons capable of reaching the Soviet Union should be deployed on Dutch soil. The Socialist Party is opposed to this.

TALKS ON POLAND'S DEBTS START IN VIENNA

[Excerpt] Talks are starting in Vienna today between a working group of Western banks and the Polish Handlowy foreign trade bank. Procedures for the postponement of payment of Polish debts to Western banks, worked out in Zurich on 22 July, will be discussed. The Creditanstalt Bank is hosting the meeting. It is the only Austrian bank in this working group of the "task force" which has been created for settling the non-state-guaranteed Polish debts.

The Bank Fuer Arbeit und Wirtschaft, the second Austrian institute participating in the work of the "task force," will not be represented. The Western banks--apart from the Creditanstalt, the Dresdner Bank, the Schweizerische Bankverein, Bank of America, Citicorp, Barclays Bank International, Lloyds Bank International and the Banque Nationale de Paris--have, according to informed circles, no mandate in the negotiations and would thus have to pass on the possible wishes of Poland to the "task force".

[Text] Egyptian President as-Sadat will not come to Austria next week. He has called off his visit to Salzburg during which he was to have met with Chancellor Kreisky. As-Sadat will return directly to Cairo from Washington.

Nothing is known yet about why he cancelled his visit. Austrian authorities declared that they had not been informed--nor did the Egyptian Embassy give any details to the Austrian radio and television service.

FRG TO 'CAREFULLY EXAMINE' IRANIAN DEMAND

LD051654 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 5 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government will "carefully examine" the Iranian Foreign Ministry's demand that it name the persons who occupied the Iranian Embassy in Bonn and the Iranian Consulate in Berlin. The Iranian Government wants the names of all dissidents who, to protest the executions in their country, occupied the Iranian Embassy in Bonn on Monday and the Iranian Consulate General in West Berlin on Tuesday. The Bonn Foreign Office said today that the Iranian foreign minister called for the disclosure of the names when he saw the German ambassador in Tehran on Tuesday.

MISSILE FIRM SEEKS ADDITIONAL LAUNCHING SITES

[Excerpt] Munich, 5 Aug (DPA)--Otrag, the Munich firm whose missile tests in Libya have been looked at askance by the Federal Government and other governments, is seeking additional launching sites for the missiles. The head of the firm, Frank K. Wukasch, said today that it is interested in launching sites in a belt between 20 degrees north and 20 degrees south around the equator. The sites are needed for its altitude research rocket department which was set up last year. In the region around the equator the [word indistinct] provided by the earth's rotation could best be exploited.

Otrag will continue its tests, lasting 3 to 4 weeks at a time, at its testing ground in Libya. It does not propose to relinquish this site provided by the Libyan Government. There has been no obstruction by the authorities. Otrag was commenting on a New York HERALD TRIBUNE report which said that it is going to withdraw from Libya and shift its testing ground to South America, probably to an island off Argentina.

PAPER EXAMINES DELAYS IN U.S. ARMS DECISIONS

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Up to the Year 2000"]

[Text] Details always cause the trouble and this also holds true for strategy. The Reagan administration proposes to spend many billions on military armament. Congress, which usually insists on austerity, is prepared to make great financial sacrifices. But neither the President nor the Pentagon nor the State Department have as yet made up their minds as to which large-scale strategic projects should have precedence. Expressing it in more simple terms: They don't know how the available money should be spent. What is the so-called MX system to be like and, most important, how should it be based? Three planning schemes exist for the strategic missiles envisaged for this project, but no decision has yet been made. This is because once the decision is made, huge sums of money will be tied up for the next 10 years. Another decision delayed involves the bomber which the U.S. Air Force is to build. There is also no accord concerning the number of tanks for the army. Does this indicate leadership weakness on the part of the President? Lack of decisionmaking by the Pentagon? Reserve on the part of congressional security bodies? No, it is a struggle with the future by the responsible people. What they set forth now will determine U.S. security up to the year 2000.

ENVOY TO IRAN RECALLED; NATIONALS URGED TO LEAVE

[Text] Paris, 5 Aug (AFP)--France today urged all its nationals home from Iran--in the wake of the arrival here last week of ousted Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr--and recalled Ambassador to Tehran Guy Georgy for consultations.

(In the Iranian capital, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said on national radio that Ambassador Georgy had been ordered to leave the country because France had ignored Iran's extradition request for Mr Bani-Sadr and the man who helped his escape, extreme leftist leader Massud Rajavi.)

In Paris, the presidential palace said that affairs at France's Embassy in Tehran would be carried out by a reduced staff, and that the French Government had informed Iranian officials of the measure.

A palace statement said that demonstrations had been held recently outside the French Embassy in Tehran which, if they continued, "could lead to uncontrolled acts which could endanger French nationals in Iran."

FRANCE SENDING EMERGENCY SUPPLIES TO POLAND

[Text] Aid to Poland was discussed at this morning's session of the Council of Ministers. Francois Vicard reports:

As far as this aid is concerned, I can tell you that Pierre Mauroy was very clear. All the problems have now been solved and the aid for Poland is going to consist essentially of 300,000 tons of wheat; 15,000 tons of beef; 3,000 tons of sugar and medicines. Pierre Mauroy indicated that all means will be implemented. Moreover, he is assembling a cabinet council meeting at 1700 this afternoon to take all the necessary measures to transport to Poland what it needs as rapidly as possible. You may recall that yesterday the ambassador said: I hope that it will not be a question of months or even weeks. Pierre Mauroy confirmed to us that it is only a question of hours since as far as the medicines are concerned, for example, they are scheduled to be sent via an airlift. Ship, trucks, trains, everything possible will be used. As for the problem with the banks, you know that originally Poland was supposed to pay 15 percent of the sum, then it was only 5 percent. Pierre Mauroy said they do not have the means, so much the worse, we are granting 100 percent.

Tomorrow, on the other hand, there will be a European meeting to allow Poland to borrow $500 million as it wishes. France is very much in favor of this and, of course, will make its contribution.

[Paris Domestic Service in French at 1200 GMT on 5 August carries a similar report on French aid to Poland, but refers to 7,000 tons of beef and 15,000 tons of sugar in contrast with the above-mentioned quantities.]

A ministry spokesman confirmed a statement about the visit issued here by the front's Foreign Relations Committee. The statement said the delegation was led by Mansur Omar, a member of the Polisario's Political Bureau.

The Foreign Ministry said the Polisario representatives were received by an aide to Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson "at their own request." "We heard them out," the ministry spokesman said.

SAKHAROV INVITED TO ADDRESS PEN CLUB IN PARIS

NC051020 Paris AFP in English 1016 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 5 Aug (AFP)--Dissident Soviet physicist Andrey Sakharov has been invited to address the 45th international convention of the Pen Club, an international writers' group created to defend the free circulation of ideas, the president of the group's French section said today.

Section President Rene Tavernier said the group would make Mr Sakharov a guest of honor "in absentia" if he could not attend the convention, due to take place in France from September 21 to 25.

Delegates at the meeting are to discuss the value of literature in "a world in crisis."

Mr Sakharov, 1975 Nobel Peace prize winner, is currently in exile in Gorki, about 350 kms (210 miles) east of Moscow, for having expressed his dissident views.

Mr Tavernier's invitation said the Pen Club would welcome any statement from Mr Sakharov defending "the principle of free circulation of ideas." The letter was sent to Mr Sakharov on July 1 but no reply had been received, Mr Tavernier said.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON AFRICA, MIDDLE EAST

[Text] Rome, 3 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo denied here today that the Rome government's moves on the conflict between Ethiopia and Somalia could be described as "mediation", but he confirmed Italian interest in a solution of the problems existing in the Horn of Africa.

Stopping here briefly on his way to a three-day visit in Somalia, Colombo told reporters that it would be "improper" to speak of "Rome's mediation" between Somalia and its northern neighbor over the disputed Ogaden territory.

"But if Italy can use its friendship with the countries involved to make a contribution to resolving the problems of the Horn of Africa, it will do so willingly", he added.

He also noted that the latest political moves on this region were taken at an "inter-African level" during the recent Organization of African Unity summit.

"As regards Italy," said Colombo, "whenever it has had the chance, it has continued making its moves, whether in direct talks with the countries involved or in the appropriate international forums.

"But it should be noted that we are still a long way from any correspondence between declarations of good will and facts, though we understand that each country has its difficulties."

In other points, Colombo said that the European Community's moves in favor of the Palestinians had been discussed at the recent EEC summit in Luxembourg with the participants noting the "not negligible" results already achieved.

"The EEC's duty chairman, Lord Carrington, was asked to continue the efforts already undertaken, not certainly in contrast with, but as a completion of, the Camp David agreements", the Italian diplomatic chief added.

"In all forums", he said, "we Europeans continue, not just making declarations, but working for a correct solution to the Palestinian problem, which is essential for a lasting peace (in the Middle East)".

He also stressed the ever-improving relations between Italy and Egypt and said Italy would like to see a rapprochment between Egypt and the "other moderate Arab countries, since it thinks that a re-discovered harmony within the Arab world can only play in favor of world peace."

Concludes Mogadishu Visit

LD052248 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo's official visit to Mogadishu ended after 3 hours of talks with Somali President Siad Barre. The most salient fact found by Colombo was the will expressed by President Siad Barre and other Somali leaders to resolve the dispute with Ethiopia over Ogaden through negotiations. However, there was no other element to encourage the optimism of the Italian minister, who had to admit that the situation in the Horn of Africa continues to be very difficult.

POPE CONDITION 'GOOD' AFTER SECOND OPERATION

AU051601 Rome ANSA in English 1515 5 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 5 Aug (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II was reported in good condition here today after undergoing a second, final operation to close up a colestomy performed on him after as assassination attempt on May 13.

The operation this morning lasted a little less than an hour and was intended to restore full function to the pope's lower intestines, bypassed during emergency surgery after he was shot.

The head of Rome's Gemelli hospital, where both operations took place, Professor Emilio Tresalti, said that John Paul was expected to remain in the hospital for around 10 days more. Theoretically, the pope could leave for his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, some 20 miles outside Rome, by August 15, the doctor said.

Tresalti said that today's operation presented no difficulties and that the pope woke up about an hour afterward, recognized and smiled at his doctor.

The operation was a complete success and the pope was in good condition, according to a medical bulletin that Tresalti read to newsmen 2 hours after the surgery was completed.

BERLINGUER CITED ON DOMESTIC, POLISH SITUATIONS

PM030921 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 28 Jul 81 pp 2-4

[Eugenio Scalfari interview with PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer: "Where is the PCI Going?]

[Excerpts] Rome--[Question] I do not see any major differences between what you say and what a committed European social democrat might believe. But you regard it as an insult to be compared to a social democrat.

[Answer] Well, there is a substantial difference. Social democracy (I am talking about the real kind, of course) has always concerned itself very much with the workers and working people organized in trade unions, but little or not at all with underprivileged, the lumpen proletariat and women. Indeed, now that the former scope is exhausted for a capitalist-type development which permitted a social democratic policy, now that the problems which I mentioned earlier have erupted throughout the capitalist West, there are signs of crisis even in the German SPD and the British Labor Party, precisely because the social democratic parties are facing situations hitherto unknown to them or ignored by them.

We have centered our policy not only on the interests of the actual working class and of the workers masses as a whole, but also on the interests of the underprivileged strata of society, starting with women, young people and the elderly. To resolve such problems, reformism and excessive recourse to the welfare state are no longer enough; there must be a thorough change of approach and in the way that the system is organized. This is the objective direction to move in and this is our policy, our commitment.

In fact, the Swedish Social Democrats are also moving in this direction, and half of the German Social Democrats (especially the women and young people) are now also of the same opinion. Mitterrand won on the basis of a program that is in some respects similar.

[Question] You see, you have no reason to be angry if I say that there are no major differences between you and a real socialist party.

[Answer] I am not angry in the least. We just need to agree on the meaning of the adjective "real," which for us means understanding and analyzing the historical, ideological and political reasons why we came to formulate and pursue the strategy of Eurocommumism (or the Third Path, as the French Socialists, among others, call it), which is a field within which a rapprochement and cooperation can take place between the socialists' and communists' stances.

[Question] So you are a real socialist party....

[Question] But in the 21 June elections, Craxi's Socialists fared much better than you. How do you explain that?

[Answer] The Socialists have certainly grasped some of the new demands emerging in the country. Not always clearly , but in any case perceptibly, they are issuing signals to strata of the bourgeoisie and even the upper bourgeoisie. The profound crisis that has hit the DC has also influenced the PSI's gains, as well as those of the Social Democrats, Liberals and Republicans. There is a weary attitude toward the DC and a widespread desire for change. On 21 June the majority of the votes lost by the DC crossed to the secular and socialist area. For the time being that is what has happened.

[Question] Do you consider it a positive phenomenon?

[Answer] On the whole, yes, since it is accompanied by losses on the part of the fascists of the Italian Social Movement and a confirmation of our recovery with respect to 1979.

[Question] Are you displeased or worried that the PSI is, as you put it, issuing signals to bourgeois sectors of society?

[Answer] No, it does not worry me, the middle classes and the productive bourgeoisie are major sectors of the country and their political and economic interests, when legitimate, must be adequately defended and represented. If these social groups transfer part of their votes to the secular parties and the PSI, abandoning the traditional DC protection, one can only be pleased--but only on one condition. This is that, with these new votes, the PSI and the secular parties demonstrate that they can pursue a policy and implement a program that will constitute a real and thorough change from the past and from the present. If, however, it means a mere transfer of patronage to strengthen, under new labels, the former and present state of relations between the parties and the state and the parties and society, with the resulting lamentable methods of government and administration, then I see no reason why we and the country should declare ourselves satisfied.

[Question] In your opinion, is such a change of methods and policy taking place or not?

[Answer] Frankly, no. Can you see it, by any chance? Are the people aware of it? Look at Sicily, for instance; you will see that on the whole there has been a transfer of patronage.

I do not mean that the same always applies everywhere. But I do say that the Socialists and Social Democrats have not yet given any sign of wanting to start the reform of the relationship between the parties and the institutions--which, after all, is no more than a correct restoration of the constitutional requirements--without which no regeneration can be started and without which the morality issue will remain entirely unresolved.

[Question] You have said on numerous occasions that the morality issue is now at the center of Italy's problems. Why?

[Answer] The morality issue is not confined solely to the fact that, since there are crooks, corrupt men and grafters in the upper echelons of politics and the administration, they must be rooted out, charged and put in jail. According to us Communists, the morality issue in Italy today is indissolubly linked with the occupation of the state by the government parties and their associates and with their conception of politics and government methods, which must simply be abandoned and eliminated. This is why I say that the morality issue is the nub of Italy's problems. This is why the other parties can only try to be forces for real regeneration if they tackle the morality issue thoroughly, starting with its political causes.

[Answer] I will tell you the one that I consider the primary and decisive cause; the discrimination against us.

[Question] Does that not seem excessive to you, Mr Berlinguer? Does it all stem from that fact that you have not been admitted to the country's government?

[Answer] I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not saying that it all stems from the fact that we have not been admitted to the government, as if our entry would suddenly mark the start of a "golden age" (in any case we have never begged to be admitted). What I am saying is that our entry would put an end to a distortion and limitation of our democracy, of the democratic dialectic and of the life of the state; I am saying that it would end the situation whereby for the past 35 years one-third of Italians have been discriminated against for political reasons and have never been represented in the government. The situation has remained frozen and there has been no change in the ruling class and no change of methods and plans. The game has been artificially restricted to 60 percent of the elected parliamentary representatives.

[Answer] It seems to me like a rigged game, apart from the fact that it remains to be seen how the PSI uses this key position which it enjoys partly thanks to our exclusion. For instance, it could use it precisely to remove the prejudice against us. If so, the possibilities of change, that is, of a real alternative--and, in the same context, of rotation--would be possible, would be of general benefit and, I believe, of benefit to the PSI itself, inasmuch as it too is a party with its own irreplaceable role in the country's regeneration. Or the Socialists might use their position to increase their party's strength in the splitting up and sharing out of the state. In that case, the Italian situation could only deteriorate even further.

[Question] Tell the truth: you believe that the Socialists are pursuing the latter path rather than the former.

[Answer] Well, it is not only that I think so, it is the facts that show it. In 1977, the Socialists pledged to remove the DC's prejudice against us. In 1978, they confirmed this undertaking, but the first time the DC issued a veto, they accepted it as an unchangeable fact.

Note that I am not saying that they should have done so for our sake. If the fundamental problem of Italian democracy is the absence of any change in the ruling class capable of starting a real and thorough regeneration, they should have done it for their own sake and for the sake of the country. Moreover, in 1980 they went as far as to reverse their line and moved from a timid request for an end to the anticommunist prejudice to an alliance with the DC rightwing, the "preamble," the sector representing the most stubborn discrimination against us and the splitting of the workers movement. The Socialists believe that they can grow faster in the shelter of a line such as that of the "preamble." I do not believe that this will be the case.

In my case, the real concern should be the country's future. If things continue like this in Italy, democracy is in danger of shrinking instead of expanding and developing; it risks drowning in a swamp.

[Question] Craxi maintains that the main problem is not so much a change in the ruling class and the government but a change in the balance of forces on the left, between Socialists and communists. Craxi says: Give me strength, more strength; give the PSI 18-20 percent. In that case, the Socialist area, including the Social Democrats, would be more or less equal to the Communists and it would then be possible to ally with the PCI, because then we Socialists would name the game and guarantee the rules. Craxi invokes the example of Mitterrand, who won because he became stronger than the Communists. I believe that that is his objective. Only then, and not before, will he be ready to ally with you.

[Answer] Yes, I know that some people in the Socialist Party think that way. But since the subject of Mitterrand has been raised, I would like to point out that Mitterrand joined the French section of the Workers International [SFIO], the old French Social Democratic Party, when the SFIO had only 6 percent of the votes, whereas the PCF had over 20 percent. Well, Mitterrand transformed the SFIO, discarded the old bureaucratic apparatus and opened it up to organizations, trade unions and Catholics--but above all he immediately sought a unitary line on the left with the PCF, although the PCF was, admittedly, a somewhat different party from ours.

Mitterrand did not wait until he was stronger than the PCF before seeking an alliance with it. During the recent presidential elections, in the television debate with Giscard, Mitterrand said: I will never exclude from the government the French working class and a party, such as the PCF, which represents part of it. That is what he said and that is what he has done. And, as we saw, he responded with dignity to the Americans. I say that this is precisely why the French Socialists' strength has grown to the extent of securing a majority within the left.

[Answer] No, that is not true at all. Until recently, Rocard was proposing an entirely different line; he proposed a kind of center-left, an alliance with part of Giscard's centrists. The French PS won on the basis of Mitterrand's line, not Rocard's.

[Question] But as soon as Mitterrand was elected he hastened to deliver a speech expressing unqualified pro-Atlanticism. In particular, in connection with the Euromissiles issue, he said that he was in favor of their deployment. You have never said anything like that. Could it be that one of the traits of your "different" nature is a tendency toward European neutralism, which the European Social Democrats, however, reject en bloc?

[Answer] Now you are shifting the comparison of the French and Italian Socialists' and our own policies into a different context, that of foreign policy. But I am quite willing to follow you.

I will tell you that I am not convinced by Mitterrand's latest statements, but that we Italian Communists can agree with the statement on Euromissiles contained in the new French Government program, which was signed by both the PS and the PCF. Basically, it does not ask the United States to stop producing its Pershing-2 and cruise missiles, that is, the most modern Euromissiles, which it wants to deploy in Europe from 1983. But in the meantime, it requests an immediate start to negotiations to reduce missiles in Europe--indeed, to remove them completely--and that the USSR stop deploying its SS-20 as soon as negotiations begin. I would add that it is necessary to act quickly, because if the race to see who can build the most--and the most sophisticated--missiles and who can deploy the most continues, the slide toward a war of extermination in Europe would become uncontrollable.

This is the stance that emerges from the agreement between the French Socialists and Communists, and the German SPD's stance seems similar, and so is ours. I would like to know whether it is the Italian Government's and the Italian Socialist comrades' position, too. In any case, Italy's support for the plan approved by NATO in December 1979 (when the decision on the Euromissiles was taken) was in fact subordinated to the immediate resumption of negotiations. That decision was ratified by the Socialists, among others. Now the possibility of negotiations--and without preconditions--exists. What is being said and done by the government and the parties that support it, in view of Reagan's stubborn refusal to start negotiations with the USSR?

[Question] Deputy Berlinguer, I would like you now to talk to me about the state of your party. Is it losing momentum? Is it losing influence?

[Answer] I would say that we have turned the corner and are now recovering again. Frankly, following the 1979 general elections we risked suffering a defeat that could have brought us to our knees. Not so much because of the loss of votes, which was serious, as because of another factor; under the National Unity governments we lost our direct and continuous relations with the masses. Some of the things those governments did were valuable; we don't deny it. They contained inflation; in foreign policy they took some good initiatives; the antiterrorist struggle was waged steadfastly and even yielded some results. Then there was a turnabout and the agreements with us were violated. But the fact remains that, partly because of our own errors of domination by the party leadership [verticismo], bureaucratism and opportunism, our relations with the masses were weakened during the experience of the broad solidarity majorities. We realized it in time. I can assure you that we will never again repeat such an experience.

[Question] Did the breakup of the National Unity majority cause conflicts within the party leadership group?

[Answer] There were differing opinions and the debate lasted a long time.

[Question] Later, a few months ago, you launched the democratic alternative line. May I remind you that you and your party's leadership group were stubbornly opposed to any mention of an alternative, until your sudden "conversion." Why?

[Answer] Perhaps there was some tardiness. But I would point out that we had for some time been defining the objective of the alternative as a "democratic alternative" to distinguish it from a simple "leftwing alternative," the conditions for which do not yet exist. I could add that we also set our sights on the possibility of the DC really renewing and changing itself, altering its methods and its policy and deciding to rise to the country's real problems.

It is no problem to me to admit that we were mistaken on this point, or rather that the methods used failed to achieve the aim. When we realized it, we confronted the DC and said that, with a DC like that, it was impossible to direct the necessary task of reform and regeneration and that it must stand aside. We consider the democratic alternative a tool that can also help renew the parties, including the DC.

[Answer] Very positive. The Polish comrades have shown themselves capable of grasping the thrust for renewal emanating from the whole of Polish society, especially from the working class and from its renewed trade union organizations, and they have conducted this delicate operation courageously, wisely and cautiously. Nevertheless, the situation remains very difficult and complex, and I believe it will continue so far a long time.

[Question] To elect the party Central Committee the Warsaw congress held a secret ballot and granted full freedom of choice. There were no prefabricated lists....

[Answer] You see? The major factors of renewal do not always come from the West. In this case, important indications for the development of workers parties all over the world are coming from the Eastern bloc.

[Question] Perhaps because in the Eastern bloc they are virtually starting from scratch when it comes to democratic renewal. The point is this; the voting method used in Warsaw was much freer not only then those of all the other Eastern bloc communist parties but even than the PCI's. Do you not believe that the time has come to move in the same direction?

[Answer] We have a complex, but extremely democratic, procedure for electing the Central Committee, and among other things it envisages a secret ballot. Our rules stipulate that a secret ballot is obligatory if requested by only one-fifth of delegates. But secret ballots are frequently used to elect our organizations' leadership bodies.

[Question] Do you not believe that this should become the norm?

[Answer] I would not rule it out at all, and I believe that it could be discussed. But why are you asking me this question? Are you aware that the other Italian parties normally vote at their congresses for closed lists presented by their currents?

[Question] I know, but that does not seem to me a good reason for copying them. It would be excellent if you differed from them in this too.

[Answer] I accept the recommendation. I would like to end by making an observation. There was a great deal of talking about Poland in Italy--and rightly so--when a Soviet intervention was feared. Now that the socialist renewal process is underway in Poland, albeit amid so many difficulties, and there has been no intervention, it seems that the subject of Poland has ceased to be of interest to much of the press and to many politicians and political commentators. Why? Can the "Polish case" no longer prompt polemics in our country? How many prejudices, errors and taboos still remain! One journalist once urged people to hold their noses and vote DC. Has the time not come to change and to build a society that is not a garbage heap?

AVANTI Editorial

[Editorial: "Depressing Splittism"]

[Text] The PCI secretary general's marathon interview granted to the daily LA REPUBBLICA is unlikely to leave much of a mark. It opens no debate, puts forward no new ideas and points to no political prospects other than in the form of gloomy and, on the whole, cheap propaganda.

What is striking about it, however, is the almost hallucinatory view of the Italian political situation as one in which everything is so rotten, corrupt and degenerate that the only hope is of a tragic dawn of general purification.

Unfortunately, the rest seems to confirm a specific desire for radicalization, apparently representing a sect rather than a major party properly pursuing its desire for a policy of movement, committed not to the quest for isolation but to the identification of specific targets and paths of political struggle and convergences among forces and efforts, in accordance with the rules and characteristics of the democratic dialectic.

Moreover, all the emphasis is deliberately placed on "diversity"--not of the political or ideological kind that has its well-defined traits but a supposed moral diversity whereby good and evil are placed on opposite sides, with the exceptions and qualifications decided on by the properietor of what is good.

We are talking about moral diversity with all that entails, namely, contempt for anyone different, opposition without respect and censure. Such an attitude and such language would make one shudder if one lost for a moment the awareness and confidence of living in a free, secure (fairly secure) and democratic society.

Apart from this depressing splittism, the other thread that runs through Berlinguer's lengthy interview is a characteristic all-embracing and stubborn hostility toward the Socialists. It is nothing new; if anything, it constitutes a confirmation that should be reflected on more by others than by us.

It should be noted that these factors of exacerbation, distoration and polemic, which stem from a highly erroneous method of viewing and assessing the major force for renewal which we represent, are spreading and multiplying. This cannot fail to cause great concern among us too, because of the political consequences they are bound to have.

CALVO-SOTELO HIGHLIGHTS DOMESTIC, FOREIGN ISSUES

PM051510 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 1 Aug 81 p 9

[EFE report: "Statutes Have Ambiguities Which Autonomy Pact Will Resolve"]

[Excerpts] Madrid, 31 Jul--The prime minister appeared before the media in what is now the customary background--roses on the table, the Spanish flag and a gray curtain. He was accompanied by Secretary of State for Information Ignacio Aguirre.

Calvo-Sotelo began by saying that this is the last news conference before the beginning of the vacation, "which will be short for ministers since there will be another cabinet meeting 20 August. For my part, I will visit Mallorca in the middle of the month to confer with his majesty the king."

"This very day," the prime minister said, "the autonomy agreement resulting from the committee of experts reports was completed. These agreements principally comprise political pacts by which the new statutes of autonomy will be governed, a draft organic law on the organization of the autonomy process and some economic and financial pacts for the autonomous communities." He added that these agreements will put in order the building of the state of the autonomies and "are aimed at placing the development of the autonomous communities and of the state within a framework of greater rationality."

"Only a strong state can hold autonomies which are also strong." "I believe," he said, "that these agreements, signed by the government and the largest opposition party, are a decisive step toward bringing greater stringency and order into national political life, comparable only to the agreements on employment."

The prime minister recalled that both the agreement on employment and the agreement on autonomies were two essential agreements which he predicted in the speech of investiture and which have been realized. "In both," he said, "the government has taken the initiative and set down aims which were achieved in cooperation with other political forces. They are two instances of how the government governs within the democratic context of our parliamentary monarchy."

"Economic Indicators Are Favorable"

Calvo-Sotelo added that "the economic indicators are favorable: Unemployment is falling and it is foreseeable that it will continue to fall; prices are holding exceptionally well, not having increased over the last month; exports have increased by 40 percent in pesetas and 6 percent in dollars; labor disputes have decreased by 60 percent; and the stock market remains steady with an index of 137."

"It is true," the prime minister concluded, "that we are experiencing difficult times, but it is also true that we are resolving the problems confronting us. I am not in favor of taking stock and the summer does not justify a rendering of accounts, but I believe that these two previously mentioned agreements can and should be presented as the most important aspect of our government task."

He concluded: "I would also hope--in this instance it is for you to say--to have brought over these months and calm, security and tranquillity which the government feels."

There Will Be Official Note on Arrests

During the question-and-answer session, the prime minister in discussing the latest arrests of extreme rightwingers said that there will be a note from the Interior Ministry and that he believes that they had no connection with the putschist plot, "although the judiciary has the last word."

Asked by a Venezuelan journalist about the possibility of another coup in Spain, Calvo-Sotelo replied: "Those possibilities or probabilities occupy and preoccupy me as head of the government, but I do not believe that there is any danger of a military coup in Spain, or even that it is possible. The objective circumstances do not exist and it is certainly not the principal issue of concern for the government and its prime minister."

Asked about the internal differences in the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] the prime minister asserted that "those differences are no greater than in any other political party located at Spain's political center. The fact is that the UCD is the ruling party and hence more attractive to criticism, especially since there is more openness in the UCD than in any other political party. The government is supported by the centrist parliamentary group and that support has been staunch and will remain so to enable the government to perform and continue with the task entrusted to it."

Relations With France

Asked by a foreign journalist about the police measures which France will adopt against Spanish terrorists and whether the Spanish Government feels satisfied with those measures, Calvo-Sotelo replied that "in these instances the utmost discretion in specifying the measures promised by the French Government is usual." "At any event," he added, [French Interior Minister] Deferre's promises during his visit to Madrid are in line with those which President Mitterrand and the French premier made to me during my official visit to Paris, that is, that France will not serve as a base for terrorist actions against neighbouring countries, especially Spain."

He highlighted the justice minister's 3 August visit to Paris and coming talks between security chiefs in Spain and France and concluded: "I hope that these measures will make good France's promise that its territory will not be a base for terrorists."

NATO

Asked specifically whether the government has now decided when and how it will propose Spain's accession to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, he stated: "The government has not yet decided when it will propose the relevant parliamentary debate. I hope that the timetable for the parliamentary debate which the government will propose to the congress of deputies will be established at a coming cabinet meeting."

Satisfied With Government

Asked whether he was satisfied with his government's work and whether he intends to effect a crisis soon, the prime minister said: "On the whole, I am satisfied with the conduct of the government I head--a government which was not inherited but formed by myself and made up of responsible and competent people. I do not mean by this that I am entirely satisfied with all that has been accomplished since we must exert ourselves and move onward. I can perform that task with the team which I have. And it would not be good, in view of the circumstances, to add another factor of uncertainty which a ministerial crisis always creates. There is a government for quite a while."

Allusion to PNV and CU

He later asserted that the autonomy pact would have been stronger if the Basque Nationalist Party and Convergence and Union had taken part in the negotiations on that pact--a pact which, as time will demonstrate, will not hold up the autonomy statutes of the Basque country and Catalonia, although those statutes have ambiguities which could be affected by the autonomy pact.

The prime minister emphasized that the building of the state of the autonomies is something of great significance and importance which should go ahead, even if not all the political forces are involved. "But the fact that the UCD and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, which are the two main state parties, are prepared to carry out the pact is something important and sufficient and it will entail no cutbacks or dead stops in the autonomy statutes approved."

"Army in Its Place"

Answering another question, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo said: "The army is in its place and the statements by people who have been arrested and are presumably connected with extreme rightwing activities, even if they are military personnel, must in no way be confused with the tribute made by Lt Gen Fernandez Posse. These are two distinct kinds of statements, since the latter has retracted and given public explanations, leaving things in their place and the army in its place."

At another point in the news conference, Calvo-Sotelo stated that Spain's entry into NATO and the EEC are different problems. "Spain's entry into the communities poses difficulties, but Spain is already in the EEC de jure, as is demonstrated by its foreign trade, and it will become de facto. In no event has the government contemplated withdrawing Spain's application to join the EEC."

The head of government described as "inopportune" the decision that the prince and princess of Wales should visit Gibraltar on their honeymoon, which caused His Majesty King Juan Carlos to cancel his presence at the wedding. "His majesty the king's reaction to the gesture has earned the praise not only of the Spanish people," Calvo-Sotelo emphasized, "but of the foreign press and of part of the British press. However, there the matter rests, without greater significance. Simply, the occasion of Prince Charles' wedding was advantageous for Spain in that the Gibraltar issue could be expressed in very clear terms by Spain and this could create some advantage when the Spanish-British talks on the Rock are resumed in September."

WEEKLY ALLEGES KING INVOLVED IN FEBRUARY COUP

[Text] Madrid, 5 Aug (AFP)--A document implicating King Juan Carlos in the military coup attempt last February has been circulating among Spanish military barracks, according to a newspaper report here today.

The weekly SABADO GRAFICO published several passages from the document, which charged that Spain's domestic situation had declined since the failed coup d'etat because of "the incapacity of the ruling class."

The document said General Alfonso Armada, who was charged in the coup attempt, had asked a group of experts to study the legality of the constitution and the possibility of dissolving parliament and rewriting a new constitution. The general then reportedly handed over the study to the king.

The document also implicated Spain's military hierarchy, charging that 17 lieutenant-generals had met in January 1980 to consider the necessity for military action. The 17 officers were then supposed to have had a "very tense" meeting with the king, the report said.

Since the February 23 coup attempt, the extreme right has circulated several similar documents, sources said.

CARRINGTON, NORWAY'S FRYDENLUND DISCUSS ZONE ISSUE

PM060907 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Jul 81 p 8

[Aasmund Willersrud report: "Carrington 'No' to Nordic Nuclear-Free Zone?"]

[Text] London, 23 Jul--British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington expressed clear objections to the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries during talks with Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund in London on Thursday [23 July]. Carrington said that an investigation now of the this demarche would complicate the NATO alliance's efforts to reach an agreement on nuclear arms in Europe.

Lord Carrington also stressed that the proposal for a Nordic nuclear-free zone not only affects the Nordic countries but also greatly affects the whole alliance. He has warned in the past against demarches which could contribute to weakening NATO's joint action in all important questions, especially those to do with nuclear arms, before negotiations with the Soviet Union are started.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund told AFTENPOSTEN that he gave an account of the Norwegian proposal and he stressed that Norway would not take any further independent steps without consulting the other allies in NATO. But he stressed that this is a question which also affects the other Nordic countries.

[Question] The proposal for a Nordic nuclear-free zone has now been discussed with a number of our most important NATO partners and has been met everywhere with only little understanding. Is it possible that Norway will abandon the proposal?

[Answer] I have never concealed the fact that this is a very difficult question and that there is strong skepticism in other countries, but you must remember that it is a proposal included in the Labor Party's manifesto for the next 4-year period and it is also included in the government's long term program. It is clear that the Labor Party will treat seriously all the things included in the manifesto. [answer ends]

When asked if he still thought it possible to have the proposal included in the talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on arms limitation, as the prime minister has hinted in the past, Frydenlund said that the mere fact that negotiations between the superpowers will be starting will contribute to a general improvement in the international atmosphere, which will create greater understanding for proposals such as the present one.

Frydenlund stressed that he had not traveled to London to hear Lord Carrington's views on the proposal for a nuclear-free zone--he knew them beforehand. The visit was part of the arrangement Norway has with the EEC, according to which Norway takes the initiative for contacts with the incoming chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers. The aim is to discuss important foreign policy questions which are included on the agenda.

During the talks in London on Thursday, the two foreign ministers discussed the Middle East, among other things, and both sides expressed serious concern over developments there. Frydenlund also expressed his full support for Lord Carrington's plan for a peace conference for Afghanistan.

NEW SESSION OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD ON 5 AUG

Preliminary Comments

NC051840 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks began at the Ledra Palace Hotel a short while ago. In a statement before the meeting, Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan said that he was going to submit comprehensive proposals for a Cyprus solution to the meeting; that the proposals refer to the territorial and the constitutional aspects of the problem and to the questions of security and guarantees. Mr Onan added that the proposals of the Turkish Cypriot side are accompanied by a map.

The representative of the Greek Cypriot side, Mr Ioannidhis, said in a statement that within the framework of the inter-Cypriot talks, the seventh round will be completed at today's meeting with the discussion of the territorial aspect. During today's meeting, he added, we expect to receive the other side's concrete positions on the territorial aspect.

In reply to a question as to whether he expected proposals on the constitutional aspect, Mr Ioannidhis said that this depended on the other side.

The UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, said that with today's meeting we are entering a critical stage in the intercommunal dialogue. Replying to questions, Mr Gobbi said that he does not have a clear understanding of the Turkish proposals. The parties, he said, will assess whether these are positive or negative. However, he added, I would like to reiterate that the submission of the proposals is in itself, a positive event that contributes to keeping the negotiations moving.

Replying to another question, Mr Gobbi said that by nature and rationally he is optimistic, because he believes there is movement. Before the meeting, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor was asked whether, taking into consideration the Greek proposals on the territorial and constitutional aspects, he could say that a common ground existed, to which he replied: I believe that common ground can be found. At first perhaps we may not have common ground on the constitutional aspect, but I am sure that in many instances we shall find common points on which to agree.

Mr Onan also said that the map relating to the territorial aspect does not contain percentages.

Replying to another question, he said that the procedure that will be followed in the future will also be discussed at today's meeting.

UN Communique

NC051852 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] A UN communique [on today's intercommunal meeting] released a short while ago says that the Turkish Cypriot side submitted comprehensive proposals for a Cyprus solution, including a draft constitution, as well as territorial proposals on maps, one of which defines the proposed borderline between the two constituent members of the proposed federal republic while the other particularly refers to Varosha.

The UN communique adds: The Turkish Cypriot proposals also refer to arrangements on security matters. The next meeting will take place on 19 August.

National Council Meeting

NC061050 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Today the government said that the National Council will meet next week in order to discuss the Turkish proposals. The spokesman added: In the meantime, President Kiprianou will have separate meetings with the members of the National Council to brief them in connection with the proposals.

This morning the Council of Ministers held an extraordinary meeting under President Kiprianou's chairmanship; House President Ladhas also attended the meeting. Interlocutor Ioannidhis briefed the members of the Council of Ministers on the Turkish proposals. A preliminary exchange of views took place during the meeting.

O FILELEVTHEROS Comments

NC060737 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 6 Aug 81 pp 1,12

[Excerpts] Yesterday the Turkish Cypriot proposals were presented along with a map. It has been learned from diplomatic and other sources that the proposals refer to the territorial and constitutional aspects of the Cyprus problem, to questions of security and guarantees, and to the question of Varosha, a question which, however, the Turkish side does not give priority to. According to the same sources, the Turkish proposals connect and make mutually dependent the territorial and the constitutional aspects and provide for a package deal.

It has been learned from the same sources that in the case of the territorial aspect, the proposals provide for the return of territory equal to 3 percent of the entire area of Cyprus, mainly within the region of the villages along the old Nicosia-Famagusta highway, so that about 40,000 Greek Cypriots may be able to return to their homes.

On the basis of the Turkish proposals, the villages which are expected to be freed, thereby allowing their inhabitants to return to their homes, are the following: Asha, Vatili, Lysi, Kondea, Makrasyka and Athna. The territorial readjustments will entail the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Louroujina and from Limnitis in the Lefka area and from some parts of the Morphou region.

The Turkish troops will not withdraw from the area around Tymbou because the Turkish leaders cite security reasons for the Tymbou airport.

Although no details regarding the Varosha proposal have become known, according to the Turkish proposal it is estimated that about 30,000 Greeks will be able to return to their property.

It is expected that in the event of an agreement on the territorial aspect, the area of the present buffer zone, which is estimated at 3 percent of the land, will be returned to the Greeks.

In connection with the territorial aspect, the Turkish leadership does not insist on a 50-50 ratio of equal representation in the government, but rather proposes a 4 to 2 ratio. However, the Turkish leadership insists that the president of the state should by rotation be Greek and Turk.

As for the right of freedom of movement, it is suggested that orginally the question must be taken up by a special committee which will be set up, so that freedom of movement would be gradually implemented.

The assessment of the diplomatic sources, which have provided the above information, is that the Turkish proposals are very far apart from the Greek Cypriot proposals of 1977. And thus they expect that considerable time will be expended on hard negotiations.

CONTINUATION OF NEW DEMOCRACY PROGRAM STATEMENT

Part Eight

NC031950 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Part eight of New Democracy program to be implemented in the next 4 years--all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] INSTITUTIONAL CHANGES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE--ADJUSTMENT TO THE SPIRIT OF THE TIMES AND IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PEOPLE'S EXPECTATIONS

The next 4 years will be a period of institutional changes. The New Democracy program for the coming period foresees significant changes in all sectors. Through the measures that will be implemented in the civil service, the state will become the organ to collectively represent and serve the citizens. The civil service absolutely will respond to the spirit of the times and to the citizens' expectations.

The New Democracy program aims at: modernizing the civil service and increasing its productivity; raising the level of services; changing the mentality and behavior in relations with citizens; drastically reducing the jurisdiction and intervention of the civil service in the exercise of the citizens' productive and social activities.

Some basic directions emerge from these relevant goals of the civil service's various sectors which constitute the means that will bring about the radical reorganization and elevation of the civil service: First, the total number of publications, documents, regulatory degrees and legislative acts issued by all civil services will be examined from the outset, through the procedure of starting from zero. It is believed that easily and without any damage to the civil service's effectiveness, two-thirds of them can be abolished, something that will rid the civil service of a great burden and automatically will lead to a vertical increase in productivity. Second, a gradual reduction in the number of employees in the civil and state services will be considered, while conversely a radical increase in the number of employees dealing with the provision of social services by the state, especially in the sectors of education, health, welfare and culture, will be considered.

DECENTRALIZATION

Third, a true decentralization of administration will be implemented. This means that the central services, which will be radically reduced in power, will have no executive competency. They will exclusively perform staff work. The executive work will be undertaken by services that will be decentralized, at least at the district level. Interdistrict services will be abolished unless they are exclusively engaged with staff work. At the same time, the machine accounting of services will be promoted so that all regional civil services can be interlinked through electronic centers (terminals) with the central services. The decentralization of jurisdictions should proceed from district services to lower levels, that is, to local self-government, through the establishment of a second degree of local self-government. The goal in this instance is: The citizen should be served for most of his needs by the civil service in the village or town in which he lives and only for exceptional cases in the district in which he lives. It is not permissible for a citizen to have to go outside his district for any service except for higher education, supreme justice and the provision of specialized health services.

Other basic goals for the coming period are:

—The radical revision of the system of the organization of public services and the way of recruiting, promoting and paying civil servants.

—The raising of the level of civil servants, first through recruiting by region based on the graduation grades from lyceums in accordance with the needs of the local authorities and second through higher levels of compensation for positions of increased responsibility and through promotions based on production;

--Newly recruited employees will serve for 3 years as intraministerial employees in order to acquire all-round experience and will be made permanent employees after a substantive procedure with objective criteria.

Thus, both productivity will increase and the administration will be manned by experienced cadres. Specifically, in this sector the aims are to: guarantee the operation of a yardstick of the employee's productivity as the basic criterion for promotion; expand the institution of prizes to employees who are distinguished for their productivity; intensify and multiply programs for additional training and postgraduate education for employees in cooperation with the responsible services; and establish incentives for employees who serve in provincial towns with a high cost of living index.

PLANNING

Certain basic goals also exist in the sector of the administration's supervision and the training of cadres. We seek:

--To organize a more systematic and stricter supervision for the good operation of state services and employees' behavior toward citizens and their affairs. We can also entrust certain other jurisdictions to the former supreme council of civil services.

--To organize a similar system for the supervision of public enterprises and public organizations. The purpose of such supervision will be to coordinate the programs and activities of organizations with governmental directions and to examine the public's complaints on their operation.

--To help ministers increase the effectiveness of their work through the formation, in every ministry, of a ministerial staff office manned by scientific personnel with a high-level of competence enjoying the ministers' complete trust.

--To strengthen the elevation of the qualitative level of administrative cadres through the implementation of our plan for the establishment of a school for national administration. At the same time, branch schools will be established for large specialized branches like tax collection, customs and so forth.

In addition to all this, the basic prerequisite for the effective operation of the state mechanism and the civil service will be the planning and coordination of their activities. The various relevant programs, like the programs for public investments, the programs for the manning of public services and the corresponding program for public enterprises and organizations, will fall harmoniously within the complex of the plan for social and economic development which begins with the national plan and ends with the district plan.

These measures, which could have already modernized public administration to the standard of current demands, would have been taken and implemented earlier if New Democracy had not been compelled by the state of affairs since the change in the regime to have dealt, according to priority, with the restoration and consolidation of democracy, the defense of the country, the achievement of economic stability, the accession to the EEC and the raising of educational standards.

Yet despite these problems, significant steps were taken during the 1975-80 period in the public administration sector. Typically, it is mentioned that in the sector for the improvement of the human factor the 5-day work week was established, the advancement of the personnel's wage scale was made independent of the existence of organic positions and the sector for training employees was organized. In the sector of decentralization, decisive responsibilities were transferred to nomarchs, the preparation of nomarchy programs was decentralized, the country's planning regions were established, jurisdictions for irrigation and sewage projects in municipalities and communities were decentralized and steps were taken to abolish that responsibilities, new organizations were implemented in ministries, many sectors of the public administration changed to machine accounting, the compilation of the budget starting from zero began being implemented, productivity was increased and the state established a company which, among other things, is proceeding with the implementation of a plan for housing ministries in their own buildings.

[Text] 9. SECTORS: REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT-TOWN PLANNING AND ENVIRONMENT

A) REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT-TOWN PLANNING

The improvement of the standard of living of the people in the regions so that it will rank with the living standard of those in urban centers has been the basic policy followed in the field of regional development. For the first time, there has been coordination of a very broad program of technical and social infrastructure projects by introducing strong incentives to activate private initiative directed toward the regions; the results have been more than impressive. Continuation of the effort that was started in the past 6-year period is the basis of New Democracy's policy for the coming period, as well as achieving economic, social and cultural homogeneity from one end of the country to the other. The population of the Athens area will not increase at a rate faster than that of the rest of the country during the 1981-85 period; it will remain stationary during the 1986-90 period, and the ultimate goal is its reduction.

At the same time, the country's economic development will almost entirely come from the regions. In order to implement all this, there must be a complete network of health and entertainment services in the regions as well as cultural centers, the epicenter of which will be the university units which already exist or which will be established.

At the same time, the administrative decentralization and communication linking of the regions will proceed so that cumulative development forces can expend their dynamism throughout the broader regional area, deemphasizing the already developed large urban centers. In order to guarantee the success of this policy, the state's generous presence must be complemented by the undivided cooperation of local populations. For this reason, development of individual regions will be pursued through detailed programs that will befit the regions' peculiarities and comparative advantages, and will be based on broad popular participation for their preparation and implementation.

THE CENTERS FOR INTENSIVE PROGRAMS AND DEVELOPMENT

In this effort to confront regional problems, priority will be given to the productivity center's role. Each of the six centers for intensive development programs will be used as a focal point for the development of the corresponding region. At the same time, the development of many smaller urban and rural centers will be promoted if they show possibilities for developing and concentrating the population. The six existing productivity centers and the new ones that will be established for the remaining regions will be adequately equipped with technical, economic and social infrastructures, and will become places where priority is given to decentralizing of the administrative machinery and guiding private initiative to new investments.

In order to effectively promote the composite aims of regional development and town planning, as in all EEC countries, the policy of development by sector of activity (agriculture, industry, tourism, transport and so forth) will be followed by an evaluation that will create stable employment. Of course, an exception to this rule will be made for border areas, whose income will be strengthened and population maintained at the necessary size. The most basic of the relevant institutional, economic, administrative and other measures that will be taken will be:

--Banning the establishment of new industrial and other "bothersome" activities in the Athens area.

--Completing administrative and economic decentralization, at both the nomarchy and local self-government levels.

--Compared to the past, making greater use of the program for public investments and of the program of investments by public organizations, for the quicker implementation of regional and town planning goals.

--Increasing the strength of industrial areas.

--Establishing new independent hospital and university units and increasing the effectiveness of existing units so that a high-level socio-cultural infrastructure can be created in the provincial area.

--Granting economic incentives to new scientists to set up in regional areas.

--Strengthening domestic craftmanship in order to increase and stabilize family income, an element that will create strong tendencies for repatriation and permanent establishment in regional areas.

--Creating favorable bank financing of businesses established in regional areas.

--Operating mixed economy institutions to utilize the development potential of the various areas whenever sufficient private interest will not be manifested or whenever the mixed economy institutions are appropriate for this kind of activity.

--Completing town planning programs that already are being prepared for the six centers of intensive development programs that have been selected and promoting the procedure for the preparation of such program for the whole country.

These measures are a continuation of measures that were taken during the 1975-80 6-year period to deal with the regional problem. They aimed at creating the suitable institutional organs of administration and planning at the Regional level: at preparing and carrying forward special development programs; and at passing legislation on development, making provision for strong incentives for the country's private business potential. In this connection, the measures taken for timely dealing with the regional problem since the change in regime are the following:

--Planning bureaus were established in seven provinces; the central as well as the nine special services for regional development were reorganized and strengthened.

--Special development programs were prepared for nine problematic provinces (Evritania, Cyclades, Grevena, Rethimnon, Evros, Dhodhekanisos, Lesvos, Samos, Khios) and for six areas (Kalavrita District in the Akhaia Province; Falaisia in Arkadhia; Gortinia in Arkadhia; Elasson in Larisa; Sindiki in Serrai; Nevrokopion-Paraktion in Drama); the state contribution in investments has been strong.

--Along with all this, special programs were prepared for the development of rural settlements in 14 provinces (Voiotia, Fthiotis, Fokis, Florina, Korinthia, Lakonia, Messinia, Kardhitsa, Trikala, Kavala, Thesprotia, Ioannina, Xanthi, Rodhoppi); programs were also prepared for the development of 9 forest housing centers in 9 provinces (Evritania, Fthiotis, Kastoria, Pella, Florina, Grevena, Kardhitsa, Trikala and Ioannina) both in order to utilize the existing resources and to better organize the services for the population living around the viable rural and forest settlements.

--In order to promote infrastructure projects of local importance, a considerable part of the public investments program (15-20 percent) was utilized through the provincial program chain.

--A special effort has been made for the development of Evros Province through the financing of the World Bank.

--Laws 289/1976 and 849/1978 approved increased incentives aimed at encouraging and promoting private investments in nationally desirable areas; with the recent law 1116/81 the incentives system has been drastically improved.

--A special program for the regional development of the country for the 1981-85 period has been prepared. This program has already been accepted by the competent village organs as the basis for free aid from the European Regional Development Fund. It is noted that during the current year, 1981, aid from the European Regional Development Fund is estimated at 11.5 billion drachmas.

B) ENVIRONMENT

Better quality of life: This is the principle that defines the policy to be intensively implemented in the coming period by New Democracy.

Particularly for Athens, the basic goal is that the problem of atmospheric pollution be solved within 5 years. In order to trace the pollution sources, the stations that measure pollution will be increased from 5 to 20 within 1 year. By exercising strict control over automobile emissions, by improving the quality of fuel and by replacing all old buses, automobile pollution will be considerably reduced. Along with this, the problem will be solved through the compulsory adoption--in the field of industry--of suitable antipollution installations; strong incentives have been approved in this connection. Should it be necessary, industrial installations that cause serious pollution will have to be removed from Athens. Finally, by exercising strict control on central heating burners in buildings, this source of pollution will also be combatted.

Moreover, the natural gas plant will be removed [from Athens], and a special laboratory will be established to check on central heating burners. An effort will be made to import automobiles with emission control systems, with a corresponding reduction in import duties, so that their price will not be affected.

A similar program to combat atmospheric pollution is already at the stage of implementation for Thessaloniki. Similar programs will be carried out by 1985 in all the centers of intensive development programs. The institutional framework is ready and the experience gained from Athens will help much.

Beyond all this, considerable amounts will be spent to carry out sewage networks and installations to clean waste water in the capital and large urban centers. The full implementation of the program will cost 400 billion drachmas and will take at least 10 years to complete because of the size of the expenditure involved.

As for preventing degeneration of the environment, environmental education will be introduced in schools and more than 10 million trees will be planted in the next 3 years; at the same time, a special study will be prepared for every public and private project that could affect the environment.

THE NATIONAL CENTER OF ENVIRONMENT AND OF POLLUTION CONTROL

In the meantime, in order to control and forecast environmental problems, a national center (institute) of environment and pollution control will be established. Networks to watch all environmental conditions will be developed; special emphasis will be put on air quality, on internal and ocean waters and on household systems. Finally, the environmental services will be strengthened and organized, and reserach on environmental questions will be assisted. In order to protect the manmade and cultural environment, incentives will be approved for the development and protection of traditional settlements (tax exemptions, long-term loans, subsidies, special building terms); parks will be established in urban centers and trees will be planted, and sites for recreation will be developed (open air theaters, grounds for children's games, walkways). The old city quarters (Plaka, upper city of Thessaloniki, upper Siros, Rethimnon, the old Khania harbor) will be developed; the monuments and the sites around them will be protected. Finally, there will be continuous control over the closed gulfs (Saronikos, Pagasitikos, Thermaikos) and in general of all the sea areas which suffer from increased pollution (Patraikos, Evvoikos, the Gulf of Kavala); the establishment of new industries in some areas will be banned.

In order to protect nature, national forests will be manned and sea parks will be established (Vorio Sporadhes, Koufonisia, Arki-Lipsoi, Armathia of Kasos, Gavdhos, Paximadha of Crete); care will be taken for the protection of recreation areas, areas of special interest, exceptional coastal sites, sites at river mouths, in mountainous areas and so forth.

The environmental problems were taken up by the New Democracy governments immediately after the change in regimes, when a policy for the protection of the environment was formed. This policy has become a reality and its results will soon be seen.

Specifically, the foundations have been laid for an institutional framework, and measures have been taken. Some of these measures are characteristic:

A number of laws for the protection of the environment have been passed. The most important of these laws refer to city planning and environment; the control on agricultural chemicals; the industrial areas; the protection of marine environment; the settlement areas; the protection of forests and of forest areas; irrigation and sewage. The entire environmental program was accepted, and so were the pertinent EEC acts, and a series of international agreements referring to environment were signed.

In order to prevent and combat sea pollution, special antipollution vessels and aircarft to locate filth were purchased.

A service to control industrial pollution of waters has been set up and has been operating; strong incentives have been approved to build installations to clean waste water. The construction of sewage works and of installations to clean waste water has been promoted in order to protect water against pollution in both the area of the capital and in areas suffering from an acute pollution problem.

Particularly in order to scientifically establish and measure the extent of atmospheric pollution in the area of the capital, five monitoring stations have been established. In order to combat pollution, the following measures have been taken:

--The establishment of new industries within the capital has been prohibited.
--The use of Mazut for heating buildings has been prohibited.
--The presence of lead in gas has been reduced from 0.7 grams per liter to 0.4 grams, so that it may be one of the lowest in Europe--East and West.
--The operation of the big electric power station at Keratsini has already been stopped.
--Oil with a lower sulphur content has been bought, and it is already available in the market to meet the needs of the capital.
--Although no other kinds of incentives have been provided for the industry in the capital, as an exception, incentives have been provided for the installation of systems that reduce pollution.
--About 1,000 old thermic buses have been replaced by new ones and 150 new electric buses have been put into operation.
--Uneven crossings are already being built at the intersection of central thoroughfares, this will contribute to the easing of traffic congestion and the reduction of automobile pollution.

[Text] 10. SECTORS: TRANSPORTATION-COMMUNICATIONS-MERCHANT MARINE-TOURISM

TRANSPORTATION

This sector's achievements in the 6 years--from 1975 to 1981 are particularly important as are the New Democracy plans for the period to follow. The basic policy goals for the next 5 years are:

(A) A coordinated development of the transportation system so that it contributes effectively toward the goals of economy and regional development, simultaneously lowering transportation costs for passengers and goods.

(B) Connecting the country with the Common Market countries in a complete network of land, sea and air transportation, which would neutralize our geographical distance from the EEC countries and boost the country's role as a link between Europe and Middle East.

(C) Maximize saving in energy consumption by increasing the use of more energy-efficient transport means.

(D) The use of transport means in such a way that the environment is protected.

--In the sector of land transportation: In view of the great importance in linking the two large consumer and urban centers with the important economic development centers, the government will proceed to build highways as well as regional access roads. Among these will be the Turkish border-Igoumenitsa highway, connecting the country's most productive agricultural centers with the transport link to EEC countries, the central Greece-Ipiros highway and the Corinth-Kalamata highway.

The system will be augmented with other road nets of secondary priority. Building these highways will demand tremendous expenditures, to be financed by international organizations and by levying tolls. This will be the goal in the next 10 years.

--The emphasis given to the railway sector during the 1975-80 period will be continued during the next 5 years with a series of projects for improved passenger service and goods transport by rail. It also envisages a series of institutional and organizational measures to attract passengers and goods transport by rail. The basic two-way electrical Athens-Thessaloniki railway line to be built will ultimately shorten the distance by 4 hours. The cost of the project is estimated at 70 billion drachmas. Projects to improve part of the Thessaloniki-Idhomenis railway line have also begun.

--In the sector of sea transportation, the goal is that even the smallest island will have a communication service 4 times per week, while there will be connection with the bigger islands at least once daily. There will be fast boat connection with each group of islands. In order to achieve this, coastal communications will continue to be served by private initiative but it will be organized in six operational groups; Cyclades, Dodecanese, Aegean Islands, Crete and Ionion Islands, while the sixth group will consist of the ferryboat routes of short and medium distances that will continue their usual operation. In the first five groups, utilization of the communication routes will be unified in partnerships or in another form of group utilization that will guarantee a rational distribution of routes and use of ships as well as fuel economy. In this way it will be possible to introduce the fastest possible access to transport by fast ships and aircraft. The resources of unproductive routes will be used to realize these goals. Connection of islands within the same group, particularly that of the Cyclades and Dodecanese groups, and interconnection between the various groups themselves will also be pursued.

--Air traffic will be improved and further developed by interregional connections as well as interconnection of islands with big airports. When the building of the new airport at Spata begins, the air traffic system will be modernized with EEC financing the project.

A special effort will be made to solve urban transportation problems, particularly in the metropolitan area, where problems cause bitterness and adversity because of the high construction costs. Specifically, in the metropolitan area it is envisaged to build 12 elevated crossings, at a cost of 1,700 million drachams, as well as new roads, roundabouts and wider roads. In order to improve and maintain the transport network of the capital, it is envasaged to spend 3 billion drachmas in 1981-1982. At the same time, the work on the first priority subway line will be speeded up; 700 buses and 60 trolley will be added and an electronic control system for bus routes installed. The government gives special priority to solving the Athens communications problems to achieve smog abatement.

Similar arrangements will be made for Thessaloniki to prevent the problems facing Athens. A request for a feasibility study for a subway in Thessaloniki will be made.

B) COMMUNICATIONS

The basic goals in the telecommunications sector in the next years are:

A) Linking all homes to the country's automatic overseas network. B) The quantitative and qualitative improvement of the international telephone and telex system. C) Satisfying the demands of all citizens in urban areas for installation of telephones and D) The improvement of the radio communication for seagoing ships.

In order to fulfill the above goals in the 1981-85 period a very important telecommunications development program has been drawn up. This program is already being implemented and includes the following projects:

--The necessary installations to increase telephones by 1 million (new lines). It is noted that during this period efforts will be made to increase the number of telephones in the provinces.
--The installation of underwater telephone cables in 1981 between Greece and Syria, Greece and France and Greece and Cyprus. In 1983 it is envisaged to complete the installation of underwater telephone cables between Greece and Egypt.
--The installation of two international electronic telephone centers by 1983.
--The installation of a third earth satellite station at Thermoplyae for completion by the end of 1982.

When the above projects are completed, the capacity of the installations serving international communications will have more than doubled, making Greece an international telecommunications center, which will have particular importance for making Piraievs into an important international shipping center.

The basic goal in the postal sector is the speediest possible despatch of letters. Studies are already underway for the modernization of the whole system and in the next 2 months a special plan will be implemented to improve postal service.

C) MERCHANT MARINE

Thanks to the human factor's long experience we, by comparison, enjoy an important advantage in shipping. This advantage along with the size of our merchant marine makes shipping a strategic field within our national drive for greater economic development. This fact, as well as the changing conditions in sea transportation, make certain adjustments imperative; they dictate New Democracy's shipping policy. This policy is conveyed by the following guiding principles:

1. Continued assistance to shipping in order to develop it to international standards.

2. To improve and augment shipping with better telecommunications, fuller technical servicing, faster refueling and, generally, with all necessary facilities.

3. To utilize our EEC participation. This means that we will actively participate in drawing up a joint shipping policy, based on joint interests and freedom of transportation, and that we will move a greater amount of EEC trade than before.

4. To develop coastal shipping communications and reform the pertinent routes to achieve energy economy and improved communications between the mainland of Greece and the islands.

5. To exert systematic efforts to attract Greeks for manning Greek vessels on which foreigners are now serving because there is not sufficient response by Greeks. For this purpose, the following measures are under study and will soon take the form of more concrete legislation:

--The service on board ship will be considered as military service and can, therefore, substitute for the latter.
--The time of service necessary for a seaman to receive a pension will be reduced.
--The training of seamen will be conducted in short stages and the theoretical education will be combined with the possibility of salaried employment.

6. We will pursue the utilization of our experience in the maritime field with the aim of granting technical assistance to Middle East countries and establishing joint companies.

7. Regular lines of sea communication will be established with the countries and ports to which a significant part of our exports are directed.

8. An organization for research in maritime issues will be established with the participation of employers, seamen and the state.

D) TOURISM

Basic directions in the policy of tourism will be the further increase of touristic potential and the improvement of its distribution according to areas and composition, as far as the size and type of units are concerned; to improve the quality of services rendered, and the establishment of the necessary structure particularly concerning sewage, waste treatment and irrigation.

Therefore, it is expected that the number of beds will increase by about 12,000 a year with emphasis on areas that are comparatively advantageous and have not as yet developed to the saturation point under present conditions of substructure and superstructure. Specifically, efforts will be exerted so that at least 2/3 of the new beds will be established in western Greece, western and southern Peleponese, Crete and the eastern Aegean Islands. In the latter area, two international airports are being developed that will constitute the necessary substructure.

Also, for the development of tourism, generous incentives will be given to areas with considerable tourist resources--but that have a low level of development--in order to maintain and utilize traditional housing and buildings for tourist purposes.

In accordance with law 1116 of 1981 on development, emphasis is given to small- and medium-size units of family character--which contribute toward regional development in a more profitable manner--in order to reduce to the minimum the problems of viability faced by the big units in less developed areas.

Another basic aim is to develop tourism through competitive incentives as compared with other sectors of economy in order to safeguard the viability of units.

Our country possesses cultural and natural resources in a great variety and dimension, that are also very sensitive to big touristic congestions, whereas the substructure and manpower potential are very limited. Therefore, a basic goal of our policy on tourism is the selective attraction of a relatively limited touristic wave of high financial level and specialized categories (such as sea tourism, cultural-spiritual tourism) that do not raise problems of a change in our environment or our cultural inheritance.

BRIEFS

NC051010 Istabul TERCUMAN in Turkish 30 Jul 81 p 4

[Nur Batur report from Ankara]

[Text] It has been learned that representations have been made to the German Government for the early implementation of German military aid to Turkey. Upon the postponement by the German parliamentary commission until September of the decision to extend 130 million marks worth of military aid to Turkey within the next 18 months, Turkey has informed the German Government that it deplored this decision of the German parliament and urged the signing of the agreement which will make the use of the aid possible.

Commenting on the decision of the German parliamentary commission to which Ankara has reacted strongly, a high-ranking official said: "This attitude of Germany has disillusioned us."

According to information received, upon this reaction from Turkey the German Government too has characterized the German parliament's decision as deplorable. German Government officials have pledged to work hard for the acceptance of an agreement concerning the approval of military aid worth 130 million marks due in September.

However, observers draw attention to the fact that the suggestion for the postponement of the aid decision was made to the commission by German Foreign Minister Genscher himself. These observers believe that the German Government has acted in this manner in order to prevent a further decision from being taken by the German parliament against Turkey.

The German parliament is expected to reconsider its military aid to Turkey some time in the middle of September. On the other hand, while the aid to be extended to Turkey is being postponed, it is reported that agreements concerning military aid to Greece and Portugal are going to be signed today.

Meanwhile, it has been learned that following Turkey's representations, the German ambassador to Ankara has gone to Bonn to participate in the talks.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT DISCUSSES ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

DW070923 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1840 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Reporter Schroeder interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--live]

[Text] [Question] Don't you think that more growth would help solve a large part of the tax and unemployment problems?

[Answer] Basically, I hold the view that we should have more growth than we actually have at present. Just as with the economies of some other countries, we have the opposite of growth--a decline in the overall production of goods and services. We must have positive growth again because otherwise the unemployment problem cannot be solved. By the way, this is a problem we have to cope with just like almost all other countries. Strictly speaking, we are better off than almost every other country because unemployment here is lower. Nonetheless, it worries me very much.

[Question] It is bad luck in that this high tax debt occurs at a time when growth, as you said, leaves much to be desired internationally. But doesn't this mean that, besides the economy program you want to pass in September, investments should also be boosted considerably?

[Answer] I would like to do both at the same time, but as you said in the film you just showed--a film containing many right and many wrong things--doing both things simultaneously meets with criticism. In all the criticism of the Federal Government's economy measures, I have only heard complaints. I haven't heard that anybody is satisfied. I have read in the newspapers that we don't economize enough. Now you are asking me if we aren't possibly economizing too much because this could affect economic activities in general. But you totally forget that the decisions made by the Federal Government last week also envisage tax allowances for the purchase of mobile economic goods, for instance. The term mobile economic goods is somewhat misleading, but it is the technical term. It means machinery and automobiles and other installations for factories, industrial enterprises and commercial enterprises. Depreciation allowances for new equipment are meant to promote the purchase of more new equipment. This will then lead to orders in the machine building industry or even in the industry manufacturing office furniture, and this will create jobs. By the way, significant depreciation allowances are involved. Within 3 years, these depreciation allowances will result in decreased tax revenues which will not be offset by tobacco taxes. The increased tobacco tax revenues will then be smaller than the loss of tax revenues as a result of depreciation allowances.

[Question] You talked about criticism. Is it new for you to allow yourself to be dissuaded by massive criticism from pursuing a course that, properly speaking, you consider right?

[Answer] No, I am sticking to it. I only wanted to mention this criticism. It is my impression that the people have a high degree of understanding for the fact that in the summer of 1981, the international situation is much less positive than a year ago and that we now have to act accordingly. We just don't want to have the high taxes, interest rates, unemployment and prices that the United States has, for instance. Therefore, people feel positively that it would never be right to simply copy U.S. economic policy. Regrettably, we cannot just copy the French economic policy either. These are the two extremes in the West today. The French who raise more loans for the state to be able to spend more money and the Americans who lower taxes--and, therefore, must also raise high loans, by the way--and hope they will boost the economy in this way, but in so doing have to put up with very high interest rates. As you know, both in Washington and in Paris the interest rates are much higher than here in the FRG. If we copied what our two partners are doing, our interest rates would rise considerably. This would substantially hinder economic activities in trade, industry and the construction industry.

[Question] You said you have talked with the people and found out that they don't much like to pay very high taxes. Who does anyway? Therefore my question: Will there be a special levy, an additional tax, or will you reject this?

[Answer] That's hard to predict at the moment. Basically, our tax burden has changed very little in 30 years. It has always been roughly 24 percent of our gross national product. It is similar today. In principle, I am against the tax burden being increased. An additional tax payable by all for a limited time would be possible. It would be used to finance additional jobs. This is being discussed, but it is too early to give an answer. As for me, I want to repeat that it is out of the question for me to increase taxes just to fill gaps in the federal budget or in the budgets of the laender, municipalities and communities.

[Question] You have left the question of the special levy open, but I must ask you an additional question. In the Federal Republic, we have talked for a long time about the fact that we have reached the limits of taxation and that the will to produce may decline as a result. Is the government aware that the will to work would possibly decrease even more, that public disaffection would grow and, above all, work to avoid taxes--work which experts estimate at DM50-80 billion--would increase if such a complementary tax were to be imposed?

[Answer] As for work to avoid taxes and illegally hired labor, the Federal Government will pass a law on 2 September which will prohibit such abuses. By the way, I don't believe that the will to produce will necessarily decrease if a special levy were to be imposed temporarily--for, say, 2-3years. We had such a special levy once, as you know. It was introduced in 1967 when Strauss was finance minister. It was in effect several years and it certainly did not dampen the will to produce. As I said, a basic requirement is for the 24 percent limit of our gross national product not to be substantially exceeded, but I am not advocating such a special levy. What is more important for me is for the dynamics of our economic activities to be set in motion again. The improvements I mentioned regarding depreciation on new machinery serve this purpose. I also consider tax allowances for depreciation on new buildings possible--multistory apartment houses, for instance, and factory buildings.

[Question] Considering the present labor market situation and the figures we heard yesterday, we could imagine that more must be done for investments than you have indicated thus far.

[Answer] We predicted the present unemployment figures. We are far behind other countries in this respect. Unemployment in the FRG is roughly 5 percent, a bit more recently. In other countries, in America, it is about 8 percent, and in other states 10 percent. I don't want to name them all. We were aware that we would be dragged into this wake of high interest rates. Therefore, the recent unemployment figures are no surprise to the Federal Government. On the other hand, our export figures are rising, as President Geiger said in an earlier interview. This is a good sign. The balance of payments, more precisely, the balance of German payments abroad and of the payments we receive from abroad developed much better in the second quarter of 1981 than in 1980 and in the first quarter of 1981. This is a positive development and as annoying as the steep rise of the dollar may be--this is connected with the high interest rates paid in New York--I am equally happy that the German export economy is taking advantage of its opportunities and that the economic activities of exporting industries are growing at present. This gives them a chance to create new jobs in the future although jobs always come later than orders from abroad.

[Question] You made some decisions by the end of July, but haven't new developments taken place recently, as shown by various data, which possibly could lead to new considerations in September--unemployment which has grown too much, the dollar which has risen too much and the end of the illusion that the U.S. interest rate might go down this year, which would give our Federal Bank some leeway of action so as to lower our interest rates and thus boost our economy?

[Answer] Mr Schroeder, we predicted the present unemployment. As I said, after the Ottawa world economic meeting in the last week of July, we know that the U.S. interest rates will remain at over 20 percent. We waited for that meeting to take place before we met for our own decisions in Bonn. Assuming that in America 20 percent continues to be asked and paid, in France 22-23 percent and in Italy 26-27 percent, then we do not want to be dragged into this wake. Therefore, the state is reducing its borrowing. This means that it will cut expenditures so that it does not need so much money and does not have to borrow so much. The less money the state borrows, the more credit is available for other purposes and the easier it is for us to keep our interest rates at a low level and hopefully to even lower them in the coming months. For reasons of growth and employment--just think of the building industry--we are interested in low interest rates. I am very confident that our economic policy will generally also do better in 1982 than some of our partners and neighbors I mentioned earlier.

[Question] You aren't considering uncoupling the German mark from the dollar?

[Answer] The German mark and the dollar are not coupled and have not been since the early 1970's. I was finance minister at the time. That is almost a decade ago. At the time, Federal Bank President Poehl was state secretary in the Finance Ministry. All this was long ago. The present rise of the dollar is very easy to explain. In New York, you pay more than 20 percent interest. When somebody in the Arabian peninsula has made money with oil, he wants to invest and get interest for his money. If he gets 20 percent in New York, but only 12-13 percent in Frankfurt, he will invest a large portion of his money in New York because it yields more interest there. Therefore, the dollar is strong because all those who want to invest in liquid assets internationally will invest in the dollar. Nonetheless, there are a lot of people who invest their money in German marks, even though they receive less interest, because they know that in the long run the German mark is a very stable currency. This will remain so.

[Question] Can we expect the package to be ready and made public early in September?

[Answer] As far as I'm concerned, it is ready now. But on 2 and 3 September, it will be given legal form. This is necessary. For instance, if there are trials somewhere, everything must be carefully written down and have proper legal form. But you can definitely expect to have the results on 3 September.

FEDERAL BANK HEAD VIEWS FINANCIAL SITUATION

DW061301 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 7 Aug 81 pp 15, 16

[Rudolf Herlt interview with Karl Otto Poehl, president of the German Federal Bank--place and date not given]

[Text] ZEIT: The chancellor has quoted you as having assessed the Bonn austerity decisions and revenue increases for the consolidation of the federal budget as follows. You said that the overall result will exert a positive influence on the future development of the German mark's external value and of the credit markets. Are you really serious about this? After all, the self-chosen goal of the Federal Government to ensure relief of roughly DM21 billion for the budget has by far not been reached. Besides, a final result cannot be expected before September.

Poehl: I think that we ought to appreciate the efforts of the Federal Government and the coalition parties to reduce the budget deficit. This is an extremely difficult task in view of the revenue losses attributable to the economic cycle and in view of the additional expenditures, for instance on unemployment benefits. If they succeed in limiting the federal budget deficit to DM26.5 billion and an increase of slightly more than 4 percent and if the laender and communities also follow the example of the Federal Government, then I think this will indeed have a positive effect on the DM exchange rate. But the introduction of a special levy for the purpose of financing an economic development program would surely spoil this positive effect.

ZEIT: Do you believe that the decisions will be seen as confidence-building measures abroad and will find expression in a more solid exchange rate of the DM?

Poehl: The Federal Bank has always maintained that what matters is for financial policy to also contribute to the adaptation process in which the German economy now finds itself. I have criticized often enough the fact that the development of public spending in the current year and the high deficit have aggravated the adaptation process. After all, expenditures by the Federal Government, the laender and the communities increased much more than originally envisaged.

By the way, the high deficit is attributable in part to the tax cuts adopted last year by all parties. The deficit in the public budgets would have been much smaller this year if the tax reductions and the higher children's bonuses had not been adopted last year. With smaller budget deficits, the overall trade deficit would also have been smaller. What I mean to say is this: The different governmental levels did not contribute to the adaptation process to the required degree. This is what the council of experts also made clear through its special expertise.

In this connection, the latest Bonn decisions at least constitute a step in the right direction. I hope they will contribute to an improvement in our external economic situation as well. Such an improvement is then bound to have an impact abroad and on the foreign exchange markets.

ZEIT: What is the overall economic deficit that the Federal Bank recently calculated for 1980?

Poehl: The results of the past few months show that there has been a gradual improvement in our overall economic balance. During the first quarter of 1981, the deficit seasonally adjusted, amounted to roughly DM10 billion whereas in the second quarter of 1981 it came to slightly more than DM5 billion. This means that the deficit in our overall economic balance has been practically cut in half.

You can also figure this another way: If you consider 2 months at a time, then the deficit came to DM3.5 billion in December-January, DM2.5 billion in February-March, but to DM1.5 billion in April-May. This tendency also continued in June, if we omit special factors that tend to distort the picture. In June, our trade balance showed a surplus of DM1.7 billion, with the second quarter surplus totalling DM7 billion. This is a clear improvement. For 1981 we are counting on the overall economic deficit being slightly smaller than last year.

Due to the high deficit in the first quarter, we already have an overall economic deficit of nearly DM15 billion for the first half year. Yet the trend is definitely positive and this is what counts. It may well be that we are past the worst stretch.

ZEIT: People who deserve to be taken seriously support the view that our overall economic balance will be back in shape by 1983. Supposing that another oil price shock does not occur, would you venture a forecast?

Poehl: A normalization of the dollar-DM exchange rate--I think an exchange rate of DM2.50 is abnormal--definitely would exert a favorable influence on our overall economic balance because our oil bill, for instance, would then be correspondingly smaller while our exports would not be affected in any considerable way. It is very difficult indeed to venture a forecast on exchange rates because they depend on many factors beyond our control, for example on U.S. interest rates or developments in Poland. Keeping all these restrictions in mind, there is a certain degree of probability that our overall trade balance deficit will be considerably reduced by 1983--with the proviso, of course, that there is not another oil price explosion.

ZEIT: Does this mean that the German economy's adaptation to more expensive energy has already begun?

Poehl: We have indeed made considerable progress toward adapting to the changed external economic situation. We have had considerable success in reducing energy imports. Oil consumption during the first half of 1981 dropped by 12 percent and that of gasoline by 6 percent. This is attributable partly to the weak economic growth in the Federal Republic and partly to the notable efforts to find substitutes for and to conserve oil.

Since fall last year, our exports have been developing in a very favorable way--happily especially those to the OPEC countries. Thus, seasonally adjusted our exports to these countries during April-May 1981 increased by no less than 23 percent over those of February-March: and during February-March they were 11 percent greater than in the preceding period. At the same time, our imports decreased.

What does concern us, of course, is the oil bill, which has increased enormously. Because of higher oil prices, but also because of the worsened exchange rate of the DM, we will have to spend as much as DM95 billion this year on energy imports, that is, roughly DM20 billion more than last year. This constitutes a great blood-letting. What also plays a considerable role is the spending abroad by German tourists, although the worsening of the DM exchange rate and the strong price hikes abroad surely have had a dampening effect on the eagerness to travel. Nevertheless, I figure that German tourists this year will spend foreign exchange worth about DM40 billion on travel in foreign countries. Compared with the first half of 1980, our money transfers to the European Community increased from DM2 billion to well over DM3 billion. The money transfers transacted by the guest workers this year will amount to about DM7 billion. We need an enormous increase in exports to finance all these expenditures.

ZEIT: The Federal Bank is being charged with disturbing this adaptation process by its high interest policy because energy-saving investments and innovations can be financed only at great expense and, as a result, are possibly being neglected. What do you have to say about this charge?

Poehl: This charge is particularly foolish because if anybody tried to promote this adaptation process, it definitely was the Federal Bank which has been drawing attention to the need for this assimilation for a year and a half. Restrictive monetary policy is an inevitable prerequisite for the successful continuation of this process.

By the way, what do you mean, high interest policy? Viewed historically, the interest rates of the Federal Republic are high, granted, yet viewed internationally they continue to be relatively low. At the moment, we have an interest rate difference for dollar investments on the Euromarket that amounts to more than 6 percent to the advantage of the dollar, and also at the long end of the market we have a considerable difference between our interest rates and the dollar rates. Together with Japan and Switzerland, the Federal Republic has the lowest interest rates among all the most important industrial countries.

It goes without saying that we cannot completely isolate ourselves from the worldwide interest rate environment, much less as a deficit country. But this interest rate difference, which is favorable for the Federal Republic and for the DM, indicates a sort of advance confidence bonus for the DM which we, however, must earn over and over again.

ZEIT: It cannot be denied that the high interest rates are not particularly useful in domestic economy. Industry can help itself a little better by incurring short term debts in the hope of better refinancing later on. But the construction sector is getting the ax again. Instead of a continuous level, it shows an erratic and expensive up and down development. Is the Federal Bank willing to put up with that?

Poehl: The high interest rates do have their effect, of course. But the effects are not as clear as people often claim. It is wrong, for example, for large companies to be less affected than smaller companies. Big and small--this is not the proper criterion. The proper criterion for judging the effect is whether a company shows a profit and whether it has debts. A company which doesn't make a profit and has large debts is naturally hit much harder by the high interest rates than is a company which achieves high profits from which it can deduct interest rates as operational expenses and which perhaps does not have any debts but assets and therefore, even profits from the high interest rates. There are such companies, big and small. Our findings so far show that the high interest rates to date have not had an excessively negative effect on investment activities, although I do admit that considerable problems may emerge for many companies if the high level of interest rates continues.

As far as the construction sector is concerned, I believe that the poor business, especially in underground construction, but also in building construction, is only partially the consequence of the Federal Bank's policy. It is, presumably, much more attributable to the massive cuts in public orders and in part to the recent cost explosion in that particular sector and in the real estate business. The high interest rates are one factor--though not the only one--responsible for the situation in the construction market, which is indeed not very satisfactory.

ZEIT: If the process of the DM's expected recuperation begins, the Federal Bank would gain a certain leeway to reduce interest rates at least on the capital market. How large would you estimate this leeway in view of a net borrowing of DM26.5 billion by the Federal Government alone anticipated for 1982--borrowing which would be less than that of the current year but still very high?

Poehl: The credit financing of public spending is in fact one of the reasons for the current level of interest rates. A reduction in borrowing surely would have favorable effects on the capital market. But I feel that the decisive result would be found in foreign trade development. If, for instance, changed exchange rate expectations for the DM were to occur as a consequence of a reduced overall economic deficit and perhaps due to other developments beyond our control--then this would create pressure on the interest rates.

We saw that last year. The interest rates at the time dropped considerably when the DM was temporarily relatively solid. There is a close interconnection between exchange rates and capital market interest rates. Naturally, a change in the exchange rate expectations would also enhance the leeway of the Federal Bank. But all these considerations are subject to the highly insecure condition that such a change in the exchange rate expectations for the DM will occur at all. As for myself, I am rather optimistic, but it also depends on the development of the interest rates in the United States. A forecast in that respect is extremely difficult to make.

ZEIT: In reply to the U.S. money market policy which has resulted in record interest rates, the Federal Bank developed a policy made up of two objectives: the overall economic deficit was supposed to be financed by imported capital if it was not eliminated by the economy's adaptation and the domestic hotbeds of inflation were supposed to be kept under control. Both objectives were pursued with the high German interest rates. At the time, a policy of purposeful DM devaluation was rejected. These objectives were inadequately attained. Devaluation could not quite be avoided, whereupon inflation was imported and the inflation rate kept increasing despite high interest rates. Suppose you were facing the same situation, would you pursue the same policy with today's experiences?

Poehl: Experience is the best teacher, to be sure. But I believe that all told, our policy has been rather successful. We have succeeded in preventing the dramatic worsening of our overall economic deficit from becoming a vicious circle of devaluation and inflation which we have observed in many other industrial countries. Despite the massive increase in the oil prices and despite pressure on the exchange rate of the DM and a strengthening of the dollar, we have succeeded in preventing an inflationist process. I may be allowed to point out that we continue to have the lowest inflation rate of all industrial countries. Today, we have an inflation rate which is even lower than that of Switzerland. This alone I would call a success, also attributable to the policy of the bank of issue.

Granted, we failed to prevent the DM from losing just about 30 percent of its value against the dollar since the fall of 1980. However, we have prevented the DM from being equally devalued in comparison with other currencies. On the contrary, since 19 February, the DM has been the strongest currency within the European Currency System again. In view of our economic potential and our relatively low inflation rate, this is not surprising, though I may be allowed to recall that just a few months ago some people suggested that we carry out a devaluation within the framework of the European Currency System--an especially foolish suggestion because this would have most severely shaken the confidence in the DM.

It is also a success of our policy, as I said earlier, that we have an essentially lower interest rate level than most other countries. This reflects the confidence of foreign investors in the long term development of the DM. During the past few months, we have, in fact, succeeded in importing more long term capital than exporting such long term capital. This surplus in the capital balance is a very positive sign.

Would I pursue the same policy again? Well, generally speaking, yes. But seeing what the present state of affairs is like, I might say that the measures we adopted on 19 February 1981 (drastic increases in interest rates--DIE ZEIT) should have been taken earlier. Perhaps we hesitated a bit too long because such hard decisions certainly cannot be easily made with a clear conscience in view of the situation on the labor market. But what remains valid in retrospect is this: The decision was inevitable and appropriate. I would recommend it any time.

ZEIT: During the past 10 months in which the DM-dollar exchange rate decreased, the Federal Bank occasionally intervened to the advantage of the DM. How much in dollar reserves did the Federal Bank spend to support the DM?

Poehl: Even though we are rather reserved with regard to dollar interventions, our dollar expenditures since the beginning of the year have nevertheless reached the equivalent of about DM9 billion. At first glance, this amount may seem quite large but it must be seen in relation to the massive money and capital movements with which we are dealing nowadays.

ZEIT: You have no choice in the European Currency System; you are obligated to intervene there.

Poehl: We do have intervention commitments there. Especially prior to, and after, the French presidential elections, we bought a considerable amount of French francs--about DM14 billion worth. We also intervened to the advantage of the Belgian franc. From these propping operations, we currently still have demands in ECU (the accounting unit of the European Currency System--DIE ZEIT) against the European Currency Fund which amount to the equivalent of DM9.5 billion. But I must say that developments took an opposite course up to 19 February. Until then, we had been debtors in the European Currency Fund. It was through our intervention that we first of all repaid our debts.

ZEIT: Unusually high profits accumulate at the Federal Bank from the high interest revenues and the sales of dollars. Do you think it is right for the federal finance minister to insist on the letter of the law on the Federal Bank and to propose to use it for filling the gaps in the budget?

Poehl: We would have preferred to see the finance minister put less than DM6.1 billion in his budget. Then a reserve could have been created for years in which the Federal Bank would not make such great profits. But we have to respect the decision of the government. In this respect, the law on the Federal Bank is quite unequivocal. Besides, the payment of profits of the bank of issue to the government is common practice in other countries as well, for instance in the United States. But it goes without saying that we will make allowances for this profit transfer in our monetary policy. This does not mean at all that state expenditures are financed by creating additional money. Nothing will change in the pursuit of our policy of strict money supplies.

ZEIT: What repercussions for the Federal Republic do you anticipate from President Reagan's program which has now passed the Congressional obstacle?

Poehl: What we see in the United States right now is a fascinating experiment in economic policy. Opinions about its outcome are divided. Some people fear that massive tax cuts and additional arms expenditures will cause an acceleration of inflation, an increase in budget deficits and a worsening of the overall economic balance, and thus probably also lasting high interest rates. Others, and they probably constitute the majority in the United States now, regard this policy as the overture to a new economic policy era which will lead to an economic rebirth of the United States. Time will tell who is right. But no doubt the outcome of this experiment will also have far-reaching consequences one way or another for Europe in general and the Federal Republic in particular. We cannot do anything but try to keep our own house in order.

MITTERRAND HOLDS CRISIS MEETING ON FRENCH IN IRAN

NC061333 Paris AFP in English 1330 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Aug (AFP)--President Francois Mitterrand today headed a five-hour crisis meeting at the Elysee Palace called to discuss the plight of French nationals blocked in Iran.

Elysee spokesman Michel Vauzelle said afterwards that Mr Mitterrand had established the "French position" and was following the situation minute by minute along with his Foreign Ministry.

An Air France plane was meanwhile standing by to leave Paris for Tehran to collect the nationals, "if conditions allow," the spokesman said.

The French Embassy in Tehran announced earlier that the 61 nationals due to leave Iran today would be allowed out on Monday, and another 50 would fly home on Wednesday.

Today's meeting was attended by Elysee Secretary-General Pierre Beregovoy, Deputy Secretary-General Jacques Fournier, Chief of General Staff Jean Saulnier and technical adviser Hubert Vedrine.

An Elysee statement issued afterwards said Iranian authorities pledged yesterday to put no obstacle in the way of any French person wishing to leave Iran, and that exit visas were accordingly issued.

The pledge was made in Tehran to French Ambassador Guy Georgy and presidential envoy Paul Depis, the statement said.

The Iranian charge d'affaires in Paris was meanwhile summoned today to the director of the office of the External Relations Ministry.

According to the statement, President Mitterrand decided the following moves on Tuesday morning after consulting Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy:

--The offer of transport home to French nationals in Iran.

--The recall for consultations of Ambassador Georgy.

--The maintenance at the French Embassy of a skeleton staff to ensure continuity of French representation.

--The dispatch to Iran of Mr Depis, Middle East deputy director at the External Relations Ministry.

An earlier Elysee statement issued last night announced Mr Mitterrand's decision "to invite French people living in Iran to return temporarily to France and to recall the French ambassador for consultations."

Paris Notes 'Iranian Joke'

LD061456 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Excerpt] We know partially why Islamic militants opposed the departure of a first group of 61 French people at Tehran airport this morning. The spokesman from the Iranian Foreign Ministry explained that the 4-day delay in the departure of our compatriots was due to inquiries into the legal and financial backgrounds of those who want to leave Iran. It is only when these inquiries are completed and the Iranians are sure that the French are not leaving behind debts that the green light will be given.

The spokesman from the Iranian Foreign Ministry also pointed out that the French were invited by Francois Mitterrand to leave the country. The Iranian Government, he added, has never demanded such a thing from France, and concluded: The French are our guests and they can remain in Iran in complete security, as in the past. This is doubtless an Iranian joke.

Tehran Passengers Checked

NC061749 Paris AFP in English 1743 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Aug (AFP)--All Iranian passengers aboard today's regular incoming flight from Tehran were kept at Charles de Gaulle airport north of here for close to four hours for minute identity checks, questioning and searching their luggage.

The unusually thorough controls were enforced on special orders from the Interior Ministry, reliable sources said. For each passenger, a special card was made out with each person's motive for coming here, duration of stay and address of residence in this country.

The plane, a Boeing 747, had been sent to Tehran to bring back 61 French nationals, including French Ambassador Guy Georgy. But they were prevented from boarding the plane at the last minute by Iranian officials.

French President Francois Mitterrand yesterday advised all French nationals to leave Iran pending settlement of the crisis between the two countries over the granting of asylum here to Iran's ousted President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr.

According to Italian and Belgian passengers aboard the plane, the Boeing left Tehran airport after a three and a half hours delay. The French group had already registered their luggage, which was waiting on the tarmac to be loaded. Then uniformed Iranian officials suddenly separated the French from the other passengers.

A Belgian industrialist said controls at Tehran airport had been particularly stringent, perhaps to make sure no one got aboard who was French. "They even made me take off my socks," the Belgian recalled.

An Italian national said the French initially thought they were being separated from the other passengers "for some special formalities."

In fact, as was learned later from the French Embassy in Tehran, an Islamic judge had suddenly turned up when all normal formalities had been completed with the announcement that no French national was to leave before establishing that he or she did not owe money in Iran.

One Iranian passenger here, after finally being allowed to leave the airport, said that the current resentment felt among Iranians for the French over the Bani-Sadr issue was nothing compared to "the hatred of the Iranian people for the Americans."

Fifty-two Americans were held hostage at Tehran's U.S. Embassy by Iranian revolutionary guards for about 15 months.

Bani-Sadr Reminded of Pledge

NC061814 Paris AFP in English 1810 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Aug (AFP)--Two French Foreign Ministry officials today visited former Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr at his residence just outside Paris and recalled to him the "undertakings" he had made when he received asylum here nine days ago. Mr Bani-Sadr had undertaken not to engage in any political activity or make any political statements while in France.

The visit came as the Iranian authorities delayed the departure of French residents who wished to leave Iran following a call by French President Francois Mitterrand.

Sources close to Mr Bani-Sadr said the ousted president wished to make no statement on the current crisis between the two countries as he did not want to embarrass the French Government.

FRENCH, SPANISH MINISTERS CONFER ON EXTRADITION

PM061531 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 4 Aug 81 pp 5-6

[Pedro S. Queirolo dispatch: "Fernandez Ordonez in Paris--France To Examine Every Extradition Case"]

[Excerpt] Paris, 3 Aug--Spanish Justice Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez had a 3-hour conversation today with his French counterpart Robert Badinter on the subject of the extradition of Basque Fatherland and Liberty terrorists. According to the Spanish minister, the atmosphere of the meeting was good on the personal level since the French minister is a very pleasant person with whom it is very easy to conduct a dialogue.

Because of the delayed takeoff of the Spanish minister's plane owing to fog in Paris, the two ministers and their aides started by lunching together at the French Justice Ministry in Place de Vendome, rapidly proceeding to discussions, first between the two ministers and then between the delegations.

Consignment of Spanish Document

Next, a joint communique was released which states that Fernandez Ordonez handed the French minister a document laying down the bases of Spain's position on extradition and also expressing the seriousness with which both the Spanish people and Government regard the problems.

Fernandez Ordonez stressed "the destabilizing effect that terrorism could have on democracy." For his part, Badinter pointed out that the French Government is well aware of the full gravity ofthe problems voiced by his Spanish counterpart and that it would therefore carefully examine the document delivered to it and would issue a reply soon. Badinter also confirmed to Fernandez Ordonez the French authorities' desire to "search in France for the authors of any crimes committed on French territory in connection with crimes committed on Spanish territory." The Spanish minister explained to journalists that this would include the "revolutionary tax" [extortion by terrorists] which both governments consider an economic offense.

The two ministers envisaged the possibility of drawing up a new extradition convention to replace the French-Spanish convention of 1877 and to deal more effectively with the new requirements of the struggle against modern common law crime. The two justice ministers also examined some measures for civil and commercial legal cooperation to improve the transfer of legal decisions and to simplify formalities.

One paragraph in the joint communique states that, "with regard to the extradition requests presented by the Spanish Government, the French Government will carefully examine every case and will make its decision in accordance with its principles regarding extradition."

Very Frank Dialogue

Speaking to Spanish correspondents, our minister commented that as far as he was concerned the conversation had been "extraordinarily frank" and that he had explained his position to the French minister "without any kind of reservations," also explaining to him the position of the Spanish Government and public on this subject, and that "help in the anti-terrorist struggle is help in the freedom struggle, because terrorism is a spiral which encourages fascism and the struggle against freedom."

With regard to the existing extradition agreement, which has been in operation for over 100 years, the Spanish minister said that "it is sad that at this moment when Spain is a democratic country with no constitutional death sentence, which has ratified article 25 of the Council of Europe's Human Rights Convention--which is something that France has not done--which has a judicial system with a degree of independence that France's has not and which has statutes granting a very high degree of autonomy--it is sad, I repeat, that all these problems are emerging at this moment."

"We believe," Fernandez Ordonoz added, "that the general rule in the extradition convention is that these cases be dealt with, that the general rule must not be confused with the exception, and all we are asking is that, since separate decisions have been reached by French courts in Paris, Pau and Aix-en-Provence that certain offenses were common rather than political crimes, the French Government should respect the decisions reached not by our courts but by its own. Be that as it may, in view of all this, it has been suggested that the extradition convention itself be revised to clarify the situation."

The Spanish minister believes that the subject of extraditions cannot be examined in isolation, in other words, that it is only one part of a comprehensive agreement reflecting the French authorities' cooperation in the antiterrorist struggle. "What concerns us is that France must not become a refuge for terrorists, which is one point on which France's determination is very resolute."

FIRST FOOD AID SHIPMENT HEADS FOR POLAND

NC061636 Paris AFP in English 1618 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Aug (AFP)--Trucks containing meat for Poland started moving out of Brittany, northwest France, today, with a minimum of 1,200 tons to be delivered by next week, it was announced here.

A total of 5,000 tons is to be delivered to the meat-starved country this month and 11,000 tons by the end of September under a plan for food aid to Poland announced yesterday by Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy.

The meat, mostly beef and veal, had already been in refrigerated stores after being taken off the French market to maintain prices.

MITTERRAND AIDES BEGIN AFRICA TOUR 4 AUGUST

PM061015 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Aug 81 p 5

President Mitterrand's two envoys are due to return to Paris on 10 August.

SPADOLINI INDICATES EARLY ELECTIONS NOT LIKELY

AU070825 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 7 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini, the first non-Christian Democrat government leader in postwar Italy, today ruled out the possibility of early general elections and said forecasters of a government crisis in the autumn are "adventurers" in an interview appearing in today's issue of the Rome daily LA REPUBBLICA. "This is not a government which can be ousted by a crisis created by the party apparatus; those who want a crisis will have to openly vote against us in Parliament," the premier said.

Political observers interpreted this statement as a direct reply to recent forays of Social Democrat Party Secretary Pietro Longo who has voiced doubts about the duration of the government and Spadolini's ability to solve the nation's most impelling problems. Speaking of the latter--inflation, terrorism and the moral issue--Spadolini pointed out that his cabinet is "an emergency government which must cope with and possibly resolve serious issues which could virtually jeopardize the stability of Italian democracy's institutions should we fail."

With regard to terrorism, Spadolini said that the government is aware of the new wave of violence sparked by the Red Brigades which want to become a "worker's bargaining force, a kind of armed reformism" in northern Italy.

In reply to criticisms levelled by Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer on the make-up of his government, Spadolini admitted that he had hoped "to do more in the sense of renewal, but there has been some renewal and it will continue." He concluded by saying that he does not believe that "the current legislature must, as some believe, end ahead of schedule."

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE P-2 LODGE

[Excerpt] Rome, 6 Aug (ANSA)--An Italian parliamentary commission will open an investigation into the secret Propaganda-2 (P-2) Masonic lodge headed by fugitive venerable Master Licio Gelli. The new commission slated to probe the affair, which brought down the government headed by Christian Democrat Premier Arnaldo Forlani at the end of May, will be made up of twenty senators and an equal number of lower house representatives and will have 6 months to investigate the links between the lodge and political and economic centers of power in Italy and abroad.

In one of its last acts before the summer recess, the Senate also approved legislation based on Article 18 of the constitution which virtually outlaws secret organizations in the nation. Both bills will be sent over to the house when it reconvenes on September 7 for final passage into law. The legislation has already been approved in the house but the few points modified in the Senate will require definitive passage by the chamber. The two laws will not ban Freemasonry in Italy but will disband P-2, under investigation in Rome and Milan as an alleged occult center of political and economic power and key link in a wide range of criminal activity.

In another development in the case this week, Argentine authorities have agreed to act on the Italian request to open an investigation there into the activities of the venerable master of the P-2 lodge, wanted in Italy to face charges of criminal association, conspiracy and military and political espionage, a crime which carries a sentence of fifteen years in prison. Argentine authorities have also been asked to take Gelli into custody on the international warrant signed for his arrest. The P-2 venerable master, who was the economic councilor for the Argentine Embassy in Rome until the scandal surrounding his lodge broke in the spring, has apparently not set foot in Italy this year and is thought to be living in a South American country.

PCP SENDS GREETINGS TO 10TH PCE CONGRESS

PM061400 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 30 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] PCP Central Committee Secretariat member Jorge Araujo left for Madrid on 27 July to represent the PCP there at the 10th PCE Congress.

The 10th PCE Congress takes place in that capital from 28 through 31 July. The PCP Central Committee sent the PCE the following greetings message:

Dear comrades, on the occasion of the 10th PCE Congress, the PCP Central Committee conveys to the PCE Central Committee, the delegates at the congress and the Spanish communists and working class the Portuguese communists' fraternal greetings.

The heroic sacrifices made in the past by the communists and workers of your country are well known in Portugal.

Today, when we are witnessing in Spain the recrudescence of terrorism and of fascist putchism, when the working class and the working masses are being severely affected by the Union of the Democratic Center government's reactionary policy and when Spain's entry into the aggressive NATO military bloc is being prepared, we wish to reaffirm to the communists, the working class and all the peoples of your country our feelings of fraternal solidarity with their struggle in defense of democratic freedoms, for social progress and in defense of national independence.

The final defeat of the fascist attempts, as well as the defense, consolidation and broadening of democratic freedoms and workers' rights, are not only in the interest of the peoples of Spain, they serve the cause of peace and social progress in Europe and the world.

U.S. imperialism and NATO's most warmongering circles, attempting at all costs to oppose the vigorous development of the revolutionary process and to impose their hegemony in world affairs, have launched a dangerous aggressive counteroffensive which is threatening peace and the peoples' security; it must be resisted vigorously, resolutely and confidently.

However, the international situation continues to be characterized essentially by the consolidation and strengthening of the socialist countries, in contrast to the deep and widespread crisis in which capitalism is struggling because of the broadening of the struggle of the workers in the capitalist countries against the policy of the monopolies and for peace and because of the successes of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America in their struggle for national and social liberation. In Europe, the influence of the proposals of the USSR and of the other countries of the socialist community in favor of detente and disarmament is increasing, the camp of the supporters of peace is broadening and large-scale mass actions against the deployment of the new U.S. missiles are taking place and a reversal of the trend in political evolution in a direction favorable to the democratic forces is becoming clearer.

To curb and finally defeat imperialism's counteroffensive, the cohesion of the international communist and workers movement, the soundest foundation of the unity of the revolutionary forces of our era--the socialist countries, the progressive countries, the working class in the capitalist countries and the national liberation movement--is of fundamental importance.

Comrades, some 7 years after the historic people's and military uprising of 25 April, the Portuguese revolution, despite the violent attacks for which it has been a target and the severe blows which it has sustained, remains alive in the nationalization measures, the agrarian reform and other democratic gains, as well as in our people's firm determination to defend them.

The reactionary forces, which today have at their disposal the government and the majority in the assembly of the republic, are persisting in their subversive plan and seeking to eliminate the constitution and to restore the power of the monopolies and the big estates. For this, they enjoy the support of U.S. imperialism and of the EEC monopolies. However, they are finding themselves confronted by a powerful people's mass movement.

Firmly combating the antipeople and antinational policy of the reactionary "Democratic Alliance" government, the PCP constantly directs its activity toward the mobilization of the working class and of the people's masses and toward unity among the democratic forces--specifically, between communists and socialists--despite the socialist party leaders' persistent rejection. With the narrowing of the "Democratic Alliance" government's social and political support base and the deep crisis which is raging in the reactionary alliance, the conditions are being created for the ouster of the current government and for a democratic alternative which will be in keeping with the interests of the workers and of the people.

The PCP, guided by the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, continues to swell its ranks and to strengthen its social and political influence, appearing today, with 187,000 members, as an essential force for the defense of democracy and for the resolution of the people's and the country's problems. It is within this difficult and complex context that the Portuguese communists find real grounds for confidence in the defense and victorious continuation of the April revolution.

Dear comrades, wishing you successes in the proceedings of your 10th congress, which are aimed at defending the interests of your country's working class and workers. We reaffirm to you our desire to continue to work for the development of the relations of friendship and solidarity between the PCP and the PCE, in the interest of our two peoples and countries, the unity of the international communist movement and the common cause of freedom, progress, peace and socialism.

Long live the fraternal friendship between the communists of Spain and Portugal!

Long live proletarian internationalism!

CALVO-SOTELO, GARAIKOETXEA CONFER ON AUTONOMY

PM060957 Madrid ABC in Spanish 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Excerpts] The meeting at the Moncloa Palace yesterday between Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and the head of the Basque autonomous government Carlos Garaikoetxea lasted less than 2 hours.

Garaikoetxea stated on his way out: "We discussed very diverse problems connected with overall state policy, especially the state problem concerning the organization of autonomy, which is being handled in a very peculiar manner."

After stating that he discussed the university autonomy bill with Calvo-Sotelo, Garaikoetxea emphasized: "We expressed our disagreement concerning the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process."

Asked about the autonomy agreements, the Basque country premier said: "They have been reached in a very peculiar manner, since whereas the desirability of our tackling state problems is mentioned, it happens that problems which affect us directly are handled between the government and the four main parties." "The prime minister," he added, "asked me to authorize somebody to take part in the autonomy meetings, but this participation was confined solely to information."

In this connection, Carlos Garaikoetxea stated: "We requested of the minister of territorial administration that he invite us to take part in the autonomy meetings, but the response was ambiguous. It is paradoxical that when our participation is mentioned so frequently we should subsequently not be invited to take part."

Asked whether the agreements reached between the government and the parties could alter the statutes, Garaikoetxea exclaimed: "It would be the last straw if it were said that the agreements alter the statutes." "We did not discuss the contents of the law on the harmonization of the autonomy process," he said later, "since it is scarcely 48 hours since we received it and we have not as yet been able to study it."

After stating that the work carried out by the joint transferences commission had been highlighted, the Basque country premier added that, concerning the autonomy agreements, "making amendments now arouses no optimism since there are 60 points on which agreement has been reached. What we will do is to continue to assert our disagreements."

As far as the law on the harmonization of the autonomy process is concerned, the Basque country premier asserted: "We disagree with a law on harmonization since this is anti-constitutional." He also stated that Calvo-Sotelo reiterated his desire to have exact information on all these issues.

Last, referring to petitions of unconstitutionality, Garaikoetxea stated: "There is a desire on both sides not to bother the constitutional court."

For his part, the government's representative in the Basque country, Marcelino Oreja, stated at the conclusion of the meeting: "There are many issues which have been resolved although some remain to be resolved." "The outstanding issues have been virtually resolved." Concerning housing, he said, "agreements have been reached in which there are neither victors nor vanquished."

"There are still no agreements on issues such as the regulation of employment and social security, but progress has been made on both issues since there is a will to make progress on both sides."

Next the government representative stated that Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo made it clear that those issues which are clearly defined in the statutes will undergo no alteration, "but it will be necessary to clarify the ambiguous aspects."

As far as the law on the harmonization of the autonomy process is concerned, Oreja stressed: "It is a matter of a bill, and so it is not closed. We are awaiting comments from the Basque government."

Last, Oreja stated: "The Basque government was invited to specify in what way it wished to take part in the negotiations."

UCD SPOKESMAN DISCUSSES MODERATE PLATFORM

PM070841 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 28 Jul 81 p 13

[Joaquina Prades interview with Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) parliamentary group spokesman Miguel Herrero de Minon: "I Do Not Foresee Approval for Signatories of Moderate Platform"

[Text] Question: What is your aim in presenting the moderate platform manifesto?

Answer: To form a current of opinion within the UCD to regenerate centrism in three ways: by regaining and increasing our voters' confidence; by reasserting the undertakings we made to our voters in 1979, to which end we have tried to establish priority topics, last, by guaranteeing the Calvo-Sotelo government's stability.

Question: Do you hope to meet with spokesman of the UCD's other currents to examine this proposal jointly?

Answer: Yes, I trust that we will be able to meet soon to help draw up a joint program embodying certain priority topics and a timetable for resolving these major issues within a more or less fixed period.

Question: You said before that the UCD needed to be regenerated. In your opinion, what is it that has degenerated within the governing party?

Answer: Well, for any political movement to function properly it must regenerate itself continuously, and we have observed from very recent opinion polls and from the outcome of the recent regional elections, so negative for the UCD, how far we are from our electorate. The UCD has lost in the two latest electoral contests, not because the Spanish Socialist Workers Party has improved but because a large proportion of our voters stayed at home. Well, we must restore hope and lost confidence to this large body of abstainers.

Question: To what do you attribute this entrangement?

Answer: There are various causes. In the first place, we have disenchanted people because of many things which we promised and which have not been realized, such as, free basic education. That was an issue which stirred our electorate and it is still waiting. Then we have acted rather negligently over some issues. To take one instance, the Spanish civil service does not know right now what will become of it or where it is going. A civil service law remains to be enacted, the administration is paralyzed and the incompatibilities law has not been drafted, either. Finally, they do not even know--with the autonomous communities--to whom they will be subordinate.

Question: But you once opposed the incompatabilities law.

Answer: Yes, but I opposed it because article 15 of the law on budgets did not specify how much it would cost to implement the law nor was there study on how many people or whom it would affect. If that law had entered into force last 1 January, the situation of rural health and of the officials with intermediate posts would have been critical by now. What I did was to ask that these things be checked and this is what the committee is doing. Moreover, it is not only that which has estranged us from our electorate; we have handled a mass of laws in parliament whose general significance was very relative, and I am not referring to the divorce law.

Question: So what, in the moderate platform's opinion, are those priority issues on which the UCD should reach agreement?

Answer: In the first place, the autonomies. Right now the state is in doubt. It has not been formed and that is a grave matter. Next, public security and economic security, and that implies security at work, security in savings and security in investment. Nowadays it seems that those who spend their money on prawns pay less to the state than those who save to invest in the creation of new jobs. But of course, nobody invests today because people find it more profitable to keep their money in a bank for a fixed term or to spend it.

"Current Television System Is Irrational"

Question: You have declared yourselves to be unconditional Atlanticists.

Answer: Yes, of course. The fact is that Spain's entry into NATO was already in the 1979 election program.

Question: And don't you believe that the population could be consulted by means of a referendum, preceded by a national debate?

Answer: No, I do not believe so because the people who voted for us already knew what our stance was and we are representatives of the people's will. There will be sufficient debate in parliament; the referendum seems to us unnecessary.

Question: In your manifesto, you demand the right to set up private television networks. Do you demand this because you do not like the existing television network?

Answer: Of course, I do not like the existing network because it seems to me very inconsistent. It is not that this television system is centrist, leftwing or rightwing; it simply is unpredictable and, therefore, irrational. I would require of the current television system only that it be objective and in tune with the general awareness of Spanish society, instead of distorting it. But it is not only for that reason that we are demanding private networks. The fact is that we believe that it is a constitutional right which citizens cannot be denied.

Question: Why do you believe that the moderate platform represents the electorate better than other UCD families?

Answer: We do not believe that at all. Our program represents our electorate and that is what we wish to reaffirm. Somebody had to take the first step, which, moreover, I will tell you is no pleasure but the performance of a duty, despite the personal harm which it will do some of us.

Question: There are those who believe that you will use the moderate platform as a political launching pad.

Answer: Every politician must be prepared to accept government responsibilities, but a politician's real mission is to influence public affairs, Every politician who is not a self-seeker must know that. Look, political posts, including that of parliamentary spokesman, are not held to keep them but to use them in the service of what you believe. I have always distinguished very carefully between my institutional activity as group chairman and my specific ideas as a deputy. But the idea of using the moderate platform for vaulting toward power is untrue: We wish to use it as a platform for promoting the essential values of the UCD and its electorate.

Support for Calvo-Sotelo

Question: If the Executive Committee decides to penalize you at its meeting today, how will you respond?

Answer: I don't know how we will respond because we do not believe our stance offers any ground for penalization. We are not an organized tendency within the party, but a current of opinion, and we believe that a mature democratic system functions around currents of opinion and not around positions of power. Moreoever, we have expressed our desire for unity through the established hierarchical channel. We have reaffirmed the UCD's election program and we have proclaimed our loyalty to the prime minister. So there has been no indiscipline or conspiracies or anything of the kind. We are so little aware or unaware of any indiscipline that I cannot imagine that we will be penalized for using the constitutional right of freedom of expression.

Question: And what is Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo's opinion of all this?

Answer: We have expressed our full support for the prime minister. We have not acted on his instructions or sought to involve him in the least.

Question: Since most of the signatories of the platform are Christian Democrats, is it to be believed that you will be a confessional current?

Answer: No, because it is not true that the majority are Christian Democrats. Only 19 of the 39 signatories can be so described.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES NATO ENTRY

[Excerpt] Spanish Defense Minister Alberto Oliart rejects the hypothesis that Spain's entry into NATO implies the setting up of a single command of that organization in the Iberian Peninsula.

Interviewed by the IPS news agency in Santander, Oliart said that "although the Iberian area is a single geographic and possibly strategic areas, Spain's entry into NATO should be effected respecting the two countries' sovereignty and individuality because the good neighborliness and good friendship between Spain and Portugal are based precisely on that." He added that "any other formula could bring into crisis or affect that relationship."

Oliart maintained that his country's entry into NATO "does not presuppose changes in Spain's current relations with the Warsaw Pact countries," but emphasized that "there would bound to be changes in relation to the United States because the dealings with the United States include a number of agreements which, in fact, would no longer be necessary."

'BLUE ARCHER' SPOKESMAN DENIES SETTING FIRES

RIZOSPASTIS ON NATO EVALUATION OF AEGEAN ISLANDS

[Text] The Aegean complex which is composed of many rocky islands can offer ideal bases for the launching of intermediate-range nuclear missiles after suitable military installations have been constructed.

This evaluation has been put forth by NATO staff officers in their analyses of the military situation of the Atlantic alliance's south wing. NATO military commander General Rogers expounded similar positions at the recent meeting of "the group of experts of the highest level" which took place in Brussels.

One of the meeting's basic issues was to plan the installation of the new U.S. missiles of the "cruise" and "Pershing-2" types on West European territory in conjunction with the special political difficulties that have arisen concerning the implementation of this plan [the Netherlands case).

More recent reports confirm that the area of the Mediterranean basin has been chosen as an alternative solution in case the installation of the missiles is prevented in one or more of the five NATO-member countries that were originally selected (Britain, FRG, Belgium, Netherlands, Italy). In fact, at the Brussels meeting the view was expressed that "strategic reasons" dictate the installation of U.S. "Euromissiles" in NATO's southeastern sector regardless of the position (positive or negative) of the five previously-mentioned countries.

According to the same reports, General Rogers spoke at the review of the military situation of the Atlantic alliance's various sectors about the "downgrading" of NATO's "defense" system, compared to the current strength of the Warsaw Pact, and correlated this "downgrading" with the reluctance of certain member countries to align themselves with the new nuclear doctrine of the U.S. Pentagon and the NATO military leadership.

General Rogers specifically referred to the significance the "strong shielding" of the Aegean area has which--he said--constitutes the basic defense mainstay in the eastern Mediterranean.

According to the evaluation of NATO staff officers, currently only the Aegean islands can offer "effective nuclear protection" to the Turkish Straits and furthermore to Turkey's hinterland in the event of a general conflagration in the Atlantic alliance's southern sector. The Western staff officers are paying special attention to the northern Aegean islands which lie, at the same time, in Ankara's focal point of "claims." This "coincidence" of Turkish demands with NATO's strategic expediencies in the area provides an additional explanation for the reasons why the Atlantic leadership persists on the reorganization of NATO forces in the Aegean.

CONTINUATION OF NEW DEMOCRACY PROGRAM STATEMENT

Part Eleven

NC050830 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 4 Aug 81 p 5

[Part 11 of New Democracy program to be implemented in the next 4 years--all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 11. SECTORS: EDUCATION-SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH-CULTURAL ACTIVITIES-SPORTS

A) EDUCATION, FREE AND CREATIVE CITIZENS

The New Democracy policy on education strives for:

--forming people who are free of will and thought, that respect the decency of others as well as their own; people who look forward to a better character within a civilized society and are faithful to the nation's long-lived traditions.

--creating citizens, that is, persons, who are conscious that they belong to a social aggregate and have the duty to improve it, because only under total prosperity will they too benefit.

--developing creative persons in all sectors of economic, social and cultural activity who would explore something original and new, the prototype, the benefactor to all. By correctly assessing his aims, every creative person will be devoted to the work that suits his temperament best and that, at the same time, is useful to the social aggregate. Thus he will respect his work and that of the social aggregate, and he will feel happy and will only be ashamed of inactivity, indifference and laziness.

On the basis of these principles, New Democracy believes that education constitutes the basis not only of a person's character and mental cultivation but also of the nation's social, economic and political development.

This New Democracy belief desires more and better education without prejudice, but with a feeling of responsibility, daring and effectiveness.

FOR BETTER QUALITY OF EDUCATION

In the next 4 years, New Democracy, on the basis of substantive educational reform, will offer to all the Greek people a better quality of education. Educational planning has determined the following goals in this direction:

1. Complete the school housing program with the provision to build 16,000 new classrooms while making a rational distribution of school units in accordance with the regional education map of Greece that has already been prepared. Thus, it will be guaranteed that all schools will operate in the morning in modern, fully equipped buildings, and that the prescribed number of students for every class will not be surpassed, that is, 30 for elementary schools and 35 to 40 for high schools and lyceums.

2. Create and fill 15,000 new positions.

3. Renew programs and books for all traditional studies and introduce new contemporary lessons in all classes and levels. Working groups have already begun preparations. The process will become more practical, specific and attractive.

4. All children of 3 and 1/2 to 5 and 1/2 years of age to be accommodated in public nurseries.

5. Special care in teaching foreign languages. This teaching will be reorganized on new bases and will be strengthened in such a way as to gradually extend to the last two grades of the elementary schools, to cover the entire secondary education sphere and be introduced as an optional subject in lyceums.

6. Preferential strengthening of Technical Vocational Education (TEE) to guarantee the uninterrupted and full operation of its units. Simultaneously, the development of such education will be completed on a pan-Hellenic scale, resulting in at least a full KETE [Center for Vocational Technical Training] operating in every district and a KATEE [Higher Technical and Vocational Education Center] in every geographical region of the country [a total of 16, including the new KATEE of Kalamata, Lamia, Ipiros and Thrace), particularly, will encourage the degree of participation of enterprises and industries in executing alternate programs in technical-vocational education and practical training that will be held in their installations. Lastly, the special TEE 5-year development plan will be implemented at a cost of 14 billion drachmas which envisages:

--Equipping of school laboratories with modern instruments and machinery for the fuller consolidation of theoretical knowledge of the laboratory students.

--Modernizing education and analytical programs of higher technical and vocational schools aiming at raising the educational level and the following scientific and technological developments.

--Determining and legal safeguarding the professional rights of graduates of technical and vocational schools by creating positions at private and public enterprises for absorbing the new graduates.

7. To bring about a socially desirable flow of student forces through sound vocational guidance, approproate psychological molding of public opinion and legislating a network of movements.

8. To improve the institution of pan-Hellenic examinations as follows:

--by adding a third group of optional subjects for candidates of economic schools.
--students, who will not pursue higher studies to be free to choose three subjects from the master list of subjects without having to take the pan-Hellenic examinations.
--transmission of the examination questions by means of "telecopying" so as to reduce waiting time for the students to the minimum.

9. The goal for the children of Greeks in the diaspora is to strengthen their national identity and at the same time ease reexamination on the basis of our country's educational system provided they return to the motherland.

10. Youths between the ages of 18 and 25, who are outside the educational system and who do not possess any vocational qualifications, will be socially and vocationally cared for. Special programs will be organized for them at public centers for accelerated vocational training. Such programs will function in every province.

11. There will be exceptional care for special categories of children whose education or vocational qualifications require adjustment to special needs. Thus, for physically or mentally handicapped children, who cannot attend ordinary schools, the recent law on special education and special vocational training will be applied with the goal of having at least one fully equipped and manned special school in every province within the next 4 years.

12. Better utilization of the 5-day work week at schools through the organization--on a voluntary basis--of athletic and cultural activities for the students on Saturdays.

13. Strengthening of parents-teachers cooperation because New Democracy believes that education is a matter that concerns everybody and not exclusively the state.

14. Improvement in the quality of education by reforming the system of basic and postgraduate education. Thus, the basic qualifications of all teachers will be at university level. For this purpose, the operation of pedagogical academies, schools for kindergarten teachers, the national physical academy and the school for domestic economy will be terminated. Instead of these, a pedagogical university will be established with faculties in Athens and Thessaloniki; a domestic economy section will operate within the highest school of agriculture in Athens. The programs for our university professors will also be revised, and practical and pedagogical training will be introduced before they take up employment. A system of continuous refresher training will be introduced for the teaching personnel at all levels of education.

15. Methodical reassessment of teaching, and separating teaching from administrative work; duties not falling within teaching will be restricted while increasing the administrative staff at schools. In order to prepare the staff that will exercise in the future managerial or supervisory duties, the schools for secondary and elementary education teachers will be converted into training schools for educational administration.

16. Educational reforms will be implemented by legislating a framework for highest education. This legislation will seek to reform the institutional status of operating universities, consolidate a liberal class of scientists and restore the prestige of this category. Along with this, freedom to exercise the right to teach and learn will be safeguarded; flexible forms of administration and planning will be legislated in order to replace the professor's chair by the sector and the operation of the supreme education council, which will consist of university professors and which will be the competent body for planning and unified development of all the highest educational institutions of the country.

EDUCATIONAL REFORM FOLLOWING THE CHANGE IN REGIME

During the past 6-year period, the structure and the content of education have undergone fundamental changes which have already produced positive results.

Although the reform measures and their content are now well known to all, it is necessary to cite the main measures because for decades they were the Greek people's visions and aspirations. These reforms constitute the elements of peaceful revolution in the field of education.

--Introduction through legislation of 9 years compulsory education by adding 3 years of general secondary education to the 6-year elementary schools.

--Solution of the language problem through the introduction of modern Greek language for us in education and administration.

--Constitutional introduction of free education, free allocation of school textbooks for all levels of education.

--Abolition of the unilateral general education with emphasis on the turn toward technical education; establishment of lyceums for technical and vocational education that will be of equal standard and value.

--Separation of the old type of 6-year gymnasium into 2 independent school units--the 3-year gymnasium and 3-year lyceum.

—Reformation of the school programs and their expansion by means of new institutions: such as school-vocational guidance; technological subjects; athletics; educational television; optional subjects.

—Renewal of almost all textbooks.

--Abolition of entrance examinations for the highest educational institutions and introduction of a better and fairer system of options.

--Introduction of the 5-day work week in all schools.

Now these measures are the property of the people and it is certain that their beneficial effect will decisively affect the future course of the nation.

--The new structure of education--with its flexible form--not only does not block and does not lead to deadlocks but also attempts to rationally face the current reality in education. At the same time, it seeks to protect the youths from wrong orientations and psychological injuries which could result from failure in their career or from wrong guidance. Thus, the current educational system provides for the following:

--It has moved the first option of subjects to the end of the 9-year compulsory education.
--It enables a change in the education field if the student changes his initial decision.
--It provides the possibility to opt from among the various lines of education offered by the lyceums of secondary education.
--It gives everyone the possibility to cross over to the subsequent steps of education.
--It opens the gates to the labor market more easily.

It is obvious that carrying out the goals of our education policy is dependent on the improvement of the infrastructure of our education. Thus, although we are amid a period of international economic crisis which has forced all OECD countries to restrict their expenditure on education, despite being burdened with increased defense expenditure, in the field of education we have sought a continuous increase in expenditure. Thus, total public expenditure on education, which was about 14 billion drachmas in 1974, has reached 53 billion drachmas in 1980 and will reach about 66 billion drachmas in 1981. These amounts, viewed as percentage of the national revenue, show an increase of about 24 percent during the same period. Public expenditure for new buildings, which in 1974 was 3.3 percent of all investments, will reach 11 percent in 1981. As a result of this policy, there was spectacular improvement in crucial fields of education, such as school buildings and education personnel.

During the 6-year period 1975-1980, a total number of 14,200 class rooms were built compared to 4,300 classrooms during the 1965-1974 period. In 1981, another 3,000 new classrooms will be built. Thus, the number of classrooms built during the last 7 years will be more than the number of classrooms built during the last 1 and 1/2 centuries.

The numbers of teachers, which in 1974 was 54,235, had in 1980 increased to about 80,950. In the intervening period between school year 1976-1977--when the reform of education was begun--and school year 1980-1981, the following improvements were effected:

--The number of kindergartens was increased by 43.9 percent and the number of children by 39.4 percent; the number of kindergarten teachers was increased by 68.6 percent. Thus the average number of children per teacher dropped from 27.7 to 22.9.

--In elementary education, although the number of elementary schools and schoolchildren did not change, the number of teachers was increased by 17.9 percent; the average number of schoolchildren per teacher dropped from 30.2 to 25.

--478 new gymnasiums were established; as a result, the 9-year compulsory education became a reality since the 98 percent of the corresponding age group continued to attend gymnasium this year.

--Secondary school teachers, numbering 17,378 when law No. 309/76 was passed, now total 29,590, a 70 percent increase, lowering the number of students per teacher in high schools from 27.8 to 22.7 percent and in lyceums from 23.3 to 17.9 percent.

--For secondary technical education 129 technical high school, 121 vocational high school and 114 technical and vocational schools were established, while the number of teachers increased by 95.1 percent.

--At the higher technical and vocational education level, six new KATEE (Florinis, Kozanis, Serrai, Kavalas, Khalkidhas, Mesolongion) were established as well as SELETE [School for Teachers in Trades and Technical Education] annexes at Thessaloniki, while the number of students and teachers increased rapidly and the ratio between them improved.

--During the same period, the number of tutorial books, free to students of elementary and secondary education, has increased from 15,167 million in 1974 to 23,496 million books in 1980. There was an equal distribution in technical-vocational, higher and highest education books.

HIGHEST EDUCATION

In the highest education sector, the presence of student youth injured by the 7-year dictatorship and the efforts of the leftist parties to exploit them politically, and the world crisis in highest education, have dictated a particularly careful and studied approach to the problem. Committees were formed and have undertaken to work our legislation to reform the highest education, resulting in the draft bill recently submitted by the government to the Chambers of Deputies. Retrogressions and the final negative stand of the opposition did not facilitate the passing of the bill.

Together with the effort to shape the appropriate draft bill, substantive measures were adopted to improve the highest education with particular emphasis in the political development of the regional universities. Thus, during the last 5 years, the organizing and operating of the universities at Patrai, Ioannina, Thrace and Crete advanced considerably with new faculties, new sections, new seats and new scientific directions.

The following were also built: the polytechnic of Crete, medical schools in all regional universities (Patria, Ioannina and Iraklion), an annex of the Thessaloniki medical school at Alexandroupolis, 20 new sections at existing highest educational schools, and 13 centers, institutes of studies and sections of postgraduate studies.

Moreover, the teaching personnel in all categories increased during the period 1974-1980 by 20 percent and the funds for the highest education increased in such a rhythm that it cost a student 105,00 drachmas in 1980 compared to 36,000 drachmas in 1974. Lastly, the projects to complete the Athens university city and the expansion of the universities at Patrai, Ioannina, Thrace and Crete and the Athens polytechnic city proceeded satisfactorily with the relevant increase of credits.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

New Democracy is also the forerunner in this sector. It was the first to legally promote scientific research, and proceeded in creating a special organization (scientific research and technological service) for promoting the pertinent subjects.

Scientific research will be promoted even more in the next 4 years. The increase of the relevant credits (from 0.27 percent of the gross local produce, the credits will reach 0.5 percent in the next 4 years) has already been decided upon. Also, industry will be encouraged to develop initiatives in the research sector in cooperation with the educational establishments and other research centers. Of particular importance is also the fact that the new development law (1116/81) provides for a 40 percent subsidy to establish, expand and otherwise improve laboratories and applied research. Research personnel will also receive subsidies.

At the same time, a special effort will be made to simplify procedures in order to develop a modern and improved mechanism of exact orientation and fast promotion of scientific research and technology.

C. CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

During the 1975-1980 period, an effective policy in the cultural field was implemented; thus, great and substantive progress was made for the promotion of cultural activities. This policy will be intensified during the coming 4 years, with the ultimate goal to make our country a center of cultural brightness. The New Democracy program provides for a multifaceted strengthening of cultural activities in the countryside and the safeguarding of the most important cultural elements of our national heritage.

State activities will be mainly manifested as follows:

--Accelerating the program to save the Acropolis and to build the Acropolis museum. Continue excavations throughout Greece and particularly in central Macedonia.

--The establishment of archives for monuments in the entire country; the preparation of an inventory for all church treasures and works of art; this will be done in cooperation with the church.

--Promoting the construction of the Athens cultural center which will meet the capital's cultural needs.

--Continuing financial assistance to local and regional clubs and to associations engaged in cultural activities; this will be done following the appraisal of their contribution.

--Continuing assistance in every way to local cultural gatherings which are repeatedly held and which are already becoming a tradition.

--Reopening important libraries in the countryside and supplying them of books, personnel and so forth by IPPE [acronym unknown].

--Along with the roving theater, experimental programs will be introduced in major rural centers in order to host Greek and foreign groups of artists as well as individual artists.

--Securing suitable sites for cultural activities and recreation; these sites will be leased or built by the state in all urban and major rural centers.

With the increase in cultural activities in the countryside, encouraging private initiative to participate in these manifestations and safeguarding the elements that constitute our cultural identity, our cultural standard will be elevated and there will be healthy economic development.

D. ATHLETICS

The New Democracy program for the coming 4 years in the field of athletics includes radical goals which aim at the following:

--Including athletic activities in the 3 top grades of elementary education.

--Establishing centers outside and around major cities so that "everyone may occupy himself with sports."

--The creation of sports facilities at places of work and residential areas.

--The establishment of a unified organization which will promote athletics both inside and outside schools.

--The further activation of organizations or private initiative so that all the rural centers may participate in contests and in as many sports as possible.

--Greater contribution to and supervision of athletic federations for the sake of greater distinction in international events.

As to what has been achieved in the athletic sector, this can be clearly concluded from the following:

In 1974, 50,000 athletes were registered with athletic clubs; in 1980 the number rose to 400,000. To this number one should add 500,000 students who, because of the introduction of sports day in gymnasiums, are actively engaged in sports.

In 1974 there wree 1,600 sport clubs; now 3,600 such clubs are functioning.

Compared to 1974, today many athletic installations are functioning. The most important of them are the following; 53 swimming pools as compared to 8; 67 closed sports grounds versus 10; 10 sports grounds with soft surface versus 2; 12 skiing centers versus 2. During the last 6 years, the following sports grounds were built; 400 soccer fields; 440 track fields; 1,620 sports grounds and more than 200 closed halls.

With the construction of these athletic projects, athletic centers have been established in towns and communes in which there are colleges and lyceums and include soccer fields, track fields, sports grounds and in bigger towns also include gymnasiums and swimming pools.

Along with this, there are also under construction:

--The Athens Olympic stadium, an architecturally and technologically perfect project with a capacity of 80,000 spectators, whose operation will coincide with the big athletic event of the 1982 pan-European field games in Athens.

--The Palais de Sport in Neon Faliron with a capacity of 12,000 spectators.

Both these big projects, which were needed in Athens, will enable us to undertake the organization of any big athletic activity at European or international levels.

It is finally noted that, with President Karamanlis' proposal that the Olympic Games find a permanent home in Greece, our country is playing a leading role in the struggle to preserve the principles of the Olympic spirit.

STATEMENT BY CYPRUS TALKS NEGOTIATORS ANNOUNCED

TA052037 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 5 Aug 81

[Text] Speaking today after the intercommunal talks held at the Ledra Palace Hotel in Lefkosa [Nicosia] which lasted 2 hours, Greek Cypriot negotiator Ionnidhis said that the proposals made by the Turkish Cypriot side would be carefully examined. He added that whatever the essence of the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the fact that such proposals were submitted to the Greek Cypriot side was a constructive development in itself.

Also speaking following the intercommunal talks, Turkish Cypriot negotiator Umit Suleyman Onan said the Turkish Cypriot side had submitted comprehensive proposals for the solution of the Cypriot problem and was ready to negotiate all issues relating to the solution of the problem.

TERCUMAN Comments

[Nur Batur report from Ankara and AKAJANS correspondent Ahmed Senova report from Athens]

[Text] Either today or on 12 August the Turkish Cypriot side will bring to the negotiating table a package of proposals aimed at providing a decisive and fair settlement to the intercommunal talks which have been uninterruptedly trying to resolve the Cyprus issue.

The most important characteristic of the package of proposals to be submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side is a map which will, for the first time, mark the frontiers of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot regions. According to this map, which has been prepared by taking into consideration the security and the economic viability of the Turkish Cypriot community, the villages of Akincilar (Louroujina), Yesilirmak (Limnitis) and Erenkoy (Kokkina) will be ceded to the Greek Cypriot side through a line of demarcation to be drawn from the west to the east. Again, according to this map, the buffer zone occupied by the United Nations over an area 7 to 20 kilometers wide, and which constitutes 3 percent of the entire area of the island, will be completely lifted. Under these circumstances, if the map is accepted by the Greek Cypriot side, the TFSC will have control over an area of only 28 to 30 percent. At present, the area occupied by the TFSC is 34.6 percent.

Kokkina is a coastal village in the northwest area of Cyprus completely surrounded by Greek Cypriot villages. Its communication with the Turkish Cypriot community and the outside world is maintained by sea. The village of Louroujina too is surrounded by Greek Cypriot villages on all three sides.

The new package of proposals takes up the question of Varosha together with the territorial issue. The proposal put forward in November 1980, which stipulated the administration of Varosha by a tripartite committee, has now been withdrawn and the present map envisages the handing over of the tourist installations of Varosha to the Greek Cypriots. This proposal has been drafted in such a way so as not to endanger the security of the Turkish Cypriot community and the Famagusta harbor. In the event an agreement is reached on the entire package of proposals, the Turkish Cypriots living in the areas to be ceded to the Greek Cypriots will be resettled in the Turkish Cypriot areas.

The map which has been prepared and the territorial proposals, which have been drafted on the basis of the security and economic viability of the Turkish Cypriot community, will depend on the acceptance of the principle of equal rights for both communities in the legislative and executive organs of the constitution. The solution of the constitutional issue will carry much weight as it is directly linked with the territorial issue.

According to the Turkish Cypriot proposals to be submitted to the Greek Cypriot side on the constitutional issue, the president of the prospective republic will be elected for 5 years, but a rotation system will be implemented between the Turkish and Greek Cypriots in presidential elections. For instance, if a Turkish Cypriot becomes president during the first term of 5 years, a Greek Cypriot will assume duties as president for the next 5 years. If the president is a Turkish Cypriot he will have a Greek Cypriot vice president and if the president is a Greek Cypriot he will have a Turkish Cypriot vice president.

In accordance with the principles agreed upon earlier by Denktas and Makarios, the prospective Cyprus Republic will consist of two regions and two communities, and it will have a federal central government. The number of ministers in the federal government, which will represent the Cyprus Republic in the international arena, will be equal. The kind of ministries to be undertaken by the Turkish Cypriots in the federal government will be determined by the committees to be set up.

If a basic agreement is reached on the composition of the federal government, the committees to be set up will be able to specify the distribution of the ministries and report to the leaders of the two communities. Another committee could be set up to prepare a new electoral system. It is reported that, taking into account that the work of the committee may last a year, the present system may be temporarily preserved.

Another factor among the constitutional proposals which the Turkish Cypriot side is going to submit is the number of government employees and policemen to be employed by the federal government.

The Turkish Cypriot proposals stipulate that 50 per cent of the employees and policemen should be Turkish Cypriots. These proposals also envisage that the two federal states should have their own independent economic units.

Matters concerning the freedom of circulation and property ownership in Cyprus will materializewhen complete confidence is established between the two communities.

Another important aspect of the Turkish Cypriot proposals is the question of international guarantees. As in 1960, the signing of a treaty of guarantee is envisaged which will stipulate that Turkey and Greece will be guarantors again. Britain is not expected to act as a third guarantor state this time.

According to diplomatic circles in Ankara, if the Greek Cypriot administration adopts a positive approach, the present procedure of intercommunal talks could be changed and daily sessions could be held until a solution is found.

There is widespread anxiety as to whether Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou, who has already introduced the presidential system, will cooperate in efforts to find a serious solution to the Cyprus issue.

On the other hand, Greece is expected to support the Greek Cypriot side in the search for peace and for a righteous solution that will satisfy both communities.

Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who has been having talks with the Greek Cypriot leaders since last Saturday, addressed Greek Cypriot refugees in Nicosia and Famagusta and said: "the intercommunal dialogue in Cyprus has reached a very sensitive point. The settlement of the Cyprus dispute includes in principle the settlement of the refugee problem as well. This is the most discussed point in the intercommunal talks. The Greek Government and nation will do whatever is possible for a decisive settlement of the Cyprus issue through peaceful methods. The struggle of the Greek Cypriots is also the struggle of Greece."

On the other hand, Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis said yesterday that "after meetings and talks wtih Mitsotakis, the Greek Cypriot administration is ready to evaluate the proposals which the Turkish Cypriot side will submit tomorrow or on 12 August."

ISRAELI EMBASSY IN VIENNA BOMBED; ONE INJURED

AU100655 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0500 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] In the close vicinity of the Israeli Embassy in Vienna there was a bomb attack shortly before 0100 today. In the neighboring garden two bombs exploded, one 4 minutes after the other. A woman living in the house suffered slight injuries from glass fragments. Numerous windowpanes burst from the explosions. A similar attack occurred shortly before midnight near the Israeli Embassy in Athens. The Israeli airline El Al's office at Rome airport was also the target of an attempt yesterday. A Palestinian group has claimed responsibility for this attempt [in Rome].

PLO ARMS SMUGGLERS DEPORTED TO BEIRUT

AU100903 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0500 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] The two [as heard] Arabs who have been sentenced in Vienna for arms smuggling were deported to Lebanon via Geneva yesterday. The two men had faced a court trial in Vienna on Monday. One of them drew a suspended sentence of 9 months imprisonment; the other was acquitted for lack of evidence. The fact that the two Arabs were met at the Vienna airport by Vienna PLO delegate Husayn led to sharp controversies in Austria over the country's security policy last week.

HANDLING OF PLO, AS-SADAT SITUATIONS CRITICIZED

AU071303 [Editorial Report] All Vienna dailies on 6 August give prominence to reports on criticism of the handling by the government of the attempted smuggling of arms into Austria by two PLO members, and in connection with the cancellation by Egyptian President as-Sadat of his scheduled visit to Austria.

WIENER ZEITUNG on page 2 carries a report on a Vienna press conference 6 August by People's Party security spokesman Robert Lichal. According to the paper, Lichal criticized Foreign Minister Pahr's inactivity regarding PLO delegate Husayn, arguing that "a sovereign state cannot wait for the PLO to take action in such an affair," and that--considering that Husayn was not delegated by any state which could recall him--it was "up to the government to act." KURIER on page 2 highlights what it calls "sharp attacks" by Lichal on Interior Minister Lanc and "massive criticism"of Chancellor Kreisky. According to the paper, Lichal criticized Lanc for having "failed to fulfill his tasks as a cabinet member," Kreisky for "endangering Austria's security through his Middle East policy," and Pahr for having failed to take any sanctions against Husayn.

In a front-page story, DIE PRESSE notes a Cairo AL-AHRAM report that As-Sadat cancelled his visit to Austria on the strength of information received by the Austrian Government regarding a conspiracy against Chancellor Kreisky. DIE PRESSE stresses that it was unable to obtain any comments on this report from Kreisky, Lanc, Vice Chancellor Sinowatz, Minister of Justice Broda or Pahr. It claims Lanc visited Kreisky in Woerishofen, Bavaria, where the chancellor is on vacation, and that it was agreed there "not to comment on the AL-AHRAM report." The paper adds that "meanwhile, the Austrian security police have denied that there had been any plot to assassinate Kreisky."

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on page 1 highlights a statement by Chancellor Kreisky in an interview on radio and television on 5 August that "he expected PLO representative Husayn "to be recalled from Vienna in the near future." According to the paper, the chancellor stressed that Lanc had "acted correctly" and that charges by the opposition were "untruthful."

OFFICIALS REACT TO U.S. NEUTRON WEAPON DECISION

Government Spokesman

LD090944 Hamburg DPA in German 0853 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 9 Aug (DPA)--The question of the deployment of U.S. neutron weapons on German territory and the necessary consultations are, in the opinion of the Federal Government, "of no immediate concern," government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said in Bonn on Sunday.

Ruehl confirmed, in this first reaction by the Federal Government to the American decision to start the production of neutron weapons, that the Federal Government had been informed following this decision. The production decision was the exclusive concern of the U.S. Government which, for that reason, had not consulted Bonn beforehand.

The Americans said that the weapons are to be stored "exclusively on U.S. territory," ' far as the Federal Government knows, there are no American plans to store the weapons in Europe.

The intended storage of neutron weapons in the United States also was emphasized by American Embassy circles in Bonn. Production of the individual component parts was never stopped. Washington's decision referred to the assembly of the weapon which is primarily an antitank weapon and intended to offset the Warsaw Pact's considerable superiority in this area.

SPD's Egon Bahr

LD100955 Hamburg DPA in German 0645 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 10 Aug (DPA)--Egon Bahr, foreign policy expert of the SPD Bundestag Parliamentary Group, expects a fresh round of arms buildup following the decision by U.S. President Ronald Reagan on the manufacture of the neutron weapon. The SPD politician said today on Deutschlandfunk that the Soviet Union will now certainly start manufacturing neutron weapons. However, he thinks it unlikely the East-West talks on reducing medium-range missiles, scheduled for November, will be endangered.

Bahr said he fears that the manufacture of neutron weapons will lower the threshold of a nuclear war. He continues to reject the stationing on German soil.

DER SPIEGEL SAYS GDR OFFERS CONSULTATIONS

LD081644 Hamburg DPA in German 1556 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 8 Aug (DPA)--According to the magazine DER SPIEGEL, the GDR wants to offer the FRG regular consultations and economic partnership if Bonn abandons the NATO rearmament. DER SPIEGEL writes that East Berlin is preparing a detailed plan, discussed with the Soviets, for a possible meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Chairman of the GDR Council of State, Erich Honecker. Apart from abandoning rearmament, or at least helping Washington and Moscow to reach an acceptable compromise in all the negotiations on medium-range missiles, Bonn would also have to recognize the GDR in international law.

As the magazine further reports, a GDR diplomat pointed out during a visit to the chancellor's office in Bonn that the communique on the meeting of the Soviet head of state and party, Leonid Brezhnev, with Honecker in the Crimea contained an interesting signal for East-West relations. The diplomat also stressed that speculation on an early intra-German summit could only be harmful.

GENSCHER ASKS MOSCOW TO HELP OVERCOME TENSION

LD081444 Hamburg DPA in German 1317 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) proposed that Moscow make active contributions toward overcoming East-West tension. In an interview with West German and North German radio, Genscher emphasized on Saturday that now the time has come for the USSR to indicate by means of realistic steps whether it intends to contribute toward overcoming tension. The Soviet Union "is able to do that," the minister underlined. Such steps would include a halt to Soviet medium-range missile arming in order to make negotiations with the United States easier, which would prevent placing additional strains on these negotiations through the intervening deployment of further missiles.

The USSR also could make a constructive contribution by accepting the European Community which strives for a political rather than a military solution in Afghanistan. Genscher also mentioned the possibility of Soviet participation in the North-South summit conference in Cancun (Mexico) which starts in October. Finally, Moscow could consent to the "urgent desire by the peoples of Europe" for a European disarmament conference.

At the same time, Genscher underlined the unity with which the Federal Government and the opposition backed NATO's dual decision. In September, the first meeting between the new U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko in New York will see the beginning of "an extraordinarily important period." The objective is limitation of medium-range missile arming "and if possible--and this is our ideal objective--the so-called zero solution."

SOVIET NAVY REHEARSES LANDING OPERATIONS

LD071246 Hamburg DPA in German 1141 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Flensburg, 7 Aug (DPA)--About 50 landing ships of the Soviet Navy rehearsed a landing operation on the East Prussian coast north of Baltiysk in the USSR at midday today. This was stated by a spokesman of the fleet command of the Federal Navy in Glucksburg. All units taking part in the landing exercise were Russian ships.

The spokesman, whose statement was based on "information of officers" of the Federal German Navy, mentioned a total of about 50 landing ships and landing craft consisting mainly of units of the Baltic fleet and reinforcements which arrived from other sea areas in the past few days. One of the units was the 'Ivan Rogov,' the biggest landing ship [words indistinct] in the red fleet.

According to the spokesman, German naval quarters regard the landing exercise as a preliminary to a larger maneuver. "The landing is very likely intended as a preparation for a similar operation," the spokesman said.

The powerful Soviet naval formation with the 37,000-ton aircraft carrier Kiev, two missile mounting frigates of the Krivak class and at least six of the biggest landing vessels entered the Baltic via the Danish straits at the Skagerrak in the past 2 weeks.

The spokesman said this afternoon that the exercise involved all the landing ships of the Alligator, Ropucha and Polnochniy classes of the Soviet Baltic fleet as well as the seven Soviet landing ships which entered the Baltic from the northern fleet and Black Sea fleet since the middle of last month. To this must be added the Ivan Rogov which arrived in the Baltic from the Indian Ocean.

POLISH MINISTER SEEKS TALKS WITH GENSCHER

LD081688 Hamburg DPA in German 1622 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Hamburg, 8 Aug (DPA)--According to the magazine DER SPIEGEL, Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek wants to have talks in the middle of August with his German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, on further economic aid for his country, which is highly in debt. The FRG Foreign Ministry would not deny this on Saturday.

According to the magazine, the plans for further aid initially envisage a bridging loan by the bank for international settlements on DM500 to 700 million up to the time when, at a later date, the Eastern bloc country becomes an IMF member.

DETENTION CAUSES 'UPSET' IN FRG-IRAQI RELATIONS

LD071251 Hamburg DPA in German 1050 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 Aug (DPA)--According to the Federal Government, the arrest of an employee of the Federal Press and Information Office [BPA] has resulted in a "noticeable upset" in relations with Iraq. Government spokesman Ruehl disclosed today that Iraqi citizen Jakob Petros, employed by BPA for the last 11 years, was arrested on his arrival in Baghdad on 11 July and has been in custody ever since. At the invitation of the Iraqi Government, Petros was accompanying a group of German journalists attending the ceremonies marking Iraqi's national holiday.

The Federal Government, Ruehl said, made "continuous efforts" through diplomatic channels to secure the release of its employee. These have only brought to light the fact that Petros is regarded as a "serious legal case" although there is no indication that Petros' name was on any Iraqi wanted list.

CHEYSSON 'NOT SURPRISED' BY NEUTRON DECISION

LD092123 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] Claude Cheysson, external relations minister, commenting on the announcement by the Americans of the manufacture of neutron bombs, he says that this has not come as a surprise. For the time being, the minister said, the matter does not concern France directly as the Americans have announced that they will not be deploying the weapon. Cheysson has said on a number of occasions that several countries have mastered the manufacture of the neutron bomb but they have avoided publicizing the news.

FRANCE TO DELIVER AMX-13 LIGHT TANKS TO LEBANON

[Text] Paris, 7 Aug (AFP)--France will deliver 13 AMX-13 light tanks to the Lebanese Amry in September and five forward armored vehicles in October as gifts in the framework of French aid to Lebanon, the Defense Ministry said here today.

The statement confirmed reports from reliable sources in Beirut yesterday that French and Lebanese authorities were developing a program of political aid from France aimed at reinforcing the Lebanese Army.

Sources said the program included four major points:

--The speedy delivery, as gifts, of 18 armored vehicles.

--A loan of 100 million francs (17 million dollars), as agreed under a previous accord.

--New financial aid for which, according to the French Defense Ministry, a sum has not yet been set. Sources in Beirut said the aid might be in the vicinity of 500 million francs.

--An increased number of intensive training programs in France for Lebanese officers.

However, the Defense Ministry here said today that it was still too early to give full details of the planned French aid to Lebanon.

OFFICIAL BANI-SADR EXTRADITION REQUEST UNRECEIVED

NC071622 Paris AFP in English 1616 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Aug (AFP)--The French Foreign Ministry has still not received formal notification of Iran's request that ousted President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr be extradited, according to official sources here.

Documents relating to the extradition demand have been handed over to Guy Georgy, the French ambassador in Tehran, and were to be sent to Paris by diplomatic courier. But the diplomatic pouch has been held up by Iranian authorities, officials said today.

LE MONDE WEIGHS IRAN AUTHORITIES' MOTIVES

[Editorial: "Toward a Trial of Strength"]

[Text] The Iranian authorities' behavior over the past few days immediately raises a question: Did they want, as they stated, to secure the extradition of Bani-Sadr and Masu'd Rajavi or to use this incident as a pretext to start a trial of strength with France?

Up to today, Thursday 6 August, in other words 9 days after the arrival of the Iranian political refugees, the Tehran government has still not sent Paris the file enabling it to support its argument that Bani-Sadr and Rajavi are "common law criminals." Indeed, the convention between the two countries on this matter excludes the extradition of political oppositionists.

Of course, the Islamic republic's grievances were not all unfounded. Several prominent Iranians who fled their country after the revolution are using French territory to plan the overthrow of the Khomeyni regime.

It is certainly also possible to hold the view that Bani-Sadr and Rajavi have abused the hospitality they have been shown by making many statements to the press calling on the Iranian people to revolt. But the Paris government did not wait for Tehran's protests before forcing these two leaders to remain silent.

Moreover, the French government was certainly not reluctant to hold negotiations which could and should have been extended to all the points of disagreement separating the two countries since the monarchy's fall.

In this respect, Mitterrand has made many good will gestures. Last Saturday, he authorized the departure of three missile-launching patrol boats which were ordered by the shah's regime in 1974 and held in Cherbourg since the Islamic republic was established.

Monday he sent a particularly warm message to Raja'i, Bani-Sadr's successor as president of the republic. In addition, the French authorities have indicated that they would not oppose the departure of Iranian refugees who might obtain political asylum in other countries.

The Iranian leaders replied to this readiness with insults and intimidation. For 3 days, the French Embassy in Tehran has been besieged by noisy demonstrators chanting slogans hostile to France, its government and its president. There was real reason to fear for the physical safety of Guy Georgy, the ambassador, and his staff who had no protection other than two dozen "revolution guards."

Goergy has been treated with a disturbing lack of respect. Despite his repeated requests for a meeting with Iranian Foreign Minister Musavi for discussions on the very problem which was worrying the Tehran authorities, he was received by a mere assistant secretary of state, who could do no more than repeat the accusations which anybody could read in the press.

France's socialist government, which is acutely aware of the Third World's aspirations, could be a valuable partner for any state seeking to ensure its economic development in independence. For mysterious reasons which have yet to be explained, the Islamic authorities prefer to launch a trial of strength which would only have the effect of aggravating their "splendid isolation" on the international stage.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON CENTRAL AMERICA TOUR

[Francis Pisani dispatch]

[Text] Mexico--"My impression is that all the elements of an explosive mixture are present in Central America," Claude Cheysson stated on Wednesday, 5 August, at the end of a 3-day visit to Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Honduras. "It is a fact that the countries in the region each have their personality, that the regimes are different and that they have friendly relations with different foreign countries. In this context, if incidents are settled violently, we will witness an arms race and an increase in forces of which the first signs can already be seen. The countries concerned will be forced to resort to foreign aid, in other words, to the great powers. Thus, we are likely to reach a situation similar to the one in the Near East--an explosive situation. That is what we want to avoid."

In this context, Cheysson's concern is to contribute to the efforts to ensure that Central America does not become a stake in the East-West confrontations. He thinks that France and Europe can help in this direction. Cheysson, who stressed that this is also the Mexican leaders' concern, also defined what France's policy might be. "Mitterrand," he said before his departure, "does not believe in French initiatives to settle the Third World's problems. When two or three Central American countries have an idea on a plan, we will be happy to support them but it will be their plan and it is for that reason that I have made this trip to the region." On his return to Mexico, the minister, questioned on what practical steps France could take, first expressed the view that "each of the Central American peoples must have the right to determine their future and to choose the political model which suits them."

In the case of the Salvadoran war, Cheysson said he thinks that France should "encourage dialogue among the political forces so as to avoid foreign intervention." He thinks that this dialogue should take place "as soon as possible" and that it will then be possible "to hold elections throughout the country."

In addition Cheysson thinks that economic aid could help develop the region and that it should first be given to countries engaged in democratic processes and anxious to settle their conflicts with their neighbors peacefully. "This is true of Honduras," he stated, "and that is what I told the officials of that country." The minister emphasized the fact that this economic cooperation could be implemented both at bilateral level and at the level of relations between the European Community and the countries concerned.

Cheysson regretted the fact that he was unable to visit Panama but thinks he will be able to do so in the near future. Finally, he stated that the aim of his trip was to show "the French government's and people's interest in the peoples of the region and their desire for independence."

LE MONDE Editorial

[Editorial: "Cheysson in Central America"]

[Text] Cheysson, who represented France at the ministerial conference in Cancun, Mexico, arrived in Costa Rica on 2 August--the first stage of a Central American tour which is to take him to Nicaragua and Honduras.

If a tragic coincidence, the first official visit to this particularly troubled region by a French external relations minister started as news came through of the accidental death of Omar Torrijos, the "strong man" of Panama since 1968 and the patient and reasonable architect of the treaties on the new status of the canal zone. For many reasons, Panama plays an important role in this sector stretching from the Mexican border to the canal and which the United States regards as crucial to its strategic and political interests.

Torrijos' Panama, a symbol for the whole of Latin America of a difficult struggle against American omnipotence in the name of national dignity and sovereignty, sided clearly with the people's movements in Central America, which are also struggling against Washington's direct or indirect interventions.

After being ignored by diplomats for a long time, Central America is now one of the world's "hotbeds of tension." There are massacres and guerrilla warfare in Guatemala, open warfare in El Salvador, growing tension between pro-American Honduras and Sandinist Nicaragua which has just celebrated in perplexity and anxiety the second anniversary of the fall of Somoza, Washington's liege man, social unrest in Costa Rica and Malaise in Panama where General Torrijos' death might revive the polemics on the implementation of the 1977 treaties.

Reagan's America--but the analysis was not very different in Carter's day--tends to explain this generalized unrest by Soviet-Cuban intervention. Since 1959 the USSR has shown constant interest in the evolution of this region and has shown that it is prepared to exploit to its advantage any mistake by Washington. The Cubans are not absent from the scene either, although they have adopted a very cautious approach in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

But the roots of the instability in Central America predate the "Kriegspiel" between the superpowers. Marginalization, political, economic and cultural underdevelopment, shameful exploitation of the poorest people, the ruling classes' blindness and obstinacy, constant U.S. interventions since the beginning of the century in support of the tyrants maintaining order--all are factors in a complex and tragic crisis.

The Reagan administration hopes to remedy the situation by energetically reviving the offensive against Cuba, by increasing military aid to the "allied" regimes and by canceling economic aid to "adversaries" like Nicaragua. Cheysson and the new French Government, on the other hand, rightly think that no country in the region should be penalized and that the solution is primarily political. In any case, if there is a sphere in which Washington and Paris differ radically, it is certainly on the burning Central American issue.

PLOT TO ASSASSINATE MITTERRAND REVEALED

LD071933 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Surprise follows surprise in the Aurio mass murder and the Civic Action Service [SAC] affair: After the interrogation in Marseilles this afternoon of Angle Poletti, one of the suspects, more details are coming to light about the reasons police inspector Jacques Massie and his family were killed. Jacques Massie reportedly learned about a plan to assassinate Francois Mitterrand during the president's visit to Avignon on 10 July. Jacques Massie reportedly decided to reveal the plan and show documents to prove it. This explains the use of the word "treason" by some of the suspects when describing the inspector's attitude. In fact, the police have proof that members of the Marseille SAC met several times in Avignon to prepare the attempt on Francois Mitterrand's life.

PAPER VIEWS EFFECT OF RISING DOLLAR ON FRANC, EMS

[Editorial: "The Dollar and Europe"]

[Text] For the first time in history, the dollar went over Fr6 in the exchange rates this week. This means that there has been a 50-percent rise on the Paris market in 12 months.

This is a general trend: On all the markets where it has fallen greatly over recent years, the American currency is back at levels which have not been seen for a long time; this is the case in Frankfurt, where it has reached its highest level since September 1976. Can the Europeans afford to continue a passive attitude?

The factor which has held them back from acting so far is what could be called the paradox of the European Monetary System [EMS]. This system was set up with a view to protecting intra-European exchange rates from the fluctuations caused by the dollar's up's and down's. It is true that since the system came into force in March 1979 this objective has more or less been attained.

The franc-deutschmark exchange rate, the most important of all within the EMS, in particular has remained remarkably stable during this period, belying most forecasts made on that subject. However, although it has thus been possible to form an area of relative stability among the countries on the European continent, the main reasons for this is that they tacitly agreed to...ignore the dollar's movements against the unit they now form. In other words, they left it to the market to determine the dollar's value.

It is as if the discipline which the Europeans have introduced into their mutual currency relations had been won at the price of abandoning any common policy toward other countries.

In the past, none of the attempts made to define a concerted policy toward the dollar was successful. The conditions then were very different because on most occasions they were facing a falling dollar.

But since March 1979, the American currency has been rising, aside from short periods in which it fell back (during) the summer of 1980 in particular. In other words, the European currencies are tending to decline collectively against it. Since it is easier to descend a slope together than to climb it together, the EMS has not found it too difficult to maintain its cohesion.

This result is likely to be called into question by the growing speed of the dollar's rise. It is very true that the present trend of the market gives the French Government an additional motive not to devalue the franc within the EMS; it does not want to add the inflationary effects of a revalued Deutschmark to those of an expensive dollar.

But the German authorities are now wondering whether they ought to remain passive in the face of the hitherto irresistible rise of the American currency. They are tempted to counter it by increasing interest rates, which have remained unchanged (at around 12 percent) in Germany since last February.

If they were to give in to that temptation, France would have no alternative but to increase instead of lowering its interest rates as it is now doing (cautiously), or else to give up defending the franc's value, with all the consequences such a decision would involve when the government is going to be forced to announce a record budget deficit for 1982.

LE MONDE EDITORIAL URGES MORE AID FOR POLAND

[Editorial: "Vital Aid"]

[Text] The food shortage in Poland has just revived the crises which was launched a little more than 1 year ago: for the first time, the Poles are taking to the streets en masse and demonstrating their discontent "Western-style," strikes are again breaking out here and there without the most moderate Solidarity leaders being able to do anything about it.

These new developments, which bring new dangers, provide a complete contrast to what is happening in several West Europen countries where excess production is again leading to the destruction of various agricultural products.

This is the time that Polish ambassador to France Kulasa has chosen to ask Mauroy to speed up deliveries of 300,000 tons of wheat and some 10,000 tons of meat which France promised 4 months ago. Indeed, these supplies were blocked by the banks concerned which were refusing to take additional risk--even though small--in a country whose debt is already more than $25 billion.

These supplies will certainly not solve Poland's food problem even if they are followed by a new French-Polish agreement on the supply of Frl billion-worth of food products from the 1981-82 harvest. Nonetheless, France has just shown the right course to take by breaking the deadlock on this matter. The EEC Commission, for its part, is finally taking action to start supplies of reduced-price grain, powdered milk, meat, sugar, oil, cheese and butter granted last April and still awaiting delivery. Even Japan has just made a gesture. Indeed, on Tuesday, Tokyo decided to supply Warsaw with 20,000 tons of rice for which payment will be deferred.

The Western countries undoubtedly ought to further increase their effort to help Poland and the EEC, in particular, should review the matter without delay. Nonetheless, the Warsaw authorities inability to introduce any economic reform is not making it easier to solve the problem. Intermittent aid gives Poland a few weeks or even a few months grace. However, the solution of this serious crisis cannot be envisaged without a clear political determination of the part of the leaders. Only such a clearly displayed intention would, in fact, make it possible to restore the vital climate of confidence between the majority of the Polish people and their leaders.

It would also create a more favorable atmosphere atmosphere in which to approach the negotiations which take place regularly between Warsaw and the Western banks to draw up a new timetable for repayment of the enormous Polish debt. Western financial circles increasingly feel that this operation will ultimately be to their detriment, hence the growing difficulties which are appearing on their side. The Polish leaders hitherto have not even deemed fit to reply to their expressions of anxiety and to announce their intentions.

But it is chiefly Moscow's menacing silence which is hindering any medium-term solution. To be able to tackle effectively the task facing it, Warsaw must be able to reply on a minimum of autonomy. It is precisely this autonomy which the Kremlin is refusing Poland, as if it had decided on a policy of seeking the worst in order to take advantage of it.

PARLIAMENT APPROVES MISSILE DEPLOYMENT SITE

AU071543 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 7 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian cabinet, acting today on approval in Parliament for the plan to deploy NATO intermediate range nuclear missiles in Italy, settled on the site of the military airport of Magliocco in Comiso, in Sicily, for the installation of the new American-made cruise and Pershing-II missiles.

Approval in Parliament for the NATO project came in December 1979.

The cabinet also approved a measure earmarking the equivalent of $352 million (440 billion lire) for the modernization of the technical equipment and the purchase of new equipment for the paramilitary Carabinieri police, the public security police and for the revenue police. The allocation will be spread out over the 3 fiscal years 1981, 82 and 83.

"This is a measure," Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni said at the end of the meeting, "which fits into the framework of 1977 legislation as broadened by 1979 legislation."

Negative Reactions

AU081540 Rome ANSA in English 1507 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 8 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian Government's announcement yesterday to deploy NATO medium-range cruise nuclear missiles on the island of Sicily has immediately triggered negative reactions in the left and among Sicilian autonomists.

Communists, radicals, the Proletarian Unity Party and the National Sicilian Front have announced they will mount a firm opposition to installation of new nuclear theater missiles in Italy.

The Communist Party has said it will fight with "the utmost determination" to create "a broad unitary movement to press for immediate negotiations, the end of the arms race and the establishment of military at the lowest possible level."

The radicals will call on the government, when Parliament resumes after the summer recess, to suspend construction of bases for the cruise missiles.

The Proletarian Unity Party has announced it will promote a regional demonstration against the installation of the new missiles.

The demonstration should take place in Comiso, near the military airport chosen to host the 112 missiles.

Sicilian autonomists of the National Sicilian Front said that "Sicily is becoming the tool of aggression and, as such, the target of the aggression of others.

"This is the umpteenth episode of colonialism which sanctions the principle according to which the life of Sicilians is worth less than that of Italians."

The problem of the island's security was tackled by Socialist Senator Falco Accame who said that "what is important is to assure an adequate anti-atomic civil defense to the entire area."

The mayor of Comiso stressed that "the people in the area are divided over the missile problem. There are those firmly opposed to their installation but there are also those who see benefits for trade and employment."

TWO INJURED IN EL AL OFFICE BOMBING AT AIRPORT

AU091852 Rome ANSA in English 1845 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Aug (ANSA)--A bomb went off Sunday in the El Al office at Rome's Fiumicino Airport, gutting the Israeli airline facilities and slightly injuring two people.

The only El Al agent on the premises at the time of the blast, Gaetano Prosperi, was slightly injured and a woman waiting for a flight in the airport's departure area was treated for shock in a nearby hospital.

The explosion set the airport into panic and all traffic was halted for an hour while police evacuated the departure area for security reasons.

No organization had announced planting the device as of this writing.

IRANIAN FREIGHTER SEIZED FOR UNFULFILLED CONTRACT

AU100825 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Ravenna, 10 Aug (ANSA)--Italian authorities have seized an Iranian freighter believed to belong to the Islamic regime in Tehran as damages for an unpaid agricultural job completed by an Italian firm between 1977 and 1980.

The Iran Kalane was seized over the weekend at the port of Ravenna on an attachment from a Ferrara court.

The claimant was the Ferrara-based "Zanzi SRL" farm engineering outfit and the unpaid bill was for five million dollars, including interest and currency valorization adjustments.

The job was undertaken on a contract from the late shah's family and was completed last year on behalf of the new Islamic fundamentalist regime.

"Zanzi" requested the ship's attachment on the grounds that a normal suit from an Italian civilian court would hold no weight in Iran.

The Iran Kalane belongs to the "Iran Shipping Lines", which is believed to be directly controlled by the Tehran regime.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS PLAN 24-HOUR PROTEST STRIKE

AU080020 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 8 Aug (ANSA)--Italian air traffic controllers will be joining their American counterparts tomorrow while they idle all Jumbo 747, Airbus and 727 Alitalia international departures during a 24 hour strike.

The strikers belong to the non-affiliated ATV union, which called the walkout to protest the stalemate in negotiations for the renewal of a contract that expired 11 months ago.

Their major demands are a curtailment of maximum working hours from 11 to 10 hours and average yearly wage hikes of some $5,000.

Only five intercontinental Alitalia flights will be taking off tomorrow, two for Latin America (a Rome-Dakar-Buenos Aires flight and a Rome-Caracas flight), two for the United States and one for Canada. The only other international flights scheduled for regular departure tomorrow will be those flown on DC-9's headed for European capitals.

Domestic flights will be practically normal, except for the cancellation of eight Rome-Milan-Rome flights.

Bargaining between the union, Alitalia and the state-holdings management syndicate Intersind have ground to a standstill. All government mediation efforts have failed to break the deadlock on wage demands.

Italian air controllers were members of the airforce until recently, when they managed to get their status de-militarized after a long and heated labor struggle with the government.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS $50 MILLION LOAN TO POLAND

AU081526 Rome ANSA in English 1524 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 8 Aug (ANSA)--Italy has announced its decision to grant a $50 million low-interest loan to Poland in view of its plummeting economic situation. The loan is in addition to previous credit lines opened for the Warsaw government for a value of $350 million.

The Italian Government will also supply Poland with food aid in addition to a European Economic Community food package.

Italy will also assure its participation in a voluntary multilateral emergency operation of the central banks of European credit nations for immediate currency aid for the Polish Central Bank. These measures are in addition to the refinancing of Poland's foreign debt, in which Italy is taking part within the framework of agreements reached by Poland's creditors.

NEW AMBASSADOR TO TURKEY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS

AU061803 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 6 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 6 Aug (ANSA)--Italy's new ambassador to Turkey, Bartolomeo Attolico, today delivered copies of his credentials to the Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen. The diplomat will soon present his credentials to Head of State General Kenan Evren, Foreign Ministry circles in Ankara said today.

The Turkish side noted the rapidity with which Attolico, who just arrived in Turkey, was received by the foreign minister and said this was an indication of the importance Turkey attaches to its relations with Italy, especially withint the framework of the Atlantic alliance and the European Economic Community.

The two men had a lengthy talk which was said to have touched on a wide range of international problems. Emphasis was placed on Mediterranean issues, the intercommunity negotiations on Cyprus and a solution for the Greco-Turkish dispute.

Attolico said the Italian Government wished to encourage efforts for rapid and decisive progress towards settling these problems. He noted Italy and Turkey's common interest in achieving security and stability in the Mediterranean and in promoting ever more fruitful bilateral economic cooperation. The Italian ambassador also underscored the importance of the constitutional process underway in Turkey.

PCP COMMISSION CRITICIZES DEMOCRATIC ALLIANCE

PM071212 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 30 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The following is the text of the PCP Central Committee Political Commission communique distributed to the news media late last Thursday afternoon.

1--Having carefully analyzed the political, economic and social situation, the PCP Central Committee Political Commission deems it necessary to warn all democratic parties and organizations of the gravity of the current situation.

The crisis is deepening. The "Democratic Alliance" Balsemao government of the Popular Democratic Party [former name of Social Democratic Party] and the Social Democratic Center Party, carrying out the "Democratic Alliance's" subversive plan against the people, against democracy and against the country, is multiplying its attacks on legality and the democratic institutions, the gains of April [1974], workers' rights and freedoms and the interests of the broadest sections of the Portuguese population.

As a loyal servant of the monopolies, the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government is opening the doors to Portuguese and foreign private big capital, violating the Constitution, attempting by all means to restore the economic and political power of the big capitalists and landowners, subordinating the country to imperialism's and economic and strategic aims, gravely jeopardizing our independence and sovereignty and endangering the Portuguese people's security, tranquillity and peace.

In this antidemocratic, antipeople and antinational policy, the "Democratic Alliance" and its government are meeting increasingly with the resistance of the Portuguese people, who are jealous of their political, economic and social gains, with the workers' resolute struggle, with the small and medium farmers' vigorous protests and with the opposition of the country's democratic and patriotic forces.

The deterioration of the crisis and the growing popular and patriotic resistance to the "Democratic Alliance" government's policy place on the agenda its replacement by a democratic government and a political turnabout which will restore the essential values and gains of 25 April.

2--The gravity of the current situation is obvious from the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government's active measures over the last few days.

With the new attempt at imposing the unconstitutional law delimiting the public and private sectors--which the Council of the Revolution once more did not approve--the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government again attempted to impose an anticonstitutional legal basis for destroying the nationalization measures and for returning to private capital the basic sectors of the national economy.

The legal reorganization which the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government attempted to impose would have been the culmination of a vast offensive of dismantling and dissolving the most profitable public and nationalized enterprises, aimed at restoring monopoly control over the nation's principal production activities.

With the recent economic measures, gravely damaging to national interests, which were put forward by the government as a form of retaliation against the declaration of the unconstitutionality of its law delimiting the sectors, the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government is threatening cuts in investments in the public sector and new facilities for investment companies, demonstrating once more its overt commitment to defending the interests of a minority of privileged people at the cost of grave blows against the nationalized sector and the national economy.

With the recrudescence of the offensive against the agrarian reform and the promulgation of constricting laws against the collective production units--such as the new cork law--the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government wishes to complete the sinister work of destruction, begun by the Socialist Party [PS] government in 1976, of the finest gain of the April revolution, which a Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries swamped by the "smoke" and flames of corruption--of which the GOULAO, EPAC and AGA affairs are the best known instances--is implacably carrying out.

With the scandalous manipulation and exploitation of the major state-owned news media--specifically television and radio--the "Democratic Alliance" and its government have in fact established the reactionary parties' antidemocratic monopoly over them.

With the offensive against democratic local government, the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government and its parliamentary majority are attempting to make impossible the local authorities' solvency and financial standing, with the theft of over 36 million contos and with measures which affect the local authorities' administrative autonomy.

With the granting of bases and new concessions and commitments to U.S. warmongering and militarist circles--specifically in the issue of the deployment of nuclear missiles and weapons in Portugal and the stationing of troops and nuclear warships on national territory--the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government is gravely endangering the national territory and the peace of the Portuguese people.

The Balsemao government's dismissal and its replacement by a democratic government will be an essential step for the defense and consolidation of the Portuguese people's democratic gains and of national independence itself.

The "Democratic Alliance's" rapid deterioration and the exacerbation of its internal struggles and contradictions are the result of the conflict between the government and its subversive political blueprint and the Portuguese people's will and resistance.

The "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government is carrying to unacceptable lengths the institutional guerilla warfare against the state bodies which it does not control--specifically the presidency of the republic and the Council of the Revolution.

The "Democratic Alliance" has no right to impose the destruction of legality and of the democratic institutions. The votes which 5 October gave the "Democratic Alliance" a parliamentary majority and the right to govern were cast by less than half the voters.

This right was strongly disputed and denied in the 7 December election. Since then the carrying out of a subversive "Democratic Alliance" plan against Portuguese democracy and its own plan for "revisions" of the Constitution, which is, above all, a plan for the destruction of the 1976 democratic Constitution, have finally deprived it of any right.

"Government for 4 Years" has no right to continue to run the country and should be removed as an elementary requirement of the defense of the democratic system.

4--The need for a democratic alternative government and policy to the "Democratic Alliance" and its government is a national imperative incumbent on all forces, organizations and individuals interested in defending the heritage of freedom and the gains of April.

The "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government must be dismissed within the framework of the appropriate constitutional machinery.

The dissolution of the assembly, the calling of an early election and the formation of a caretaker government could be one of the institutional means for replacing the "Democratic Alliance"/Balsemao government soon and finding a solution to the grave problems confronting the country.

The continuation of this government and of its parliamentary majority is aggravating the Portuguese people's suffering and gravely endangering the democratic system and 25 April; its elimination is a necessary step for the defense of freedoms and the revolution's other great gains and for restoring democratic legality.

5--Conditions are favorable to a democratic change; it is possible if the democratic parties and organizations and all patriots, democrats and antifascists, whether belonging to parties or independent, converge in their efforts to find a solution to the current crisis.

The Central Committee's Political Commission reaffirms that the PCP remains prepared to examine without preconceived ideas with other political forces--specifically, with the PS, the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy and the Independent Social Democratic Association, which are members of the Republican and Socialist Front, and with the Portuguese Democratic Movement, its ally in the United People Alliance, and other democratic groupings--the joint prospects of a democratic alternative government and policy to the Balsemao government and the "Democratic Alliance's" policy.

The PCP Central Committee Political Commission issues a solemn appeal to all democratic forces, organizations and individuals for the formulation of a viable joint proposal, aimed at a solution to the current crisis in line with the higher interests of democracy, the people and the country.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS COMMUNISTS-MPLA COMMUNIQUE

LD072040 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Portugal has conveyed an official protest to the Angolan authorities in connection with the joint communique simultaneously released in Lisbon and Luanda by the Portuguese Communist Party and the MPLA [Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola]-Labor Party at the end of Lucio Lara's visit to the Portuguese capital.

In a statement released to the media, the Council of Ministers said that demarches have been undertaked with a view to conveying the Portuguese Government's surprise at the joint communique. According to an official source, these diplomatic demarches are confidential [words indistinct], but the Portuguese news agency ANOP managed to establish that the Angolan ambassador to Lisbon has been summoned to the office of the secretary of state for foreign affairs and that the Portuguese ambassador to Luanda has protested to the Angolan authorities.

ANOP recalls that the joint PCP-MPLA-Labor Party communique accused the Portuguese Government of "subjection to U.S. imperialism with regard to Angola," which prompted the Portuguese protest.

A semiofficial source also quoted by ANOP said that there is no crisis in the relations between the two countries. On the contrary, the sources added. The prospects are very good, particularly in the economic and trade spheres.

LD081912 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1500 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] According to a note issued this afternoon by the diplomatic information office, the Foreign Affairs Ministry expressed verbally to the French charge d'affaires in Madrid the Spanish Government's protest at the attacks suffered by trucks carrying Spanish goods in the south of France. The note says:

Following instructions from the minister of foreign affairs, the secretary of state for relations with the European communities this morning verbally expressed to the French charge d'affairs the firmest protest, anger and alarm of the Spanish Government at the latest incidents which occurred yesterday in the south of France when groups of farmers attacked trucks carrying Spanish goods.

In conjunction with other Spanish ministries and with the French authorities, the Foreign Affairs Ministry is going to suggest that alternative and changing routes be used while calm is restored in the southern French departments and while the authorities of the neighborly country put into effect--in accordance with their promises--surveillance and control measures capable of bringing an end to the attacks carried out with impunity by uncontrolled groups of farmers and agitators.

The French authorities once again reiterated that the payment of compensation due to the injured parties is being dealt with urgently. The French charge d'affaires in Spain was also summoned by the Foreign Affairs Ministry and handed a protest note which contains details of the latest violations suffered by the transporters of Spanish products.

PSOE PLANS CAMPAIGN AGAINST ENTRY INTO NATO

LD092202 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] Socialist sources said that the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] is now preparing a campaign against Spain joining NATO. The campaign will get underway at the end of this month and will reach its highest level of intensity in September. At the moment, they are working primarily on the technical aspects or organizing the campaign. At the end of the month, various publications will begin to carry articles by socialist leaders explaining the PSOE's stance.

In September, public meetings will be held in various parts of the country. Finally, the socialist group will make the party's attitude known in parliament and will insist that any decision relating to Spain joining NATO should be made by a referendum or following an election campaign in which the different groups would explain their ideas concerning this matter.

PCE'S AZCARATE CRITICIZES SPANISH FOREIGN POLICY

FL081805 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0155 GMT 8 Aug 81

[By NOTIMEX correspondent Tito Drago]

[Text] Santander, 7 Aug (NOTIMEX)--Deptuy Manuel Azcarate, the most prestigious leader of the renewal current of Eurocommunism, told NOTIMEX that "with Spain's absence from the Cancun conference, we are removing ourselves from a situation that could give Spain a world role." Azcarate, secretary for international affairs of the Spanish Communist Party (PCE), came to this city to take part in a seminar at the Menendez Pelayo International University.

Speaking to NOTIMEX, he harshly criticized the regression of Spanish foreign policy which he accused of lacking an international policy and of acting by isolated steps and following guidelines drawn by the Ronald Reagan administration.

He described Spain's neglect of the North-South dialogue to the point that it was not invited to attend the Cancun meeting as "deplorable". "This is the result of a concept voiced by Calvo-Sotelo in his inauguration speech when he said that the country should not have an international policy but rather a foreign policy and that it should limit itself to matters outside Spain that have direct bearing on us. In an interdependent world as today's, this is not possible," Azcarate said.

He said that on subjects such as western Sahara, "Spain has broken off the positive moves it had begun to make with Adolfo Suarez trip to Algiers." In regard to the Middle East, "it has halted initial steps begun with Yasir 'Arafat's visit to Madrid." Concerning the nonaligned, "it has stopped the moves begun with Spanish participation in the nonaligned conference in Havana."

"Likewise, with our absence from Cancun, we are removing ourselves from a situation that could give Spain a role not only in the world but also in Europe. For reasons of history and culture, Spain is in a privileged position to contribute to the dialogue with the Third World," Manuel Azcarate said. Now, "instead of playing the role we should and which would also help us to solve other foreign policy problems, Spain is leaving that role and showing total ineptness in foreign policy."

Asked if there has been a regression in the change from Suarez to Calvo-Sotelo, he answered: "Undoubtedly, what with the serious breach in what should be customary in a parliamentary state. The parties here have not been consulted. They have not even been informed. The Foreign Affairs Committee in congress knows nothing about the negotiations with the United States or anything about the important Cancun conference."

U.S. NEUTRON BOMB DECISION SHOWS HARDENING LINE

LD101054 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0820 GMT 10 Aug 81

[From the press review]

[Text] AAMULEHTI writes today about the U.S. decision on the neutron bomb. President Reagan's decision to begin production and stockpiling of the neutron bomb, a weapon with a disastrous radiation effect, is a manifestation of hardening measures. Jimmy Carter's similar plans aroused much commition and opposition among the United States' Western allies and he decided to shelve them. They included siting neutron bombs in Europe. A White House spokesman has stressed that the intention now is to stockpile them in the United States, at least for the time being.

The paper notes that this has not been an easy decision for Reagan, as the government was not unanimous on the issue. It will be interesting to see what consequences this disagreement will produce. Can Reagan make his company toe the line, or will the bomb decision lead to a government reshuffle? This was what AMMULEHTI said today.

MINISTER, EXPERT REGRET NEUTRON WEAPON DECISION

LD092020 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Interview with disarmament expert Inga Thorsson and Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten by unidentified reporter--recorded; date, place not given]

[Text] [Question] President Reagan has decided to manufacture the neutron bomb. Swedish disarmament expert Inga Thorsson comments on the decision:

[Thorsson] It is a great disappointment and a deep anxiety over what is to come.

[Question] What does this mean to disarmament in the world now?

[Thorsson] This is a continuation of the same trend we have regrettably observed for several years, because the debate has been very strong and the criticism of this weapon quite fierce and we had hoped that it would not be produced. When Weinberger spoke about these weapons some months ago and wanted to have them he was reprimanded by Secretary of State Haig, who said this could only take place after consultations with the U.S. allies in Europe.

[Question] What do you think caused this change now?

[Thorsson] There is constant pressure for the development of new types of weapons of this kind because of the prevailing mood in America. But I have never been able to understand the military value of these weapons in Europe.

[Question] What makes them so undesirable and dangerous?

[Thorsson] I believe this will very considerably lower the nuclear weapons threshold and with that the risk of a nuclear escalation will increase if any kind of war should break out and such a weapon were to be used.

[Question] It may thus happen more easily that a nuclear war could break out?

[Thorsson] There are those who claim that the war threshold itself would be raised through the neutron weapons, but if a war should break out it means that the nuclear weapons threshold is lowered. [Word indistinct] it would be quicker and easier for a nuclear war to start.

[Question] How should Sweden react to this decision now in your view?

[Thorsson] Well, we must react as we have done all the time, with deep protest and great anxiety over the future. I am known for expressing my skepticism over protests against various unpleasant phenomena, but unfortunately I do not believe that when a decision has been taken, it has been taken. The only ones who can now protest with any effect are the European allies, who have expressed their deep concern earlier and who clearly have not been consulted now, as the news bulletins report that the allies are now to be informed.

[Question] Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten, what is your reaction to the American decision?

[Ullsten] I regret it as it means a further escalation of the nuclear weapons arsenals in the world and of the risk that they will be used.

[Question] Why is it that the neutron bomb in particular has aroused such strong opposition?

[Ullsten] I think all nuclear weapons arouse strong opposition, but naturally one becomes particularly concerned over development which increases the risk that nuclear weapons will also be used, and this is the idea behind the neutron bomb, which is considered to have certain advantages and be more acceptable in a war. Thus the so-called nuclear weapons threshold has been lowered, and this is the great danger with this type of weapons.

[Question] Will the Swedish Government react officially to this decision?

[Ullsten] I did so today.

[Question] What did you say?

[Ullsten] I issued a statement in which we say that we regret the decision and that we think it is (?depressing) that this summer, which has been marked by peace marches and statements for disarmament, the only think the big powers come out with are big military maneuvers such as the Soviet exercise in the Baltic, or with decisions on new armaments, such as this American decision now.

GREEK CYPRIOT REACTIONS TO TURKISH PROPOSALS

Greek, Cypriot Contacts

NC070817 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] In a statement, the Greek Embassy denies the report published today in a Cyprus newspaper that a telephone call was made yesterday by Greek Prime Minister Rallis to President of the Republic Kiprianou and Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis in connection with the submitted Turkish proposals. The Greek Embassy's statement stresses that no telephone communication took place between the above officials.

Government Spokesman

NC071155 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Replying to a question whether from the study made thus far of the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the government can make any assessments, the government spokesman stated that the government's assessment and reaction will be manifested at the table of negotiations.

In reply to another question, the spokesman said that, in addition to the usual procedure for studying the Turkish proposals, the government is making use of all responsible ministries for every specific issue.

Replying to a question, the spokesman said that in the event the study of the Turkish proposals indicates that the president of the republic should go to Athens for consultations with the Greek Government, a pertinent official statement would be issued.

In another statement, the government spokesman described as inaccurate a press report published today that in a telephone communication with President of the Republic Kiprianou and Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis, Greek Prime Minister Rallis had recommended to avoid statements or activities in any form that would give the impression that the Turkish proposals have been rejected.

Press Reactions

NC070856 [Editorial Report] With the exception of TA NEA, all other Greek Cypriot morning papers on 7 August carry commentaries on the submission of the Turkish Cypriot proposals on the territorial, constitutional and other aspects of the Cypriot problem.

KHARAVYI in a front-page editorial, "Collectively and Responsibly," notes that "the Turkish proposals on the territorial and constitutional aspects of the Cyprus problem were in the hands of the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot leadership since the day before yesterday. This fact opens up a new phase in our political issue." The editorial continues with the suggestion, "The Turkish proposals must be given immediately to the responsible leaderships of all political parties to be studied. Then the National Council, the Cabinet and the country's entire leadership should study them jointly, and decide further on the delicate and careful handling that could advance our case.

"The new situation should be studied collectively and responsibly and the most correct decisions should be made collectively and responsibly."

O AGON carries a comment headed "A Period for the Study of Problems," pointing out that "the Turkish proposals are now in our hands. But submitting them, the Turks acquired the advantage of a start. Now they will await our reaction and meanwhile they will, unencumbered, be able to declare that they have submitted proposals, not only on the territorial aspect, as we had been demanding, but also on the constitutional and other issues."

Furthermore, the comment notes: "Consequently, not only must our side study and reply to the Turkish proposals, but it must also take a position on the issue of procedure that has indirectly been put forth, because procedure is no less significant than substance, given the fact that it indirectly influences developments."

The comment concludes: "The proposals and the procedure should constitute the objects of a serious and deep, but mainly collective, study and decisionmaking."

O FILELEVTHEROS carries a comment entitled "New Phase" stressing; "Nobody disagrees that with the submission of the Turkish proposals, the Cyprus problem enters a new phase. At this moment, it is unknown where this new phase will lead. However, things have been set in motion. The ball is in our court and it is our duty [to decide] how to deal with it." Further along the comment notes: "Haste would be a bad adviser that would also prove fickleness. We should confront the Turkish proposals with special attention and assess the consequences of our reply to them from the political, social, economic, military and any other viewpoint.

"Another factor to be dealt with is the reaction that can be expected from the masses of the Turkish Cypriots to our stance toward the proposals that have been submitted." The comment urges: "Our decision should weaken the policy of intransigence and strengthen the policy of wisdom and moderation among the Turkish Cypriots. These and other things should also be taken into consideration so that the Cyprus leadership can carry out its heavy and responsible duty; evaluation of the Turkish proposals."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA carries a comment under the headline: "Turkish Proposals," nothing that "undoubtedly the submission of the Turkish proposals constitutes a positive event from the viewpoint that development and movement have come to the intercommunal talks which for months now were characterized by stagnation." The comment continues: "What is currently needed in connection with our problem is responsible handling, not only by our government which repeatedly has proven how correctly and responsibly it is handling our national issue, but by all parties and political leaders, who at this critical moment should rise to the circumstances that characterize the Cyprus problem."

I SIMERINI carries a comment headlined: "The Fact" noting that "the submission of the Turkish proposals is now a fact which creates a new situation that the Greek Cypriot side must evaluate within its correct diminsions." The comment continues: "Wrongly some newspapers hastened to take a position. The proposals--for the time being--are exclusively in the government's hands. The government has the responsibility for dealing with them. It is to be hoped that it will handle the issue with the required prudence and seriousness so that the mistakes of the past--which led to the setback of our issue instead of its advancement--are not repeated. "

Finally on its front page, O KIRIKAS carries a long editorial "On the Marks of the Nails" noting, "at last the Turkish side has submitted the proposals everyone has been expecting." Then it continues: "We take it as a fact that the Turkish proposals will not satisfy us." The conclusion is: "We are compelled to protect the procedure of the talks. We are compelled to continue the dialogue. We do not have alternative solutions, we have no other choice. We disagree radically with the content and philosophy of the Turkish proposals, but we shall discuss them at the negotiation table hoping that we can improve on them. We cannot blow up the dialogue because the shrapnel will boomerang and hit our own side, irreperably damaging our national case. We have ended up being the wronged, the Turks currently being the vindicated wrong-doers."

More From Spokesman

[Text] The government spokesman stated today that President Kiprianou will convene a joint meeting of the Council of Ministers and National Council next Friday to exchange views on the Turkish proposals. The government spokesman also said that the president of the republic intends to summon the leaders of the parties not represented in the National Council in order to brief them on the Turkish proposals.

At the same time, referring to reports in a section of the press criticizing the president of the republic for not making any public statement on the contents of the Turkish proposals, the government spokesman stated that the president of the republic is handling the entire matter with responsibility and, certainly, he will make public statements at the suitable time. The spokesman added: The president of the republic is fully conscious of the seriousness concerning the handling of the national issue and, after he has listened to the views of the members of the National Council and Council of Ministers, he will not hesitate in undertaking his responsibilities, having always in mind the national interest and people's rights but not any other expediency.

Justice Minister Comments

NC092138 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] The proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus issue are not substantive but give some kind of movement to the intercommunal dialogue that has been stagnant thus far. This is the first Cypriot Government comment on the Turkish proposals.

Specifically, the Cypriot Justice Minister, Mr Dhimitriadhis, has stated:

These proposals, despite the fact that at first sight they do not appear to be substantive, are being studied responsibly and carefully by the Cypriot Government to certify their positive and negative elements. Simultaneously, the leaders of the parties represented in the House have been briefed on the content of the Turkish proposals which, without fail, lead the intercommunal talks to a stalemate. Mr Dhimitriadhis has added that the Turkish proposals will be discussed soon at the Cypriot National Council. Lastly, he stressed that Cyprus is not alone in its struggle. It has the support of all the freedom-loving people of the world and, particularly, of democratic Greece which, at this moment, is the main mainstay of the Cypriot people.

O ANEXARTITOS STATES ROLANDHIS SHOULD RESIGN

[Text] While the Greek Government's opinion regarding the "Waldheim ideas" on the Nicosia airport and linking it with the Famagusta issue was that they should have been rejected, the foreign minister of the Republic of Cyprus informed the political leadership at the time that Athens advised their acceptance!

This scandalous act by the foreign minister was revealed recently and caused dismay among Nicosia political circles, who have already lost all confidence in this minister. We remind that the "Waldheim ideas" were submitted last December after propaganda for a favorable acceptance was made.

The originator of these "ideas"--as EDEK accused and a pertinent Waldheim report confirmed--was the Cypriot minister who discussed them with Waldheim in New York about a year ago.

The "ideas" envisaged the reopening of the Nicosia airport under UN control with separate customs offices for the Republic of Cyprus and the occupation regime. This deed would have legalized occupation, the passports of the occupation regime and the marketing of produce from properties usurped by the invader.

The reaction caused by the revelation of these "ideas" has led to their temporary abandonment.

It is expected that this issue, as well as other issues concerning the personal policy and behavior of the foreign minister, will be dealt with at the National Council's next meeting unless, in the meantime, the minister submits his resignation.

O KIRIKAS CLAIMS UK-TURKISH DEAL ON DHEKELIA BASE

NC090744 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Special dispatch]

[Excerpts] London--Reliable diplomatic sources in the British capital have revealed that a secret agreement has been reached between the British and the Turks according to which, within the framework of a possible final agreement on the Cyprus issue, one of the two British bases in Cyprus should be in the Turkish-controlled part of the island. Specifically, the Turks have demanded that the Dhekelia base be included in the territory of the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus."

According to the same diplomatic sources, the Turkish demand was made during consultations on the preparation of the Turkish proposals, which have already been submitted.

By the way, it should be noted that as a result of this Turkish demand, which is not new, there has been filibustering and failure until now to resolve the issue over British compensation which the Cyprus Republic offers to Britain.

It has also been disclosed by the London diplomatic sources that some unidentified quarters have suggested that Dhekelia be included in the "Turkish territory" and that this base be transferred to the north; Boghaz, near Trikomo, has been recommended as the site for the base.

It is noted that in such an event, if such an agreement is reached within the framework of a final Cyprus solution, the present area of the Dhekelia base will be returned to the Republic of Cyprus as provided in the 1960 treary.

AKEL RECEIVES COPIES OF ROLANDHIS, HAIG LETTERS

NC081028 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] According to reliable information, AKEL has requested and received copies of the letters exchanged between Rolandhis and Haig. AKEL's demand to be informed of the two letters content was submitted to President Kiprianou when the existence of correspondence between Mr Rolandhis and the U.S. secretary of state became known.

It was Mr Rolandhis who first wrote to Haig after President Kiprianou's visit to Athens and the talks on the Cyprus issue held there in Rolandhis' presence.

After the existence of Rolandhis' letter was revealed, the foreign minister spoke about it and said he had asked Mr Haig for U.S. intervention inthe Cyprus issue. He also said he had received a reply letter from Haig.

The contents of the two letters were not released. Thus, AKEL asked Mr Kiprianou that it be fully briefed on the contents of the two letters. Mr Kiprianou satisfied the demand of AKEL, whose reaction has not been learned.

AKEL Reaction

NC081030 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] According to reliable information, AKEL has asked for a copy of the letter U.S. Secretary of State Haig sent to his Cypriot counterpart, Rolandhis.

According to the same information, after studying the letter (which was first reported in I DHILINI on 4 August 1981), AKEL expressed its satisfaction over the views of the U.S. side without, however, issuing a statement.

We are in a position to know that AKEL sought from the first moment the intervention of the U.S. side in the Cyprus solution, but without making any official statement.

At the same time, AKEL even urged Mr Rolandhis to reply to Mr Haig--without, of course, AKEL's position becoming known again--also asking for his intervention so that the Turkish proposals would be submitted as soon as possible.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS REPORTED READY TO DECLARE REPUBLIC

NC100842 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 8 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] Nicosia (SPECIAL)--It has been learned that should the Greek Cypriot administration refuse to take up seriously the package of proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side on the settlement of the Cyprus dispute, and should it again adopt a negative attitude, an independent Turkish Cypriot Republic will be proclaimed without any further delay.

It has been stated that the Turkish Cypriot proposals make fairly generous concessions, particularly in respect of ceding territory, and that in the event an agreement is reached, 80,000 Greek Cypriot refugees can be resettled in the regions to be ceded. Against these Turkish Cypriot concessions, the proposals stipulate certain constitutional rights and security guarantees for the Turkish Cypriot community.

It is reported that the Turkish Cypriot side has stated in the proposals that it is prepared to return to the Greek Cypriot side the tourist area of Varosha and the villages of Kokkina, Louroujina, Avlona, Akhna, Pile, Tourilli and Limniti as well as Kouklia, Archos and Makrasika. However, the Turkish Cypriot side has stated that ceding Lefka, Morphou and Famagusta harbor will never become the subject of bargaining.

Opposition Views

NC100850 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Nicosia, AKAJANS--The two major opposition parties in the TFSC have stated that they will not shoulder any responsibility for the outcome of the intercommunal talks.

In statements they have issued, Communal Liberation Party [CLP] leader Alpay Durduran and Republican Turkish Party leader Ozker Ozgur have criticized the government's policy and stated that they were briefed on the proposals at the same time that the Greek Cypriot side was given them. Alpay Durduran said: "We have never been consulted nor have our views been sought. I leave it to public opinion to judge what this means. The CLP has nothing to do with the proposals given to the Greek Cypriots. Successful or unsuccessful, the responsibility will rest on the government's shoulders."

ATAKOL DISCUSSES PRESS REPORTS ON PROPOSALS

TA071630 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Interior, Foreign and Defense Minister Kenan Atakol has said that press reports on percentages concerning the Turkish Cypriot proposals submitted to the Greek Cypriot side are imaginary and totally based on speculations. In a statement in connection with local Turkish and Greek Cypriot press reports, Atakol said that the proposals that were submitted to the Greek Cypriot side on 5 August 1981 were prepared within the framework of the agreements in principle reached between Denktas and Makarios and Denktas and Kiprianou. Noting that especially the four principles reached during the Denktas-Makarios meeting were taken into consideration for the essence of the proposals, Atakol added: As you know, the Turkish Cypriot side has always believed that the territorial aspect can be solved in accordance with (?specific criteria). Again as you know, it has [words indistinct] the principle of secrecy at the intercommunal talks. It is out of the question for the Turkish Cypriot side to disregard this principle. However, there have been recent Turkish and Greek Cypriot press reports on percentages. I think it is sufficient to say only this on the issue: Reports on these percentages are imaginary and totally based on speculation. Atakol stated that there was nothing more to add to the UN statement issued after the intercommunal talks held on 5 August which said that the Turkish Cypriot side submitted comprehensive proposals.

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA LAUDS PAPANDREOU'S CYPRUS POLICY

NC101025 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 10 Aug 81 p 5

[From the column: "Greek Support"]

[Text] We fully agree with the position of PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou that Greece has the right and the duty to actively support the Cypriot people's struggle. We note with satisfaction this repeated declaration of this position. It gives us the courage to continue our struggle until final vindication.

The statements on the Cyprus issue, made the day before yesterday by both the leader of the official opposition party of Greece and KODISO Chairman Pezmasoglou, reflect the Greek people's deeper sentiments and thoughts for Cypriot Hellenism and certify Greece's active and undivided support. At the same time, we find their views on the ultimate outcome of the Cyprus issue very constructive and it will certainly help the Greek Cypriot side to maintain the correct line toward the Turkish proposals as well as toward developments in general.

We are convinced that the active and undivided support of all Greek parties to our struggle will continue to the same degree, thereby providing our basic mainstay. During this period, perhaps an even closer cooperation between the Greek Cypriot and Greek politicians is necessary, so that we may face developments more effectively.

TWO BOMBS EXPLODE AT ISRAELI EMBASSY IN ATHENS

The first bomb went off at 0013 and the second at 0015. The first bomb damaged the back iron gate of the building, while the second bomb did not cause any damage.

So far, no organization has claimed responsibility for these explosions. High officers of the Gendarmerie, headed by its chief, Lieutenant General Rizas, and bomb disposal experts, went to the spot where the explosions occurred. The regional security force is carrying out investigations to apprehend the culprits.

[Text] Cooperation between New Democracy and the National Party is failing due to serious differences in views.

According to a statement released by Mr Theotokis' party, during discussions on possible election cooperation between New Democracy and the National Party, the National Party recommended that the two parties cooperate in the election and that New Democracy choose how the collaboration would be publicly demonstrated, while New Democracy countered with a refusal of any cooperation or collaboration with other political parties. Thus, the absolute impossibility of approaching either view was confirmed.

Moreover, the leader of the National Party, Sp. Theotokis, in a related statement said:

"I believe that the dominating factor is the need to impede the Marxist front from occupying more ground. And with the view that the salvation of the parliamentary democratic system--the foiling of the danger against the Greek people's freedoms--is of a greater importance than our existing, important differences with the governing party, we accepted the discussions. Of course, we intended no deviation whatsoever from our principles. The National Party represents a section of a healthy-thinking people which places the national interest above all party exigencies. And it was decided that this interest would be served better if election cooperation were achieved. The fact that this dialogue has made no progress does not put at fault the National Party, which, in this case also, wanted to serve the national interest.

Now, each party undertakes its responsibilities. The National Party will carry on its struggle without departing in any way from its principles. And these principles are known. I have repeatedly and publicly declared them.

SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL SHUFFLES SECURITY POSTS

NC081247 Paris AFP in English 1234 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 8 Aug (AFP)--The Turkish Supreme Military Council has shuffled top security posts, appointing General Necdet Urug, commander of the 1st Army, secretary-general of the National Security Council, a reliable source said here today. The source said that outgoing Security Council secretary Haudar Saltik would take over the 1st Army and General Urug's other post of commander of the state of siege in Istabul. The Security Council is presided over by Head of State and Head of General Staff Kenan Evren.

The source said the shuffle came under yearly promotions and appointments decided at a meeting that opened here on Wednesday. This year's meeting is especially significant as the first to take place since the military seized power here on September 12 last year. Observers commented today that the creation of the Security Council after the coup had blocked the routine cycle of promotions and retirement, with the commauders of the three branches of the armed forces and the paramilitary police chained to their jobs.

Traditionally, as the longest serving general, General Urug would have taken over sooner or later as army commander-in-chief from General Nurettin Ersin. However, this was prevented under Turkish law as General Urug was not a member of the Security Council. The shuffle was believed decided to get round this problem.

The command of the prestigious 1st Army was also a promotion for General Saltik, who had never held a top command post, being appointed to the council only a matter of days after command of the 4th Army last year. Meanwhile, an official source said that 33 generals and admirals had been promoted under this week's arrangements, while 19 others had been retired.

Decides Promotions

TA081437 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 8 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 8 Aug (AA)--The list of top-ranking officers of the armed forces who have won promotions effective on 30 August has been released by the General Staff Secretariat.

The promotion of 33 generals or admirals to a higher rank, of 42 colonels or navy captains to general, or commodore, and a 1-year extension of service in the same rank for 8 others was decided upon at this week's session of the Supreme Military Council, which met from Wednesday through Friday.

The names of 19 generals or admirals who were retired have not been released yet.

In the army, the three lt. generals have been promoted to generals are: Ismail Hakki Akansel, Mehmet Buyruk and Ragip Ulugbay.

In the navy, Vice Adm. Zahit Atakan has moved up to admiral, while Lt. Gen. Nusret Toroslu has been promoted to general of the Air Force.

GUNAYDIN SPECULATES ON DENKTAS' TRAVEL TO UK

NC080814 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 6 Aug 81 pp 1,4

[Resat Akar report from Nicosia]

[Excerpt] The sudden departure of TFSC President Rauf Denktas for London when the intercommunal talks have been resumed and strenguous bargaining is going on for the settlement of the Cyprus issue has led to widespread speculation.

Denktas, who said he was going to London for about 10 days "because he was expecting a grandchild," stated that the Cyprus issue is going through a very critical phase. Denktas added: "The Turkish Cypriot side has prepared a package of proposals. Now we shall wait and see the reaction of the Greek Cypriot side without speculating." On the minority government formed by Cagatay which he has approved, Denktas said: "In fact, I wanted to see the formation of a government by technocrats and elements outside the legislative assembly. The present government is a minority government. However, my colleagues who have been elected to the assembly opposed this idea and formed such a government. I hope it will turn out to be a good one."

Political circles commenting on Rauf Denktas' departure from the island at this very critical moment have drawn attention to the fact that bargaining for the solution of the Cyprus issue will be very strenuous and that various pressures will greatly increase during this period. Thus, they said, Denktas has chosen to go into exile in order to avoid these pressures and in order to prevent the Turkish side from adopting a soft position.

U.S. APPROVAL SEEN FOR TURKISH CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

TA071504 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1425 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 8 Aug (AA)--The new Turkish Cypriot proposals for a settelement of the Cyprus question presented to the Greek Cypriot side Wednesday have met with general approval at the U.S. and other diplomatic circles abroad, informed sources in Ankara said.

The comprehensive proposals, aimed at a peaceful and just settlement, could lead to a speedy solution of the Cyprus issue if the Greek Cypriot side adopts a constructive approach, the same sources said.

The next meeting in intercommunal talks, to be held in Lefkosa [Nicosia] Wednesday, 19 August, will consider the procedure to be followed in future.

The general director of the Soil Products Office, Halil Ceken, announced that wheat imports will continue to arrive on a monthly basis until a steady grain market is ensured in the country.

Meanwhile, during the 1981 purchase campaign, the Soil Products Office bought a total of 1,096 million tons of grain from the farmers and paid them a total of 17 billion Turkish liras. Of this grain, 455,000 tons is wheat, 638,000 tons is barley and the rest is rye and oats.

PLO DELEGATE HUSAYN LEAVES VIENNA FOR DAMASCUS

AU101112 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1058 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] The PLO representative in Vienna, Husayn, has left Vienna today from Schwechat Airport for Damascus. Officially it was declared that he went on a vacation. However, Husayn purchased only a one-way ticket and took a lot of luggage with him.

After the discovery of the attempt by two Arabs to smuggle arms to Vienna, their detention and their deportation yesterday, Sunday, the Vienna PLO representative--who had been present when the two men were detained at the airport--was exposed to sharp criticism. He was expected to be recalled in the near future.

Interior Minister Comments

AU102000 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Hans Besenboeck interview with Austrian Interior Minister Erwin Lanc in Vienna 10 August--passages in quotation marks recorded]

[Summary] Asked whether the departure of the PLO representative to Vienna, Dr Ghazi Husayn, from Vienna today was tantamount to his recall, Minister Lanc stated: "I stick to what I said on Sunday a week ago: The narrow basis of confidence would seem to me to recommend that those people who sent him to this place recall him. I cannot say whether or not this is an act, a beginning, in that direction."

Asked whether Dr Husayn would be permitted to reenter Austria after completing his vacation, Minister Lanc stated: "We will consider these problems when they arise, and the question of how we will handle can only be answered on the basis of certain facts that must be available at that time."

Asked about the dangerousness of the PLO team, Lanc stated: "I can only stick to the facts. They certainly did not need three suitcases with weapons as a lunch box."

To speculation about his reticence concerning the affair and criticism of his actions by the opposition, Minister Lanc stated: "I will not deal with speculation that is being made here. I must act in view of the security interest of my country and of the people living here who could be endangered by any attacks, regardless of whether they are foreigners or Austrians. Such are the handicaps to the course of my actions, and not statements made by opposition politicians aroused from their summer rest who are acting out of an understandable mania to gain status."

BRIEFS

AUSTRIAN-HUNGARIAN POWER EXCHANGE--The current electric power exchange agreement between the Austrian Federal power company and the Hungarian MVMT power company will be extended by another 3 years until 30 April 1986. That is the result of talks held at the end of July between Director Fremuth of the Austrian Federal power company, Hungarian Secretary of State Kapoly, MVMT Director General Schiller and other representatives of the Hungarian power industry. Under the power exchange agreement, Austria supplies power from hydropower plants to Hungary every year between May and August, and imports from Hungary an equivalent quota of electric power from thermal power stations in the period October to March. FERROCHROME PLANT FOR INDIA--The Voest-Alpine corporation has concluded with the state-owned Indian Orissa mining corporation a 250 million schillings contract providing for delivery by the Austrian company of a plant for the production of highly carburized ferrochrome. The annual capacity of this plant is to be 50,000 tons. It is to be completed within 3 years. [Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 5 Aug 81 p 4 AU]

GENSCHER OUTLINES 'REALISTIC POLICY ON GERMANY'

LD101312 Hamburg DPA in German 1138 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today called for an increase in intra-German cooperation. In an extensive statement on German policy published in Bonn, Genscher refers to the importance of intra-German relations during times of tension and advocates a continuation of the dialogue between the two German states "on all issues, if possible at all levels, and without preconditions." The FDP chairman wants both sides to contribute to reducing tension and in this connection warns the Federal Republic against complicating intra-German relations through overinterpreting its own legal positions."

Genscher outlines five points of a "minimum program for a realistic policy on Germany during times of tension:"

1. What has been achieved during the past decade between Bonn and East Berlin must not be put at risk. The agreements must be strictly adhered to and the two states must prove themselves to be reliable treaty partners. The GDR's raising of the minimum currency exchange requirement contradicts this kind of policy.

2. Intra-German relations should be kept open for further developments and not be put under strain as a result of maximum demands. The two states must therefore not continue to pursue unfulfillable demands, such as that for international legal recognition of the GDR.

3. No additional strains on East-West relations must emerge from the intra-German relationships. This binds both states above all "to strict adherence to the principle of moderation inside and outside Europe." Both sides should abandon the policy of nitpicking.

4. With regard to the intra-German dialogue, Genscher welcomed the reference contained in the Brezhnev-Honecker Crimea communique to the usefulness of political contacts between representatives of states with differing systems. This reference could, if it were to act as a guideline for political action, become an "interesting starting point." Even if the GDR and the Federal Republic cannot make any bilateral arms limitation or disarmament agreements, "talks between Bonn and East Berlin on issues of particular controversy between East and West are necessary at this time." The talk which Genscher will have in New York in September with GDR Foreign Minister Fischer "can therefore in this connection be of a nature altogether different from that of earlier meetings."

5. Both states should regard it as a common aim to achieve the greatest progress in realizing the Helsinki Final Act in all its parts in comparison with the other signatory states. The opportunities offered by the basic treaty are, for example, far from being fully utilized. This treaty demands, according to its spirit, that relations between the two German states be developed. "It is not aimed at stagnation, but at dynamism."

Genscher stresses that the FDP will put this minimum program at the center of its efforts for a policy on Germany. He called on the GDR "not to dodge the obligation to retain the progress made in the 1970's in relations between our states, not to mar anything and to tread paths with us which can lead to a further normalization of the intra-German relations in the interest of all Germans and to securing peace in Europe."

OFFICIALS, PRESS REACT TO U.S. NEUTRON DECISION

Wischnewski Statement

LD101132 Hamburg DPA in German 1020 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Aug (DPA)--The SPD said in Bonn today that it is deeply disappointed that the European NATO partners were not consulted before President Ronald Reagan made his decision on the production of the neutron weapon.

SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski said in a five-point statement that he fears this will supply fresh arguments to the forces in the Federal Republic which are fanning anti-Americanism. The SPD expects the Federal Government to take steps in the NATO alliance to oppose the siting of the neutron weapon in Europe. Wischnewski stated:

"1. The U.S. Government's decision was made without its European alliance partners. This causes deep disappointment in Europe, especially since the European governments had received assurances from the new U.S. Government that they would be consulted in good time on all issues concerning Europe.

"2. Coming as it does immediately before the scheduled meeting between the foreign ministers of the United States and the USSR, Haig and Gromyko, on the prospects for negotiations between the two great powers on questions of arms limitation, this American decision cannot but lead to a strain on these vital negotiations.

"3. The SPD takes note that this is a U.S. decision and that no siting of the neutron weapon in Europe is contemplated. The Federal Government is requested to urge in the necessary negotiations within the alliance that a posture against the deployment of this weapon in Europe be adopted.

"4. The SPD notes with regret that the U.S. decision has affected the Federal Government's initiative on a comprehensive disarmament program, an initiative which the United States expressly welcomed.

"5. The SPD fears that the American decision will supply fresh arguments to those in the Federal Republic who leave no stone unturned to fan anti-Americanism. The new U.S. Government is obviously not yet familiar with the situation in Europe to the extent urgently required.

Egon Bahr Interview

DW101525 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1448 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Excerpts from reporter Proempers interview with Egon Bahr, SPD disarmament expert, date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] When Jimmy Carter in 1977-78 for the first time considered building this weapon, domestic discussion in Europe contributed to his decision not to build the weapon for the time being. You, Mr Bahr, at the time described the weapon as a "symbol for the perversion of thinking." You then asked whether mankind is up to becoming crazy? May I ask you the same question today?

[Answer] Of course, I am still of this view. Nothing at all has changed for me since then in assessing the neutron weapon from a moral-ethical point of view. And I don't see the slightest reason to abandon my view. Now as before, I admit that one also might have quite different ethical and moral considerations with regard to this weapon, but this actually is something different. I stick to my view. As a matter of fact, the ethical issues in connection with the neutron weapon at the time were vehemently discussed.

Hardly anything at all was discussed then with regard to the military aspect of the neutron weapon. And it is this discussion which we will have to start now. We will have to start with the fact that though this weapon is a "marvelous" defensive weapon, it is likewise a "marvelous" offensive weapon. It is as effective for the aggressor as it is for the defender.

[Question] Does this mean that you, in your view, are lowering the threshold for a limited nuclear war?

[Answer] It is an absolutely senseless intention to station the neutron weapon in the center of Europe. The U.S. President is fully in a position to decide at any time as to which weapons he wants to produce in America. We have the duty and responsibility of deciding whether it is to be deployed over here. I am against it.

[Question] What are the reasons?

[Answer] Miniaturizing of weapons lowers the threshold of war or the atomic threshold. That cannot be in our interest.

[Question] Unlike his predecessor Jimmy Carter, the U.S. President in this particular case has not consulted the European allies, but merely informed them after he made his decision, as was learned in Bonn. Is this a new style, is this a new burdening of the German-American relationship?

[Answer] He must have had reasons to act like this. And he believes that this is in line with his interests. That is legitimate. And we must do the same, that is to say, that we must think of our interest, all the more so since we do not live in this world with the Americans alone. There actually exists another country, named the Soviet Union. And I may be allowed to recall that at the time, after Carter's decision, Brezhnev stated that the Soviet Union will not build this weapon as long as the Americans do not build it. In the event that Brezhnev now recalls this, the Soviet Union now also will start building the neutron weapon.

[Question] Does this mean that you are reckoning with the beginning of an additional round in rearmament?

[Answer] Yes, this can be anticipated.

[Question] You were in Moscow late in June. Do you fear that in addition to the decision, which presumably will be made with regard to building the neutron weapon over there, too, the disarmament talks in November will be jeopardized?

[Answer] No, I do not believe that the disarmament talks in November will be jeopardized, that is to say, the talks on medium-range weapons. The neutron weapon does not belong to them. It, in the true sense of the word, is a theater weapon.

Government Spokesman

DW101910 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0544 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Reporter Proempers telephone interview with government spokesman Lothar Ruehl--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Has the fact that U.S. President Reagan did not consult but merely informed the German allies resulted in a deterioration of German-U.S. relations?

[Answer] No because the Federal Government did not expect to be consulted. Consultations can only be held on joint projects within the alliance. Agreement on such a joint project would have to be achieved or sought if such weapons, elements or ammunition or new weapons systems, including neutron warheads for missiles of the U.S. artillery, were to be stationed in Europe including the Federal Republic, and were to be used by U.S. troops in their combat training here. Since the U.S. President did not announce such a plan, such consultations were unnecessary. We have not received an American request to stockpile these neutron warheads or Lance missile warheads with neutron elements for possible use in a war in Europe in the Federal Republic.

[Question] Such a weapon makes sense only--if we can say so at all--if it can be stockpiled in Europe because, being an antitank weapon, it can only or at least primarily be used in Europe. Egon Bahr in an interview with Deutschlandfunk this morning rejected the stationing of such a weapon. What stance will the Federal Government adopt?

[Answer] The Federal Government naturally reserves its stance because the stockpiling of such neutron warheads with U.S. nuclear missile artillery units in Europe would first have to be discussed and resolved by the alliance bodies. You will remember that former U.S. President Carter in 1977-78 made the introduction of neutron warheads for Lance artillery missiles and possibly later also for heavier U.S. field artillery subject to the approval by the European NATO partners and an alliance decision. After having obtained in the consultations the consent in principle of the European NATO partners, including the Federal Republic, he made the implementation of his plan dependent on further arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union, particularly in the nuclear field. He then linked his decision to the Soviet SS-20's although these two weapons systems cannot be compared. But after he had done this, he announced that he would not have the neutron warheads produced. This also made the alliance decision superfluous to stockpile them in Europe at U.S. request. So such a decision does not exist anymore. The allies would have to discuss and agree on it again. But for the time being, this is out of the question because, as I said, President Reagan ordered the production of the technically developed neutron elements for these warheads. President Carter also pursued this course. This was known to the allies, including the Federal Government, but the U.S. President has not asked the allies to agree to their stationing. Therefore, the problem is of no immediate interest for the Federal Government and the other allied European governments.

[Question] But this no longer is an open question because the Norwegian Social Democratic prime minister has rejected such stationing, Denmark has signalled something similar and the Netherlands foreign minister-delegate also has voiced considerable objections. How will the Federal Government negotiate with its European allies?

[Answer] To begin with, what the Norwegian and Danish Governments say in this respect does not affect the decisions of other alliance partners because when Norway and Denmark became members of NATO they declared that they would not allow any nuclear arms to be stationed on their territory. This decision has applied for more than three decades now so that the statements don't mean a change in Denmark's and Norway's attitude and, thus, in the effect of the Danish and Norwegian policy on the other allies in Europe. I cannot anticipate the Federal Government's opinion forming. I can only say that the Federal Government will always carefully study all allied plans and that the question as to how the nuclear armament of the allied armed forces can be modernized and adjusted to military as well as security and arms control requirements is a question that concerns the alliance.

The modernization of the allied armed forces' nuclear armament since 1978 has been part of NATO's defense improvement program and long term defense program, so that the allies will have a chance to look after their interests and to try to find a common denominator in the common interests. By then, the Federal Government will be able to form its opinion on this matter as soon as this is possible under concrete conditions for an assessment of our interests.

[Question] There have been initial tough reactions from Moscow and the East bloc. Do you anticipate difficulties for the planned disarmament talks in November?

[Answer] I don't see a connection between the two aspects except that the Soviet Government and Soviet propaganda have always established a connection between all Western arms and particularly nuclear arms modernizations and made them the object of campaigns by their media as well as of diplomatic actions warning against and denouncing such plans. But we must not ignore the fact that the Soviet Union in recent years has consistently and considerably advanced the nuclear and chemical armament of its armed forces in Europe, not only in the Soviet troops on German soil, and that the number of Soviet nuclear arms in central Europe has been substantially increased. There are also plans to station nuclear and chemical artillery missiles of high accuracy in eastern central Europe, particularly in Germany and Bohemia which are targeted on military objects and have a range of several hundred kilometers. Therefore, it would be wrong to only look to the West in this discussion, to U.S. nuclear arms and to NATO's armament and to leave out the fact that the Soviet Union not only is very much superior in conventional arms, particularly in armored forces and theater mobile armored artillery, but also strengthens and improves its tactical nuclear arms. In addition, the Soviet Union introduces long range nuclear missile systems of a continental strategic effect and importance which are complemented by other longer range missile systems that can be introduced in all the other Warsaw Pact states so that the older nuclear armament which comes from the Soviet Union is being rapidly modernized there. Only those who see both sides will gain a sensible view of security and arms control policy and be able to see the situation as it really is, instead of politically reacting on the basis of an imaginary situation.

[Commentary signed SZA: "Reagan Lacks Sensitivity"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan seems veritably bent on showing the world how little foreign policy tact his government has: People all over the world remember the misery which U.S. nuclear bombs brought down on Hiroshima and Nagasaki; the Federal Republic, praised as the most important partner, presents a concept for a comprehensive disarmament program in Geneva; many Europeans doubt that the United States seriously wants to negotiate with the Soviet Union on medium-range weapons--and Washington announces the construction of the neutron weapon.

When Reagan's predecessor Jimmy Carter in 1978--to the astonishment of Bonn which had indicated its agreement after regrettable domestic controversies--waived the construction of the radiation weapon for the time being, the West linked some hopes for corresponding Soviet concessions to this act. It may be that the United States feels disappointed. Serious attempts to make the new weapon the subject of negotiations have so far not been noticed, at least not by outsiders. Moscow's initial reaction shows that the climate for talks on medium-range weapons has not improved. In 1978, Brezhnev also kept open the "option" of building neutron weapons. After Reagan's decision, the arms spiral might, therefore, continue to turn.

The Europeans, being confronted with faits accomplis, still find consolation in the promise that they would be consulted prior to deployment; they are not affected by the stockpiling in the United States. Yet, for the United States, the neutron weapon makes no sense. After all, Soviet tanks, whose advance this weapon is supposed to stop, will hardly be rolling over there. Consequently, the demand that the warheads be brought across the Atlantic will soon be forthcoming. Considering the controversies which marked the domestic policy scene 4 years ago, we cannot but anticipate trouble. Even now the slogan of the "arms party" is followed by the charge of "civil war agitation."

[Commentary signed HHG: "The Spiral Turns"]

[Text] When U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger recalled a few weeks ago what a fine and useful achievement the neutron bomb was, it was not just "background noise" or the noncommittal talkativeness of even high-ranking officials, according to U.S. President Reagan, but a test. The neutron bomb eliminates human beings but leaves nonliving material, for instance buildings and tanks, largely undamaged.

So now it is official: the new U.S. Government wants this weapon as well. Reagan's predecessor Jimmy Carter postponed its construction after he felt that it met with too many objections among the European allies. The neutron weapon, to be exact, is no worse than the other mass destruction weapons. But its speciality of making a fine distinction between man and material provides it with a special quality of deterrence—to begin with in our own camp.

Reagan's decision, Washington sources stress, is a matter concerning the United States alone. The weapon is intended to be stationed only at home. This is appropriate to be sure, but once the neutron weapon is in serial production, this may well change quickly. Pressure on the allies to avail themselves of this handy weapon as well is bound to come and since the Soviets will react to this development, the many European advocates of the new armament will then have arguments to intensify internal pressure. The spiral keeps turning.

[Cay Graf Brockdorff commentary: "Higher Threshold]

[Text] President Reagan has made a decision of great importance. He has decided to produce the neutron bomb. Moscow has been given a political signal. The United States will no longer allow the Soviet Union to poke its nose into U.S. armament, which is so easily possible in the open social system of the West, whereas the closed social system of the East can secretly produce any weapons system at will without any public debates.

At best the West's will for self-assertion has been reclaimed. Reagan's decision considerably reduces the danger of war in Europe--in the event it really does exist and has not been merely talked into existence.

The neutron weapon paralyzes the onslaught of armored units and makes dispersion over the terrain compulsory. Thereby, it prevents the buildup of concentrations. Yet, the aggressor must build up these concentrations if he wishes to achieve success. The existence of the neutron weapon alone forces the adversary to behave on the battlefield as though it had already been used.

This is exactly where its war preventing effect is to be found, which contributes so much to the refutation of the philosophy of attack for modern mechanized units. The significance of the neutron weapon lies in the psychological sphere. Like any other neclear weapon, its use will trigger nuclear warfare. The nuclear threshold, however, is not lowered as a result of this weapon but rather raised in practice because it generally makes an armed clash absurd.

With hysteria rather than with rationality the Europeans have created a barrier against the neutron weapon for themselves. This is why it will stay in the United States for the time being because it cannot be made to prevail against lacking political sense.

In times of tension--even in the extremely bad case NATO proceeds from a warning period of at least 48 hours--it can be airlifted to Europe within a few hours. The Soviet general staff reckons with that, even if Moscow and others will now talk of war danger.

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Not Inner-American"]

[Text] Once again the neutron bomb is occupying peoples' minds. In 1977 when Chancellor Schmidt had already decided to give his approval, Egon Bahr discovered what is so very horrible about this nuclear weapon and spoke of the "perversion of thinking." As a result, the matter was nearly "talked to death" (as is the unfortunate SPD routine). But it was Carter who later caused the greater irritation when he, having saddled the Europeans with the burden of this subject, suddenly changed course and revoked the decision to produce the weapon.

Consequently, Reagan's decision now will elicit in Bonn some curses that can hardly be suppressed. It comes at the wrong time and with the wrong arguments. The advocates of this decision in Washington probably failed to consider the side effect on the German theater. Even though the government has trouble enough in unwaveringly weathering the counterarmament discussion through to one of the two possible options, a second attack is now to be directed against the defense concept of the government. People will not talk about the fact that Mitterrand's France will arm itself with the neutron weapon and the Soviets, too, will have it some day. They will pick out the horrifying effects and make them the main theme while simultaneously seizing Washington's argument and pounding on it. Wienberger says that the West has but 12,000 tanks against the 47,000 tanks of the East and thus the neutron weapon must be obtained. But it is no longer possible to make it clear to the masses how this conforms to the maxim of the flexible response and German experts are horrified by the argument that the neutron weapon is to be for swarms of tanks what DDT is for flies. The Federal Government (and the opposition as well) will hardly be able to catch enough breath to say that the neutron weapon can indeed have a mission in the arsenal of deterrence.

The decisions of the Reagan government require the understanding of the Europeans and, therefore, they should be substantiated by a detailed definition of what this is really supposed to represent--nuclear threshold and graduated deterrence. Otherwise, even the majority of the people who support defense will waver in its determination.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON U.S. NEUTRON DECISION

NC101540 Paris AFP in English 1531 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 10 Aug (AFP)--The Soviet Union has tested a neutron bomb, French Defense Minister Charles Hernu said today.

In a communique released here, Mr Hernu, commenting on the U.S. decision at the weekend to proceed with production of a neutron bomb, noted that France was continuing research into such a weapon, but had made no decision regarding its eventual manufacture or deployment. The basis of France's defense system, he stressed, remained "strategic nuclear dissuasion."

"The Russians," he said, "have themselves tested such a weapon. Given this speedup in the arms race, there is no question of disarming France. Instead, we must try to prevent the fatal imbalance of the big powers and propose to them, as President Francois Mitterrand did recently, a progressive disarmament policy."

The U.S. decision, he noted, was "ambiguous in that he said he would both manufacture the weapon and confine it to U.S. territory." He observed that the neutron bomb was obviously a "tactical theater weapon" of potential use in Europe. "Although France is not a member of NATO and thus is not directly concerned, France is in Europe and cannot remain indifferent," Mr Hernu said.

Paris Radio Interview

LD102245 Paris Domestic Service in French 1720 GMT 10 Aug 81

["The Phone Is Ringing" program on U.S. decision to manufacture neutron bomb; French Defense Minister Charles Hernu interviewed by unidentified announcer and by correspondent Ralph Pinto--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Minister, good evening. Thank you for being with us and for giving us a moment from your short holiday. I should explain perhaps that the quality of the line between you and us may not be perfect. What comment does the French defense minister have on the U.S. decision--is France concerned in any way by it?

[Answer] Well, I would like to say two things. First, France is not concerned since there are five countries in Europe that are members of NATO and are directly concerned. France not being a member of the military structure of the Atlantic alliance, it is true that we are not concerned. But since France is in Europe--excuse this truism--we have an interest in Europe and its future and in peace or war in Europe. And it is in this respect that the U.S. decision by President Reagan interests us.

In theory, the neutron weapon [word indistinct] the idea that the United States and the Soviet Union could undertake a forward battle, a nuclear war which would be a limited battle on European territory. Thus, I say that President Reagan's decision is ambiguous in that when he says that the weapon will be confined to U.S. territory, I do not think the Americans are threatened on their territory or that this weapon could be used by them on U.S. territory. This could bring the Americans to propose to NATO countries that they stock the weapon. This is a supposition on my part.

Then, we must understand that in the FRG, for our friends the Germans, this must cause a very great reaction. Why? Because when President Carter, in the brutal way which (?we know about), announced he would not assemble the components of the neutron weapon, we must remember that at the time Helmut Schmidt--this was in 1977--had succeeded in gaining acceptance for the idea of its deployment in the FRG. He had obtained an agreement. Then President Carter said: No, we will not assemble it.

Now President Reagan has made this decision and simply informed the FRG and the other NATO member countries without consultation. I guess that, in a way, this rather freezes the NATO countries, particularly regarding the important issue of our partners in the alliance and for those in NATO--and this is a real problem, the installation of the SS-20, the problem of the Euromissiles, the problem of negotiations on Euromissiles. So Reagan's choice shouldn't excite us too much. We must keep a cool head. By this, I mean that President Reagan's decision must not obscure the real debate, which is that of the installation of Euromissiles in Europe, which directly threatens us Europeans.

As for the Soviet Union, I don't believe that it possesses the neutron weapon, but I think its capacity to make it is beyond doubt. And I (?offer) as proof, if this is proof, the article in today's PRAVDA, of which little is being said. PRAVDA says today that the Soviet Union will reply or can reply to the U.S. challenge. So one may wonder as to this neutron device whether the Soviet Union is technologically capable of assembling components. I don't think that there have been any explosions, but no one can say whether there have been tests in the Soviet Union.

[Question] Mr Minister, when you were in Tahiti a few days ago, you said the French Government favors continuing research on the neutron bomb. You have made no decision on its inclusion in the nuclear panoply and this is a political decision.

[Answer] As of today, there has been no French political decision to construct this enhanced (?radiation) weapon. This falls within the competence of the president of the French Republic, Francois Mitterrand, and the Defense Council. As of today, this decision has absolutely not been made.

[Question] But you hinted, while you were in Tahiti, that there could be experiments with this neutron weapon. Now, could this be in the near future and perhaps on the Pacific testing ground?

[Answer] If there are to be experiments, they will take place, but there can only be studies and experiments. From there to getting the components together, assembling them and then constructing a weapon, a long period of time would be necessary, but nothing can begin without a political decision by the French Government. And I repeat to you that this decision has not yet been made.

[Question] Mr Minister, scandalmongers claim that President Reagan has already concluded that by 1983 the Europeans, first of all the West Germans and then perhaps also even the Italians, the British, Netherlanders and the Belgians, will not want Pershing or cruise missiles and that he is making the decision now to offer them the neutron bomb, knowing also that the polemic will start up all over again, that bad conscience coupled with Moscow propaganda will begin functioning, that, at the limit, there will be no installation either of these 380 Lance missiles and neutron shells. These same scandalmongers then conclude that the U.S. President would remind the Europeans of their responsibilities, saying: Whichever way one turns, you do not want a nuclear umbrella. You must give me your answer now. Do you believe in a Machiavellian theory of this kind?

[Answer] I have no way of knowing the gods' secrets and even less the secrets of President Reagan's mind. But your question is interesting since it is certain that at present, in a certain number of European countries that are members of NATO, faced with these announcements of arms deployment, there is a certain upsurge of neutralism. In France, it should be noted, but it's precisely because France does not belong to NATO. [sentence as heard] Confronted with this upsurge of neutralism, the United States may be thinking --I stress may be--of a new strategy or of other proposals. But this is a supposition that you are making and I cannot reply on this subject.

But what I can tell you is that France and the other European countries, we who are in the Atlantic alliance, must seek to redefine the links of this Atlantic alliance in which we are partners, in order to learn what exactly are the guarantees and security because there should be an end to the days when the two great powers, and they alone, can get on together sometimes as comrades, sometimes as adversaries. Today things are heating up as if they were adversaries.

I mean that the destiny of the French and of the Europeans should be in our hands and that, in this debate, the disarmament debate--today, alas, that of the increase in armaments--the Europeans should have their say. If that is what you meant, then I agree with you.

[Question] Do you expect the Soviets to turn to you and take you as an example, saying that thanks to the independent diplomatic and military policy of France it is to be hoped that the others will do the same? Do you in the French Government expect to be quoted as an independent model in the West by the Soviets, in relations to all those who are likely to be the rascals and the friends of the Americans and accept the new neutron weapon without saying anything?

[Answer] Until the last few days, the tone of the Soviet press with regard to France was not the most agreeable. Despite what you say, and I do not know if the Soviet Union will give French policy as an example, but I say that it could, since, after all, here is a country, France, which is a member of the Atlantic alliance, which is not a member of NATO, which is thus not one of the countries concerned by the installation of Pershings or the neutron weapon and which has its freedom of decision. [words indistinct] we are loyal partners of the United States. By this I mean that one cannot leave an alliance which we belong to historically without (?constituting) another. Here it is necessary for peace to make enough progress to define a collective security pact in Europe. I am not inventing this collective security pact in order to reply to you. It really is part of what the Socialists have been confirming and requesting since the congress in Epinay.

[Text] Exactly 31 minutes ago, the Iran Air plane from Tehran via Frankfurt landed at Orly. On board was the first group of 57 French people to leave Iran. On the spot at Orly were members of their families and even more journalists. There too, on the official side, were Paul Depis, President Mitterrand's special envoy, who negotiated their repatriation, and Jacques Fournier, the deputy secretary-general of the Elysee.

Only 87 French people now remain in Iran. Fifty-seven of them will be repatriated on Wednesday. Thirty French people, mostly religious, decided to stay.

PREMIER'S OFFICE ISSUES NOTE ON NEUTRON BOMB

AU101523 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 10 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian Government learned of American President Ronald Reagan's decision to put neutron weapons into full production only a few hours before the announcement made by a White House spokesman Saturday. A note released by the premier's office today reported that, "the Italian Government also understands that the American decision does not, in any way, on the basis of NATO treaty obligations, involve the transfer or the deployment of the neutron warheads outside United States' territory.

"Italy, in close association with the other European countries united in the Atlantic defense alliance," the note affirmed, "will continue to exert all efforts so that suitable activities can be started up in competent quarters as soon as possible for the conclusion of balanced and verifiable agreements for the reduction at the lowest level possible of all types of nuclear armaments."

In an earlier section of the note, it was disclosed that "the decision of the United States Government to continue the production and to proceed with the assembly of the neutron bomb components was made autonomously and without the prior consultation of the allied governments. "This was communicated during a talk, held at the urgent request of the American Embassy, only a few hours before the official White House announcement."

The note added that at that time, the Italian Government was informed that, "the components assembled for the neutron bomb will remain stockpiled in United States territory and that this is not a matter, therefore, of proceeding with the deployment of these weapons. The Italian Government, for its part, has noted that the decision is the exclusive concern of the United States and, as such, falls within the sovereign sphere of that country," the note said.

PALESTINIAN GROUP CLAIMS ROLE IN EL AL BOMBING

AU101530 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 10 Aug (ANSA)--A self-styled "May 15 for the Liberation of Palestine" group in Beirut has claimed responsibility for the bomb which went off Sunday in the El Al office at Rome's International Fiumicino Airport, cutting the Israeli airline facilities and slightly injuring two people. Police investigating the incident here apparently give little weight to the note turned up in the Lebanese capital which said that the act was planned "in retaliation against the savage operations aimed at the annihilation of the Arab and Palestinian peoples."

At the airport today, police eliminated the trash baskets from the departure lounges to avert a repetition of an explosive device planted in one of these containers and limited passenger access to these areas in a security clampdown.

In another related development, the Israeli Embassy in Rome released a statement which recalled that a Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) representative said here last February 12 that Italy must not become a terrain for the conflict between the PLO and its enemies within the terms of an agreement between the organization and Italy. The embassy note also referred to an interview of the PLO foreign relations chief recently published in a West German weekly in which he affirmed that Israel must never be allowed to live in peace and total security. Also mentioned in the note was the arrest last week of two armed Arabs at the Vienna airport. The pair was apparently waiting for a PLO representative in Austria.

The only El Al agent on duty at the time of the blast, Gaetano Prosperi, was slightly injured and a woman waiting for a flight in the departure lounge was treated for shock at a nearby hospital. The explosion sparked panic in the airport and all traffic was halted for an hour while police evacuated the departure area for security reasons.

COMMUNIQUE RELEASED ON BALSEMAO'S RESIGNATION

LD102140 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] The prime minister's office this evening released a communique accusing certain figures of the Democratic Alliance of being behind Pinto Balsemao's resignation.

The decision to resign, the communique states, was due to the systematic and public opposition generated against Pinto Balsemao since the government took office by certain members of the Democratic Alliance, the identity of whom everyone is now aware.

The resignation, the communique adds, is aimed at not raising obstacles to an alternative government which the critics, even though in the minority, are now politically dutybound to present to the country.

PSD Deputy Chief Resigns

LD110205 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The National Political Committee of the Social Democratic Party [PSD] held a meeting this evening during which PSD First Deputy Chairman Carlos Macedo formally tendered his resignation from his post, thus carrying out the intention he announced last week.

Carlos Macedo, who left some 40 minutes after the meeting began, said that he does not regard himself as a member of the so-called group of Balsemao critics, but added that it is obvious that he is not a supporter of the Social Democrats' leader.

The meeting, which ended at about 2200, produced a final communique which was read by PSD Secretary General Antonio Capucho:

[Begin recording] The PSD National Political Committee, in a meeting chaired by Francisco Pinto Balsemao, has analyzed the political consequences of his resignation from post of prime minister. The instability provoked by certain people who are clearly in a minority has created a grave situation. The consequences for the country, its government and the resolution of its problems thus are evident. They cannot be blamed on the party chairman or on the National Political Committee.

It has been decided to convene an extraordinary session of the party's National Council on 14 August with a view to debating and approving a nomination for prime minister of the Democratic Alliance government.

The National Political Committee expresses its full personal and political solidarity with its chairman, Francisco Pinto Balsemao, for his disinterested attitude to power, for his defense of party unity--evident in the various conciliatory proposals that on several occasions he initiated or supported--and for the high sense of responsibility he has shown. [end recording]

Speaking to reporters after reading the communique, Antonio Capucho stated:

[Begin recording] The party's National Council must come to terms with the fact that there have been public statements by members of the minority group that there are alternatives available to replace Dr Pinto Balsemao. Many of the members of the so-called critical group have publicly named the alternatives. Let them come forward and let the National Council give its opinion.

[Reporter] At the next session of the National Council, if the critical group stands by its all or nothing attitude and if there is a clear majority that thinks otherwise, will the majority continue to allow this interference by a minority that is destabilizing the country?

[Capucho] I am glad that such a question is on the public's mind for it most certainly is on the party's mind. The party is finding it increasingly harder to understand, the party activists are finding it increasingly harder to understand what lies at the root and what the ultimate aims are of such an attitude. They will draw their own conclusions and will bring about the necessary steps to bring such a state of affairs to an end because this is truly an untenable state of affairs which, as the Political Committee communique points out, has grave consequences not only for the PSD but also for the Democratic Alliance and the country itself. [end recording]

CDS Discusses Situation

LD110220 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] The Executive Committee of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS]--the second largest party in the government coalition--has met to discuss the consequences of Pinto Balsemao's resignation.

Following the discussion, the committee stated that it feels that the decision on whether the prime minister should remain in office or be replaced is for the Social Democratic Party alone to decide. At the same time, the committee once more reiterated its loyal and solid commitment to the Democratic Alliance and voiced the hope that the alliance will be capable of resolving the present crisis.

The Christian Democrats [CDS unofficial designation] further expect the Democratic Alliance to stand by its responsibilities to the electorate as a guarantee of political stability, the modernization of the country and the improvement of the living standards of the Portuguese.

ARCHBISHOP OF BRAGA CRITICIZES POLITICIANS

LD091032 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The archbishop of Braga, Msgr Eurico Dias Nogueira, yesterday took part in a public ceremony in Fajao, Pampilhosa da Serra, in which tribute was paid to the artist Father Augusto Nunes Pereira, who was born in that locality.

The archbishop asked: Faced with such gloomy prospects, what are the politicians doing to discourage this impoverishment in human wealth and to serve the nation from which they received their mandate? Nothing or very little. He added: The Legislative Assembly keeps itself busy debating and voting fabulous salaries and a privileged status for its deputies; the cabinet degrades itself in internal strife and over issues of minor importance instead of courageously tackling the country's major problems; the anachronistic Council of the Revolution neither does nor lets others do anything; and the more responsible political parties attack each other.

He concluded: This is the suffering and disenchanted Portugal of April which is increasingly moving away from a progressive Europe only interested in the skilled labor which the emigrants have to offer. Being part of this continent due to its geographic location, Portugal is, however, getting increasingly stuck in its backward position due to the apathy of its politicians.

GOVERNMENT 'CONCERNED' OVER U.S. NEUTRON DECISION

LD101512 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] The Finnish Government is concerned over the U.S. decision to start manufacturing and stockpiling neutron bombs. A government statement issued today notes that the decision can step up the arms race between big powers and thus have a harmful effect on the entire international climate. The Finnish Government once again appeals to all sides to do everything possible to stop the arms race. The statement points out that the big powers naturally carry the main responsibility, but that all countries should actively support and contribute to efforts to achieve this aim. The statement emphasized that Finland has always consistently opposed the testing and use of all new types of nuclear weapons as well as the proliferation of nuclear arms.

NORDIC COUNTRIES SUPPORT AIR CONTROLLERS STRIKE

LD071408 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 7 Aug 81

[Text] Swedish air traffic controllers today decided to go along with sympathy measures in support of the striking American air traffic controllers which the International Federation of Air Traffic Controllers Association recommended yesterday. As from 1100 today Swedish air traffic controllers refuse to give flight permission to planes due to enter American airspace. This also applies to the air traffic controllers in the other Nordic countries and Western Europe. The sympathy measures are explained by safety reasons. The Swedish air traffic controllers think the staff now supposed to maintain American air traffic can no longer guarantee the planes' safety.

NO SEPARATE TALKS WITH USSR ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

According to Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten, Sweden will not start separate talks on the zone with the Soviet Union. Ullsten, who returned home from Mexico today, denied a Swedish press report that the northern nuclear-free zone would be discussed during the visit of Leif Leifland, permanent under secretary of state, to the Soviet Union next month. The Swedish Riksdag has entrusted the government with conducting unofficial talks with the other Nordic countries on the nuclear-free zone. Ullsten stressed that the Swedish Government cannot undertake anything else in the matter.

LABOR LEADER, PAPERS COMMENT ON NEUTRON BOMB

Foot 'Condemns' Decision

LD090904 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0913 GMT 9 Aug 81

[Text] Labour Party leader Michael Foot today condemned the decision by President Reagan to produce and stockpile the neutron bomb. He said in a statement: "The Labour Party is deeply hostile to the development of the neutron bomb, and it does appear that President Reagan has decided to proceed with its development without any proper consultation with governments in Europe, many of which expressed their opposition when the issue was previously discussed.

"The announcement could hardly be expected to help the disarmament discussions between East and West, to which the United States Government has agreed and for which the Labour Party, along with many others in Western Europe, have been urgently pressing.

"One of the most dangerous and nauseating features of the neutron bomb is that it lowers the nuclear threshold, and could lead us further towards the maniacal idea of a form of so-called limited nuclear warfare."

TELEGRAPH Lauds U.S. Move

PM101419 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 10 Aug 81 p 10

[Editorial: "Reagan's Nettle"]

[Text] President Reagan has acted with characteristic courage and leadership in ordering the construction and stockpiling in America of neutron anti-personnel warheads for battlefield weapons. There is, of course, no question of the weapon being deployed with American forces in Europe without the consent of the governments concerned. All the same, Mr Reagan has shown that he considers the advantage of the neutron option to NATO and also perhaps to America in other possible conflict areas, worth the intensified renewal of the furore that raged until Mr Carter backed down on this subject in April 1978. Six months later Mr Carter sanctioned the production of non-warhead components of the weapon.

Since the Russia's continued military expansion, highlighted by Afghanistan and the accelerated deployment of SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe, has emphasized the need for the widest possible range of counter-measures. At the same time however, Russia, encouraged by the unprecedented success of her anti-neutron campaign, has unleashed an even more ambitious propaganda "blitz" backed by military intimidation, for unilateral European nuclear disarmament. In the same way as she stopped the neutron deployment she counts on thwarting NATO's plans to deploy cruise and Pershing missiles in response to the SS-20s. The effect on European public opinion, and through it on governments, has given her much encouragement and shows no signs of flagging. Is this, the timorous will ask, the time for Mr Reagan to re-open the neutron wound?

Yet the military advantages of the neutron weapon are so compelling, as are indeed the political ones by any rational judgment, that Mr Reagan's decision to produce it must be applauded. It is deplorable that the Russian description of the weapon is one that "kills people and spares property" has become so unthinkingly accepted in the West. The "people" it is intended to kill are the crews of invading tank hordes, while the property it would spare is West German houses and factories. Its radiation is also short-lived. It is grotesque that Russia should condemn the weapon on moral grounds when its power is about one-hundredth of that of her battlefield weapons and one-thousandth that of each SS-20 warhead.

Europeans must decide whether they want to defend themselves and be defended, or whether they want to be drawn into the orbit of a decaying Soviet economic and political system and go through what Poland is going through. Mr Reagan has shown his faith in them to realise that effective deterrence is the only safe, sane and honourable path.

MORNING STAR Urges Reaction

PM101420 London MORNING STAR in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Nuclear War Is Not Winnable"]

[Text] When President Carter wanted to introduce the neutron bomb, that most cynical of nuclear weapons, the collective horror of ordinary people forced him to retreat. But President Reagan has unilaterally announced that the world will now be taken several steps closer to final annihilation. At a sickening meeting on the thirty-sixth anniversary of the destruction of Hiroshima he decided to order full-scale production and stockpiling of neutron warheads.

It is not enough to condemn this weapon and the decision to produce it; mass action to defeat Reagan's decision is now vital for survival. The neutron bomb is part of a madman's scheme for a nuclear war in which Europe will be deliberately sacrificed. The U.S. has decided that a nuclear war is not out of the question, no longer unthinkable. It plans an aggressive, but what it calls "limited" war. This will take place on European soil against the Soviet Union. The neutron bomb and cruise missile are to make up its nuclear armoury. They are the end product of research to produce "acceptable," and so useable, nuclear weapons. But the people of Europe must unite to defeat both weapons, not just for their own survival, but for the world's. For, a limited nuclear war is not possible--only escalation to full-scale nuclear obliteration. And that remains unthinkable. Nuclear bombs, shells and missiles can never be made acceptable. But with supreme arrogance the U.S. has announced such a decision is its own affair. The key to the destruction of the world is to be its prerogative.

The New York TIMES has reported the President no longer feels constrained by European political concerns. Yet the neutron bomb is intended for use in Europe. It has been designed for use in Europe. It is not a defensive weapon. It is not an anti-tank weapon. It is the weapon of the aggressor. It is a weapon for bludgeoning the way forward of an advancing invading force, slaughtering the population, but leaving bridges, towns and industries intact. It is the weapon of an aggressor that has decided to strike first in a nuclear war on someone else's soil. The cruise missile is a first-strike nuclear weapon. And presidential directive 59 was the U.S. admission that it is prepared to strike with nuclear weapons first.

So, it is nothing less than a bare-faced lie for the U.S. to claim this vile weapon will be stored on U.S. soil and is its business alone. And it has shown complete contempt for the international community with talk of its concern for the SALT arms limitation talks while it has schemed this announcement. While rejecting the Soviet call for a mutual renunciation of neutron bombs, it has either bullied or connived with its European allies for the introduction of these bombs into Europe. The forces of peace must have no illusions. Western European governments--and certainly Mrs Thatcher's--will introduce neutron bombs on to European soil, that is, if they can get away with it. Like that time they must be stopped in their machinations by the power of mass public horror. The first chance will be the next campaign for nuclear disarmament national demonstration in London on October 24.

PAPANDREOU ATTACKS GOVERNMENT IN RHODES SPEECH

NC092130 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Aug 81 p 2

[Text of PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou's speech at Rhodes on 8 August—passages rendered in all capitals indicate boldface as published]

[Text] People of the Dodecanese, tonight's majestic, unequaled gathering on your border island, the great crowds and the great emotion constitute a catalytic confirmation of PASOK's sweeping course to the government of the people, to power. Maritsa River, Komotini, Xanthi, Sparti, Rhodes constitute milestones in the indestructible PASOK current of power which increases day by day and guarantees the crushing defeat of the right in the approaching elections.

Our people feel that the coming elections constitute their decisive, determinative appointment with history, because they will definitively end the right's autocracy, because they will bury in history's filing cabinet the policy of dependence and Hellenism's shrinking, the policy of one-sided austerity, austerity for the many and luxury for the few, autocracy, undermining of popular sovereignty, because they will open the road--with PASOK in power and the people in authority—for the Greek people's national social and cultural liberation.

Of course, the right knows that it will suffer a catalytic and total defeat in the coming elections, as it knows that there is no longer the deus ex machina—the usual lifebouys that in the last 30 years saved it, violence, falsefication coups—they all belong to its sinful past. The people--in a brotherly relationship with the country's armed forces—are advancing with knowledge, self-conviction, calm determination to the confrontation with the forces of conservatism and obsecurism, to confrontation and victory so that the foundations of a democratic course toward change can be laid.

Naturally, the New Democracy leadership has been seized by panic, a panic that leads it to morally and politically indescribable tactics that are dangerous for the country's economy. First of all, there is a systematic effort to distorty and falsify PASOK's policy statements. The prime minister himself has unilaterally and at his own initiative upset democratic dialogue within the framework of a mild atmoshpere. The usual reply to PASOK's policy statement is invective and slander. Second, there is unrestrained lying. For the government, the only guarantor of the nation, peace and democracy is the right. What right? The right of the royal coup in July 1965, the coup on 21 April 1967, of Attila in the summer of 1974, of the shrinking of the nation's sovereign rights in the Aegean?

THE MATCH BETWEEN NEW DEMOCRACY AND THE LOYALIST-JUNTA FOLLOWERS

Until recently, New Democracy had been claiming that it had stopped being the continuation of the sinful ERE [National Radical Union], that it had been Europeanized, that it had become the party of radical liberalism. No more. The match between New Democracy and the royalist-junta National Party is almost a reality. With New Democracy's slide to the "right", with its return to its old and sinful self, the nature of the elections of 1981--which will be a milestone in the contemporary political history of our country--the people are claiming power from the right, claiming it from the political expression of the local and foreign economic oligarchy, from the forces of conservatism and obscurantism. The people are claiming power through their militant activation in all parts of Greece, claiming it with the sober certainty of their crushing victory, the victory of the forces of change.

Naturally, New Democracy's expansion toward the royalist-junta right which is taking place following the resounding failure of expansion toward the center, has already led New Democracy to disintegration and defeatism. With an opportunistic political identity, without visible leadership, with the knowledge that the end of its autocracy is approaching, the right is being led to its final and determinative Waterloo.

PASOK replies to New Democracy's alarmism with its program that was recently published in summary form in the declaration of the PASOK government policy. For the first time in our country's political history, a party is offering the framework of its governmental policy months before the elections and at the same time inviting the people into a dialogue for the improvement of the party's government policy. PASOK guarantees not only democratic normality but also social and political pluralism. It also guarantees a foreign and defense policy that will consolidate the country's national independence and territorial integrity, a foreign and defense policy that makes it clear to everybody that although Greece does not claim an inch of land that does not belong to it, it does not intend to concede even 1 inch of land that belongs to it. Only such a policy guarantees peace in the Aegean, a policy that is diametrically opposed to the policy of concessions, retreats and nationally detrimental compromises--New Democracy's policy--a policy that emboldens Turkey and creates the atmosphere that aids a clash.

WE SHALL FIND EMPTY SAFES

Only a few weeks remain to the elections, to New Democracy's crushing defeat, to the evident and historical victory of the forces of change. Meanwhile, in the economic sector the policy of the scorched land, the policy of unprogrammed, conflicting, self-defeating measures, the opportunistic and irresponsible policy of payments, through which the government vainly hopes to avoid the inevitable, continues and will be intensified. The appointment of the national defense minister to the deputy prime ministership has made official the policy of the scorched land or as the people call it the policy of empty safes, because Averof's 12 commandments recall the sales of shops that are preparing to close down--despite his advice for "orderliness." All the people and the productive classes know that the antipopular and at the same time irresponsible New Democracy policy has led the country's economy into a deadlock. Since 1979, inflation has been galloping at more than double the rate of the EEC countries' average.

The gap in the balance of payments is shaping up to $2.5 billions for 1981 while reserves are shrinking. This year the deficit of the public sector will approach 300 billion drachmas--an unprecedented level for our country. Meanwhile, there is complete stagnation in productive investments--public and private, while, for the first time, unemployment is becoming painfully perceptible--especially among young people and women. About 3,000 businesses (according to LA MONDE) are on the threshold of bankruptcy, while the true income of the workers and small businessmen is shrinking by the day.

The confrontation of this dangerous economic crisis requires a responsible government and a plan for immediate and short-term measures, measures which will simultaneously aim at the gradual reduction of inflation to the European level and the economy's rebound within the framework of a foreign exchange policy that in the first stage will contain and in the short-term will reduce the deficit in the balance of current exchanges. Naturally, the immediate measures include the effective protection of workers' true incomes from inflation and the taxation of imaginary incomes. PASOK has formulated such a full and complete plan of immediate measures for the confontation of the deadlock into which New Democracy's antipopular and fickle economic policy has led us. Of course, this plan falls within the PASOK development program as it has been summarily presented in the declaration of its government policy.

PASOK is not only the agent for radical change. At the same time it is the only guarantee for a way out of the profound crisis plaguing the country. For this reason, the expulsion of the right from power and the assuming of government responsibility by PASOK are the prerequisite both for overcoming the economic crisis and for laying the foundations of the change.

Tonight I am especially joyful that our gathering is honored by the presence of the leaders of south Europe's socialist parties. This is our fourth meeting in 1 year: Corfu, Lisbon, Paris, Rhodes. Our meeting in Rhodes has the distinction of taking place after the recent triumphant victory of Mitterrand and the French Socialist Party and before the expected catalytic PASOK victory in the coming elections. It is our common assessment that these two catalytic events are leading to a radical change in the European stage. The socialist forces in southern Europe--as we had foreseen in the past--are destined to lay the foundations of a new European course, a genuinely democratic and socialist course, a course that finally will lead to the weakening and dissolution of both military blocs and to the consolidation of peace on the European Continent.

Close friendly relations among brotherly socialist parties in southern Europe and the coordinated pursuit of common goals give a special dynamic character to our cooperation that decisively affects the formation of political reality in Europe, a reality that is characterized by the wind of change which is blowing over the Mediterranean European countries with the Socialist change in France as the focal point.

We are proud that, with only 7 years of life, PASOK has been acknowledged in the European and Mediterranean political area, and its acknowledgement and acceptance as an agent of change with a range that surpasses our country's borders has been general. PASOK's role in the Mediterranean, Europe and the Balkans, the role of the catalyst of peace and disarmament, is shaping the day. In the broader European and Mediterranean areas PASOK is truly the movement of national independence, peace, democracy and socialism.

EUROPE IS UNITARY

We shall formulate a new orientation for our country's European and Mediterranean policy within the framework of Greek independent foreign policy on the basis of the following principles: 1) Europe is unitary. It is not composed solely by the EEC countries but by all those countries which do not participate in the EEC (for instance, Austria, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway, Spain, Portugal, and so forth) and by those of Eastern Europe. PASOK's European policy concerns all the European countries. 2) Our European policy cannot aim at the creation of a new superpower. Its goal is a general transformation that will lead to the creation of a confederated Europe, a Europe of the people that will include the Western and the Eastern countries. This is the PASOK orientation--this is our vision--regardless of how distant it may seem at present. 3) Already many European states are taking a position or undertaking initiatives with more or less serious departures from the line of political-military blocs. Within this framework, the serious reactions that are manifesting themselves in Western countries toward plans for the installation of new nuclear weapons on their territories acquire important significance for the discontinuance of the arms race. These reactions are due to the evaluation that with these new weapons, possibilities will increase that Europe will be not only the principal but perhaps the only victim of a possible nuclear war. 4) In the Mediterranean area our policy's goal is the withdrawal of foreign fleets and nuclear weapons and the disengagement of coastal countries from political-military blocs. 5) Our policy for the Balkan area is parallel; withdrawal of all foreign troops and bases as well as of nuclear weapons from the Balkan countries and disengagement from political-military blocs.

The formulation and implementation of a new national strategy require time and effort. The road is not strewn with flowers, but it is possible. Persistence, prudence, maneuvers, international support without dependence are required and, above all, the broadest possible consent to foreign policy and national consensus on defense policy.

The unidimensional and unilateral policy of dependence which the right has followed and the tactics of constant concessions, under pressure from the "allies" and Turkey's aggressive claims, have led the government to the acceptance of settlements and adjustments—especially in the Aegean airspace, that have resulted in the downgrading of our defense capability against the Turkish threat.

Among other things, I refer to unilateral concessions--"gestures" like the restructuring of our air corridors in the Aegean, the abolition of Greek firing ranges, the limitation of Limnos' terminal area to facilitate Turkish (civil and military) aviation. I also refer to the Rogers agreement (agreement for the country's return to the NATO military wing) within the framework of which with the establishment of the Larisa headquarters, the boundaries of the Greek Air Force's operational responsibility to the east have been put under question and negotiation. The government's de facto adjustment to Turkey's demand, either not to submit plans for the flights of its military aircraft when entering the Athens Flight Information Region or, if submitted, to be immediately accepted by the Greek authorities without question or discussion, is especially revealing about the way in which it deals with Turkish claims and "allied" pressures. Finally, I refer to the government's inexplicable and unacceptable stance not to suspend its negotiations with Ankara even when Turkish planes violate en masse the national airspace--to thus stress that they do not accept the 10-mile limit that has been established since 1931.

DISSOLUTION OF THE TWO BLOCS

In addition to the issue of principle—that PASOK'S strategic orientation is the weakening and, at the final stage, the dissolution of the two blocs, NATO and the Warsaw Pact--our country has had a peculiar relationship with the Atlantic alliance. We are the only NATO-member country that is actively threatened by another NATO-member country. The alliance is unable (because it does not want) to guarantee our borders--air, sea, underwater, land--from the Turkish menace. The Turkish Armed Forces are armed and modernized by the "alliance," while both Turkey's claims in the Aegean and its violations are dangerously escalated. It should be stressed that a significant part of the arms that are given to it by the "allies" do not concern Turkey's defense in case of Soviet intervention, but Turkey's attack in the Aegean. How else can we explain that there is the Aegean Army--a force that exceeds 100,000 men and that includes a large number of landing craft?

It is clear that, although the Atlantic alliance considers Greece a significant link in its "defense" system in the eastern Mediterranean, it is promoting a new status in the Aegean. The characteristics of this new status are Greek-Turkish cosovereignty under U.S. overlordship. It is clear that no Greek Government can accept such a development that will lead to the concession of our national sovereign rights in the Aegean--a concession that in the long term will include also the islands of the eastern Aegean. Under such circumstances it is difficult for one to understand how a Greek Government participates in an alliance--actually in its military wing--when this "alliance" not only does not guarantee our country's borders but, on the contrary, undermines them.

Usually government circles reply that if Greece withdraws from NATO then the "allies" will fully and exclusively arm Turkey so that the balance in the Aegean will tilt decisively against Greece. This--in plain Greek--means blackmail. They tell us, either you accept cosovereignty (or partition) in the Aegean by remaining in NATO or if you withdraw, cosovereignty and other additional losses in the Aegean area will be imposed on you.

For Greeks, for a Greek Government, the dilemma is not acceptable, because in no case is it possible for a country--this is especially true for our country and its people--to cede inalienable sovereign rights under the threat that it will compelled to do so one way or another "through violence."

However, one way or another, the threat is without content, because in the current dangerous situation--on a worldwide scale and especially in the eastern Mediterranean--the "allies" will not risk a clash in the Aegean that will have catalytic consequences not only for peace in the area but for world peace.

For this reason, it is of huge significance that a Greek Government be found that not only will make it clear but also credible to the Atlantic alliance that never and under no pressure will it surrender even an inch of Greek soil.

Our positions on our country's participation in NATO, the nuclear warheads that are stored in Greece and the U.S. bases in our country, have been expressed with crystal clarity in the declaration, and I see no reason to tire you by repeating them. I would like to stress only this: "With regard to the measures PASOK will take to implement its national defense and foreign policy, repercussions on the armed forces' fighting ability will be taken into consideration. In no case and with no step will PASOK allow the downgrading of the readiness of the country's armed forces to defend us from foreign designs.

"THE CYPRUS DOSSIER" WILL OPEN

For the Greek nation, Cyprus is a primary issue. At the same time, it is a critical international issue because of the continuing military occupation of a large segment of an independent, nonaligned UN member state. However, as a guarantor power, Greece has a legal right and duty to actively support the Cypriot people's struggle for the withdrawal of the foreign troops and bases, the return of the refugees to their homes and the formulation of a constitution that while protecting the unity of the Cyprus Republic will grant equal rights and the same obligations to all its citizens--both Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots.

The constantly repeated reference by the New Democracy governments to the principle that "Cyprus decides and Greece supports" constitutes an unacceptable alibi by the right for the essential desertion of Cyprus' sacred cause. The PASOK government will undertake a crusade to familiarize international public opinion with the issue and internationally activate all the forces that are in a position to contribute to the promotion of a just solution of the Cyprus problem.

The intercommunal talks in Cyprus under UN auspices have meaning only concerning the formulation of the new constitution of the Cyprus Republic, and they can produce results only after the withdrawal of the foreign troops from the Megalonisos [Cyprus]. Talks held under the current circumstances will not lead to anything but the stagnation of the Cyprus problem and the final recognition of the de facto partition of Cyprus, because the interlocutors are on the one side of the Cyprus Government while on the other side there is Ankara (and not the Turkish Cypriot community), whose principal negotiating weapon is the occupation forces.

The PASOK government will not accept any solution that constitutes a recognition of the faits accomplis, and it will support with all its forces Cyprus Hellenism's struggle for national survival. At the same time, it will not hesitate to open the Cyprus dossier so that at last Hellenism and the Cyprus people can learn who are the people responsible for the Cyprus tragedy.

It is now clear that the great, recent and unprecedented cases of arson were principally politically motivated. It is difficult for one not to conclude that both the perpetrators and the instigators of these heinous crimes against the Greek people and the fatherland come from the royalist-junta right. Of course, their target is the democratic institutions and the country's political leadership.

But, as I have already stressed, democracy in Greece is indestructible. It is guarded by the people and the country's armed forces, which are dedicated to their supreme duty--the protection of our national independence and of our fatherland's territorial integrity.

CULTIVATION OF ALARMISM

I am profoundly sorry that the government has once again proved that it is completely unable to strike the fully organized terrorist activities against the country within the framework of an all-round strategy with effective coordination among the state services. However, the New Democracy government is equally to blame for other things. Not only has it allowed but it has also contributed to alarmism, which of course serves the circles of anomaly.

However--what is most significant--is that in its effort to save itself from its now certain floundering, it is proceeding into a political alliance with the extreme right. The prime minister's duty is to immediately suspend negotiations for unification--so that the pernicious elements which offer political cover to the agents of anomaly and violent actions against the country's tranquillity and public order can be held in national isolation. This is the duty of New Democracy's chairman--his duty to the people and the democratic institutions.

Currently, there is only one way out for the country and democracy. Resignation of the government, immediate dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies and recourse to a new popular verdict so that at last a government can come into existence capable of dealing with both the economic crisis and those undermining the economy, so that at last a government can come into existence that will solidly lay the foundations for the change which currently, more than ever, constitutes a prerequisite for the nation's survival.

People of Rhodes, people of the Dodecanese, we invite, PASOK invites, the underprivileged Greeks, the working people of our country, the workers, the farmers, the salaried people and the professionals, small businessmen, women, proud youth and honored senior members of society, we invite them within the framework of national populist unity to rally under the PASOK banner and wage the victorious battle in the approaching electoral confrontation. The people will win, change will win so that at last Greece may belong to the Greeks.

Government Spokesman Rebuttal

[Passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] Commenting on PASOK Chairman Papandreou's speech at Rhodes, the government spokesman stated the following:

"The text of Papandreou's speech at Rhodes has caused the people general surprise and indignation. He has dared accused New Democracy of violating the mild political atmosphere while it is known to all that with his speeches Papandreou has exceeded all limits of sharpness and has even resorted to personal invective. Even the text of his speech at Rhodes is full of unacceptable characterizations which lower the level of democratic political dialogue.

"Papandreou also dares accuse the government of falsifying his policy statements, but which of his policy statements? The PASOK chairman has a habit of changing policies according to the season and the audience he is addressing. He himself changes, transforms and falsifies his statements. The government will cite his texts at [various] times, which, unless he renounces them, we are entitled to cite.

"In any case let Papandreou forget circumventions and reply clearly to the following:

"Some time ago the prime minister asked Mr Papandreou certain questions about his foreign policy and has repeatedly asked him to clearly define his party's positions. Unfortunately, the prime minister's questions remain unanswered, despite the fact that they are connected with our national issues, and thus PASOK avoids briefing the Greek people.

"We think that, in addition to the Greek people, several of the representatives of Western socialist parties two are currently in Greece would like to be briefed on PASOK's foreign policy. As is well known, in the past, Papandreou has described these Western socialists as 'servants of U.S. imperialism and international monopolistic capital, because the socialists in question happen to follow the same policy as the New Democracy governments on basic international issues (EEC, NATO and so forth).

"Today we shall repeat the foreign policy questions to afford Papandreou one more opportunity to at last make clear his positions. Since, however, the PASOK chairman expounds in his policies vague positions--that can be considered dangerous--we are compelled to ask him to answer certain important questions on the economic policy field as well, because the things he has stated at times have created confusion and apprehension in public opinion.

QUESTIONS ON FOREIGN POLICY

"Papandreou denounces the government for the dialogue it is conducting with Turkey to achieve a peaceful settlement of existing differences without national concessions and within the framework of the common defense alliance.

"The question is: First, with what specific policy does Papandreou intend to replace the dialogue? Perhaps with the policy of 'sink the Hora' [allusion to a slogan used by Papandreou when the Turkish seismographic vessel Hora was conducting exploration in the Aegean] a policy he announced from Alexandroupolis before he had been briefed by the government at the time? A policy he subsequently tried to cover up with allegedly national reasons, letting it be understood that it was known to the then prime minister although it has been fully proven that it was not?

"Second, what stance will he maintain toward the EEC? Will he remain, will he withdraw, will he seek a plebiscite, will he continue to violate Greece's obligations as a member, or will he withdraw, seeking the 'special relationship' of a third country with certain worse conditions than equal members?

"Third, what is his stance on European missile defense?

"Papandreou has opposed the installation of U.S. defensive missiles in Europe, while installation has been accepted by West Germany, Britain, Italy and the Netherlands. The policy of Mitterrand--whose electoral victory Papandreou celebrates as if it were his own--on this issue is: abolition of the Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe, installation of U.S. missiles in Europe, and at the same time Mitterrand aims at the maintenance of France's independent nuclear force. Finally, the policy of Social Democrat Chancellor Schmidt is the same, and if the issue was discussed during Papandreou's recent visit to Bonn, then the meeting, which he publicizes so much, must have not been at all pleasant for him.

"Fourth, What will Papandreou's stance toward NATO be? Will he remain in it or will he withdraw? And if he withdraws, on what will he support the strengthening of our country's defense? On exclusively Greek potential for arms? Or on the support of the 'nonaligned countries' which are the exclusive victims of all military clashes that took place after World War II?

"Papandreou constantly brandishes the Turkish danger. Nevertheless, he supports political positions that monopolize to Turkey's benefit all the advantages that our association with the Western alliance provides.

"I regret—the prime minister concluded--that Papandreou's positions—to the extent that they have become known—are dangerous for Greek interests, and I am sure that these positions will be rejected by the Greek people at the next elections."

QUESTIONS ON ECONOMIC POLICY

"First: Papandreou tells the Greek people that in addition to the banks, insurance companies, utilities, large export and import trade 'the large businesses for the exploitation of mineral wealth, large shipbuilding yards, steel, cement and fertilizer industries' the medicinal industry and all units directly connected with defense will be socialized.

"We ask Papandreou what does he mean by the word 'socialization?' because he has nowhere made it clear. Will he buy all the shares of these businesses or will he simply try to acquire control, taking the shares of the great capitalists who control them without buying the shares of the many small shareowners?

"Where will he find the colossal sums that are needed at least for buying out the big capitalists? As a good economist he must have studied the issue in depth and consequently he should know that the total of the current value of these businesses amounts to 390 billion drachmas. Obviously, such huge sums are beyond the limit, not only of the annual budget but of the budgets of 10 years. Consequently, Mr Papandreou what will you do? Why don't you honestly say to the Greek people that you intend to confiscate these businesses?

"However, let us pass over this colossal problem for the time being and let us suppose that 'socialization' has been effected. The question is: Who will manage these businesses and what incentive will there be for increasing their production? The only thing you have said to the Greek people is that workers and local self-government will participate in the management of the businesses. This, however, does not constitute a solution but rather a complication. Why don't you say to the Greek poeple, Mr Papandreou, that the socialization of industrial businesses most probably will lead to their disappearance? A disappearance that will unemploy at least 150,000 workers currently employed in the country's hundred largest industrial businesses, of course provided Papandreou limits [socialization] to them. In the best of cases, socialized businesses will survive, but it is certain that they will create deficits of hundreds of billions of drachmas which immediately will lead to galloping inflation. At least this is what you yourself tell us when you criticize us for the deficits in public businesses.

"Second: The PASOK 'program' speaks of 'independent and decentralized development' and in other places it has accused us of not succeeding in recent years in achieving an increase in the gross national product that exceeds 5 percent. But it does not explain how it would achieve these ambitious goals? How will it increase Greek production at such rates? And since PASOK does not tell us, we shall say, because it is obvious. Such rates of production increases cannot be achieved on the basis of the Greek market alone. They can be achieved only through mass exports, and exports presuppose high competitiveness and, consequently, investments. Papandreou is asked: Does he want investments or not? If he wants them, who will invest? Will it be the socialized businesses which will be in debt because of the colossal sums needed for buying them up? Or will it be the state budget which certainly will be in a tragic deadlock as can be proven by the next question? Of course, you should not expect even 1 drachma of investment from the private sector or from foreign capital which, in any case Mr Papandreou, you consider will result in dependence and subjugation. One solution remains; the foreign socialist capital which, because it has red or green color, in your view, does not lead to dependence but to 'freedom' through hateful political exchanges. The Greek people have only to see how the investments that are taking place in Afghanistan, Angola or Ethiopia 'liberate'...

"Third: The PASOK program speaks of social justice and redistribution of income and promises to workers 'implementation of the automatic adjustment of the emoluments of workers and pensioners at regular periods' and furthermore a permanent committee for the definition of the system.

"First of all, we would like to observe that our incomes policy in practice has been much braver than the sloganeering of your cost of living adjustment. In the 7 years that we have governed, Mr Papandreou, we have given to the Greek worker 7.3 percent more than the cost of living index, and, thus, the Greek worker's participation in the urban income has increased from 47 percent in 1974 to 56 percent in 1980. From the urban sector we have transferred to the rural sector, in the same period, the sum of 251 billion drachmas to strengthen rural income. We have increased fivefold the lowest limits of the social insurance foundation and Greek craftsmen's and tradesmen's (insurance) fund pensions and have increased eightfold those of the farm insurance organization. Therefore, who is telling the truth, Mr Papandreou? We, who have turned into deeds these things or you who very pompously state in your program that 'with the right's policy the redistribution of income is always to the benefit of oligarchy and wealth'?

"Let us come, however, to the PASOK positions. PASOK states that 'at a fast pace it will close the unacceptable difference between the pensions of farmers and the Greek craftsmen's and tradesmen's (insurance) fund and those of the urban sector.'

"The question arises: What do you mean by 'fast pace?' Because, after all, in the framework of your government program you do not undertake any commitment either concerning quantity or period. We suppose you have calculated that 70 billion drachmas are needed for the 600,000 pensioners of the farm insurance organization and the approximately 200,000 pensioners of the Greek craftsmen's and tradesmen's (insurance) fund to receive pensions that will reach the current lowest limits of the social insurance foundation. Where will this money be found and which social group will bear the burden?

"In the chapter on taxation justice and redistribution of income, PASOK promises the reduction of the tax burden of medium income people, cost of living adjustment of the tax scale and exemption of pensions from taxation, naturally up to a reasonable limit, which is, we who do not avoid numbers estimate, a reduction in taxation revenue of about 50 billion drachmas.

"To the above burdens of the budget one should also add the loss of 60 billion drachmas that are calculated to be EEC payments in 1982 for the support of agricultural produce prices, regional development and the loss of 390 billion drachmas needed to buy out businesses (naturally if you do not confiscate these properties). Mr Chairman of PASOK, where will these 570 billions be found to fulfill the above obligations which constitute only part of the promises contained in the 'contract with the people?' Will they be found in the 100 billion drachmas of tax evasion, if there are so many? Where will the remaining 470 billions be found? That is an entire budget. Whom will you tax except the masses of the workers, because we do not believe you will seriously claim that you will draw such a huge sum from the 'economic oligarchy' which meanwhile you will have socialized. There is only one reply to all these things, that if you had the slightest hope of winning the elections you would not sign such a 'contract with the people.'

"The French Socialists, who are distinguished for their seriousness, courageously say that their budget for 1982 will be short 100 billion francs, that is 1 trillion drachmas.

"Fourth: Certainly agriculture is one of the Greek economy's most dynamic sectors which directly concerns almost one third of the country's population. However, in this vital sector, the PASOK program really exceeds itself in vagueness and verbosity."

"The only specific things it mentions, in fact in heavy type, are farmers' pensions, where 'a radical improvement upward will take place that will be adjusted according to the cost of living index. At the same time, a stable and permanent system for complementary insurance will begin with its own resources so that total pension will not be less than the pension of other workers.' 'The farm woman will have her own substantive and independent pension.' This last measure we have already implemented and we wonder why it is included in the PASOK program, since we announced it on 27 June when the PASOK program was still being concocted. Regarding the first part of the statement, what do you mean 'with its own resources'? Do you mean contributions that will be imposed on farmers? If yes, say so in order that they may know.

"The second specific point referring to the agricultural sector is the socialization of monasteries' properties and of feudal estates and the utilization of state arable land and of land belonging to corporate bodies of public law for model research and cultivation centers and group exploitation.

"However, you should know that the state arable land that has not already been distributed to landless peasants does not exceed 10,000 donums and it is being utilized at a very quick pace precisely for model cultivations or for distribution to landless peasants, while arable land owned by monasteries hardly exceeds 10,000 donums. That is, we are speaking in all of 20,000 donums of arable land held by the state and the church, that is 0.5 percent of the country's arable land. Indeed, it seems that the PASOK program diligently chooses those few points in which it is specific.

"We ask Papandreou, at last, what is this thing that will bring about a revolutionary change in agriculture? Will it be 'the cornerstone of the PASOK agricultural policy, the productive, agrarian and agrarian-industrial cooperative,' which 'will unite the farm with the factory and will give impetus to development in the regions?' We believe, Mr Papandreou, that these cooperatives exist. They are the cooperatives which compose our worthy cooperative movement which, specifically in the last 5 years, has invested billions of drachmas in modern vertical agrarian-industrial exploitations, unless you mean something else, and then you should say so for the people to understand.

"However, we have one last question: Where will PASOK dispose of the hundreds of thousands of tons of agricultural produce that we currently sell to the EEC, especially after the entry of Spain and Portugal? Then the 'burial grounds' which currently are operating at EEC expense for a few tens of thousands of tons of peaches, which have remained unsold because of the unprecedented weather conditions in Europe, will be operating all through the year, naturally at PASOK expense, to bury the entire Greek agricultural production."

Rallis Reply

[Text of Prime Minister Rallis' statement dated 9 August in reply to Papandreou's Rhodes speech]

[Text] "As the patricide of the anecdote lamented when he asked the court's leniency because he had become an orphan, so Papandreou yesterday appeared before the public lamenting the upsetting of the mild political atmosphere. "In fact, he went so far as to accuse me of using invective. But I defy him to mention even one of my statements containing abusive characterizations. I held myself and, in my reply, I used the mien that befits me even when--angry at the success of my Cretan tour--he went so far as to personally abuse me in a manner that provoked general indignation. Consequently, he is totally to blame for the violation of the mild atmosphere.

"In his speech he even accused me of cooperating with the 'royalist-junta right,' and a newspaper close to PASOK referred to my 'flirting with the royalist-junta right.'

"I do not allow anyone to give me lessons on democratic behavior because through my policy I have proven that I defend democracy in good, difficult and bad moments.

"However, I ascertain with regret that, in this land, humility has ceased to be considered a virtue but is considered naivete. For this reason, I am compelled to refer to a part of my personal democratic struggles.

"I am compelled to recall that I, who had never declared--like others--that in case of a menace against democracy I would lead 500,000 citizens to Constitution Square [Athens Square] to foil any attempt at a coup, at dawn on 21 April 1967 tried at Marousi [Athens suburb] to set in motion--through the wireless of the gendarmerie's immediate action corps--the third army corps against the coupists. I will also recall that the current deputy prime minister, Evangelos Averof, was present and had participated in my attempt.

"I will also recall that during the dictatorship I was arrested thrice, put in jail and exiled. I was forced to close down my lawyer's office and ask for a pension because, of course, nobody dared to appear as a client in a lawyer's office that was constantly watched by the dictatorship's organs.

"I am compelled to also recall that in order to be allowed someday to travel abroad--I had not encountered help or support by any official or unofficial foreigner--I was forced for an entire year to wage a personal struggle with recourse to the state council in order to succeed in getting a passport, which the dictators were illegally refusing to grant me. Therefore, those people who want to give me lessons on democracy have knocked on the wrong door.

"New Democracy's ideology is well known. We believe in parliamentary democracy, which the Constitution of 1975 has protected, and we reject the socialist constitutions of Marxist philosophy, like the PASOK draft constitution. We also reject every attempt at the illegal and anticonstitutional review of the current constitution.

"However, we are not prepared to describe all the voters, who during the referendum of December 1974 voted for a republic with a king, as 'followers of the dictatorship.' After all, these voters have nothing in common with the dictatorship since, as is well known, monarchy was first abolished by the colonels.

"Undoubtedly these citizens are law abiding, and we seek to bring back to our political faction all of those citizens who deserted us between the elections of 1974 and 1977. I think we have achieved this to a great extent, as it is also certain that we have succeeded in absorbing a large segment of voters from the center."

"It is known to all that all these citizens believe--as we do--in a bourgeois and not a socialist democracy. They also believe--as we do--in the need for cooperation with the parliamentary republics of the West and not in Papandreou's various chimeras. In yesterday's improved version of his foreign policy, he visualizes the cooperation of the Western European democracies with countries of the Eastern bloc. Therefore, in order not to be compelled to take a position between East and West, he has united the East with the West although it is well known that neither the East nor the West accept such a union.

"I will note that Soares who, like the other Western socialists, as opposed to PASOK, supports the EEC, NATO and so forth. In his interview yesterday he silenced PASOK's tightrope walking on foreign policy.

"In yesterday's speech at Rhodes there is another point that should not go unanswered. They accuse us of spreading alarmism, but the people know very well that the PASOK chairman and his staff officers, not we, are spreading alarmism. They are spreading alarmism on national issues and democracy; they are spreading dangerous alarmism on the economy. And even the day before yesterday, they tried to attribute all the fires to political motives, although it is certain that a great number of the fires are due--as is proven every year--to criminal negligence or to accidental events. Right now, large expanses in Portugal and Italy are burning because of similar causes.

"I do not think that I need to specifically stress that the fires about which there is some suspicion of arson are being investigated scrupulously by the responsible state security services and that a magistrate is present at the relevant interrogations.

"Certainly I do not need to specifically stress that we do not distinguish between suspicious persons according to the extremist ideology they follow. As I recently mentioned in the Chamber, for us the various extremist terrorists differ among themselves only with respect to color, while their goals are the same since their common aim is democracy's abolition.

"Finally, I am compelled to recall that in their effort to arm the state with the laws which are necessary for combating terrorism, the New Democracy governments have included in the antiterrorist draft bill a provision allowing for exile--of course through legal guarantees--of people suspected of terrorist activity. This provision was deleted from the draft bill following a strong struggle waged by PASOK in both the Chamber and the columns of its friendly newspapers.

"Experience has shown how right we were. For this reason, we declare that after the elections--which we shall certainly win--in a special draft bill we shall bring back the provision envisaging the exile of people suspected of terrorist activity. This time we shall seek with all our forces the passing of the provision so that the country may not suffer from terrorists of any color."

Papandreou Reply to Rallis

[Text] Papandreou has replied to the prime minister's statement as follows:

"Mr Rallis has forgotten that the junta of Papadhopoulos was sworn in as a government by Konstandinos [King Constantine] who, regardless of his differences with the rough alien dominated junta, protected it and tried to give it international legality. I wonder whether on the altar of rescue of the already dead New Democracy, Rallis is attempting to utilize his capacity as a king's man. However, nothing will help Rallis and New Democracy. They will definitely founder in the coming elections and the new Chamber that will emerge from the elections will not have the opportunity to pass any of their draft bills.

"Finally, I must stress that the people are distressingly impressed by the fact that Rallis avoided referring to my challenge that he submit his resignation to the president of the republic so that an end can be put to the economic disintegration into which the New Democracy government has led us."

CP CONDEMNS TRIAL OF CZECHOSLOVAK DISSIDENT

PM111039 Brussels LE SOIR in French 31 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The Belgian Communist Party [PCB] secretary issued a communique Wednesday expressing his disapproval of the Czechoslovak court trial of Rudolph Battek, a founder member of the Committee for the Defense of Unjustly Persecuted People.

According to the PCB secretary, this constitutes prosecution for a crime of opinion, which violates respect for democracy and human rights. "Indeed it seems difficult to attach great importance to a trifling incident which allegedly occured between Battek and a policeman over a traffic violation. Similarly the sentence passed--7.5 years' imprisonment plus 3 years' internal exile--bears the stamp of moderation [as published]. Such methods are not likely to give a socialist regime the image it ought to have the PCB adds.

NETHERLANDS

AGREEMENT REACHED WITH USSR ON PIPELINE COSTS

NC120908 Paris AFP in English 0713 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Amsterdam, 11 Aug (AFP)--The Dutch AMRC and ABN banks have reached an agreement with a Soviet delegation on most of their share of the loans to the Soviet Union for the financing of the planned Soviet-European pipeline.

The agreement covers more than 3 billion guilders ($1.5 billion), which represents 85 percent of the Netherlands' share.

The agreement came as Moscow was reportedly speeding up its efforts to clinch the deal because of Washington's opposition.

A spokesman for ABN (Algemene Bank Nederland) said the eight-year load will be guaranteed by the Dutch state and will be furnished by a group of banks under the direction of ABN and AMRO, with an interest rate of 7.8 percent.

He added that details will be worked out in later talks.

The accord was reached after two days of talks between banks and the Soviet delegation headed by Viktor Ivanov, deputy minister of foreign trade. The Netherlands, with confirmed gas reserves of 1.53 billion cubic meters, is envisioning the import of 5 billion cubic meters a year for 20 years, beginning in 1985.

The 5,000 kms (3,000 miles) long pipeline would transport 40 billion cubic meters of Siberian gas a year from western Siberia to Western Europe

Revenue would be used to reimburse Western loans provided for the construction of the pipeline.

MARCHERS PROTEST NEUTRON BOMB, POLICIES

NC111035 Paris AFP in English 1025 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] The Hague, 11 Aug (AFP)--About 50 demonstrators today barred the entrance to the United States Embassy here in protest against a U.S. decision to produce neutron bombs.

The demonstrators, participants in an international march for demilitarization, held several banners, one of them reading: "The neutron bomb--a simple arm for the extermination of people."

Police were watching the demonstrators, but did not intervene.

The protest followed a smaller march yesterday in front of the embassy in which 30 youths expressed opposition to U.S. President Ronald Reagan's decision, announced on Saturday.

Other demonstrators assembled in front of the French, West German, Italian, Soviet and Spanish embassies to protest military policies in those countries.

The Netherlands Government has said the decision to produce the bomb was an internal U.S. matter.

But former Defense Minister Max van der Stoel said he regretted the decision, and noted that the Netherlands Parliament last February opposed deployment of the weapons on Dutch territory.

CDA, PVDA, D'66 AGREE TO FORM GOVERNMENT

PM120739 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 5 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague, 5 August--The parliamentary groups of the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and Democrats '66 (D'66) yesterday decided to participate in the formation of a new cabinet comprising the three parties despite their differing interpretations of the final recommendations made by negotiation leaders Lubbers, De Koning and Van Thijn.

The CDA parliamentary group is sticking to its demand that there must be further negotiations on the paragraph covering socioeconomic policy. The PVDA group attached no conditions to its acceptance of the final recommendations, but gave its own interpretation of the most important passages in the paragraph covering nuclear arms.

D'66 refused to enter the next phase of the cabinet formation negotiations on the basis of the final recommendations. [Party leader] Terlouw said he did not agree with the negotiation leaders' final conclusions and for this reason adhered to the draft of 28 July. The negotiation leaders had agreed to this draft, with the exception of the defense paragraph.

Yesterday the CDA group left undecided whether the formation talks would have to be held on the basis of the final recommendations.

Yesterday the PVDA group gave its full support to the final recommendations, although around 10 group members did advocate some conditions. However, Den Uyl told the group that it would have to be "yes" or "no." Now that the negotiation leaders' work is finished there is no other alternative, because there is no one to whom to address reservations, he said. Den Uyl also said those unable to agree to the final recommendations must have the courage not to enter the next phase of the cabinet formation process.

On the subject of nuclear arms, the PVDA group included a number of more detailed "statements" in a declaration to be sent to all the parties involved. According to the PVDA, the final recommendations make no connection between the deployment of the cruise missiles and the reduction of the number of nuclear units in the Netherlands. According to Den Uyl, such a connection is made.

According to the PVDA, the text of the final recommendations also states that the Netherlands' allies will be informed this fall why it has not made a positive decision yet on the deployment of cruise missiles. A decision will have to be made in the term of the next cabinet, and the PVDA made the third point that a cabinet containing the PVDA will never be able to vote for deployment of the cruise missiles. According to party chairman Van Den Berg, the PVDA also wants its ministerial candidates to commit themselves in advance to this position.

Cabinet Defense Split

PM101218 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 6 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpts] The Hague--Kremers (Christian Democratic Appeal) [CDA] and Van Thijn (Labor Party) [PVDA] intend to form a center-left cabinet comprising the CDA, PVDA and Democrats '66 [D'66] in a matter of weeks. However, they have not yet formed any opinion about the way they will resolve the problems which have exacerbated in the last few days.

Especially on the subject of the defense paragraph and the social and economic policies formulated by Lubbers, De Koning and Van Thijn there remain considerable differences of opinion between the CDA and the PVDA. This was made abundantly clear in an exchange of letters between CDA Chairman Van Agt and his PVDA opposite number Den Uyl yesterday.

Yesterday Kremers said he considered that the time in which it would be possible to form a cabinet was a "question of weeks, not of months." But he added that despite his "born optimism" he did not want to make any predictions about the success of the formation attempt. Kremers, the Limburg provincial governor who assumed his first formateur mission yesterday, and Van Thijn are basing their approach on the final recommendations put forward by the three informateurs.

Together with Van Thijn, Kremers yesterday drew up a timetable according to which the distribution of the parliamentary under secretaryships (seven for the CDA, seven for the PVDA and three for D'66) will be discussed today. There will also be negotiations on ministerial candidates, who will be received by the formateurs on Friday and on Saturday morning. In addition on Tuesday the formateurs will receive the advice they have asked for from employers' and workers' organizations and from Netherlands Bank President Zijlstra and Central Planning Bureau Director Van Den Beld.

The Limburg governor totally excluded the possibility that he could himself be a candidate for the premiership of the center-left coalition. Thus he contradicted speculations which have been circulating in The Hague that Van Agt has little inclination to fill the premiership in this coalition and for this reason would like to push his confidant to the fore. Van Agt would then be able to become the queen's commissioner in Limburg, a post to which he seems to aspire. "We are working on a cabinet of the CDA, PVDA and D'66 with the chairman of the CDA parliamentary party as intended prime minister," Kremers said.

Defense Post Doubt

[Excpert] The Hague, 7 Aug--Mr H. Van Mierlo, the Democrats '66 [D'66] candidate for defense minister, is only prepared to accept the post if a number of conditions are met. He is supported in this by the D'66 parliamentary group. He will present his conditions to the formateurs on Monday.

The D'66 candidate defense minister demands first that clarity be reached over the interpretation of the nuclear arms paragraph in the draft goverenment accord. Van Mierlo, together with the D'66 parliamentary group, is apprehensive of the Labor Party's interpretation, which would seem to indicate that a negative attitude would be the only one possible for Labor Party ministers in a decision on the nuclear arms modernization program.

Van Mierlo's second condition is that satisfactory agreement will have to be reached with the foreign minister about the extent to which the defense minister can concern himself with arms control questions.

If both conditions are not met, Van Mierlo will withdraw his candidacy, D'66 circles predict.

OFFICIALS', PRESS VIEWS ON NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

Genscher, Colombo Joint Stand

LD101308 Hamburg DPA in German 1211 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Aug (DPA)--The foreign ministers of the two NATO member states, Italy and the Federal Republic, today discussed the U.S. decision to manufacture the neutron weapon. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had a telephone conversation with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo. During the talk, the two foreign ministers agreed on a joint stand, the Foreign Ministry in Bonn said.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU View

[Pierre Simonitsch dispatch: "Reagan's Tact"]

[Text] Geneva--There is one thing which one cannot hold against the incumbent U.S. President; inconsistency in military policy. Devoid of any capability to fathom the psychology and the problems of allies and adversaries alike, he stubbornly pursues the goal of reclaiming for the United States the hegemony which it has allegedly lost. In doing so, Reagan jettisons the old truism that reserve is the real strength of the powerful.

The decision to start serial production of nuclear weapons with enhanced radiation effects, ("neutron bomb") is intended to scare the Soviets and simultaneously to wipe out a political disgrace. It was indeed moral objections of the West Europeans acclaimed by Soviet propaganda rather than military considerations which prompted President Carter in 1978 to pack the neutron bomb away again.

The conservative politicians and the NATO establishment took this retraction as a painful defeat. The feeling emerged that the Soviet Union had succeeded in foiling a Western arms project via the detour of public opinion in the democratic states--and without any return concession to boot. This frustration largely explains why they are sticking with such persistence to the NATO decision of December 1979 on "counterarming" in the field of nuclear medium-range weapons.

Viewed from a purely military angle, there is no doubt that the neutron bomb is an effective weapon. It can halt a massive tank attack without causing total devastation.

A tactical nuclear weapon of the previous design fired from a distance of 120 kilometers would cause serious destruction in a circle of about 1 kilometer diameter. Large areas would be polluted by radioactivity for quite a while. The pressure and heat waves of the neutron weapon, in contrast, reportedly cause total damage only within a radius of 400 meters. But the radiated neutrons destroy all human life up to a circumference of 1,200 meters. The special type of radiation penetrates armor plate, but is rapidly volatile so that the area under fire can be occupied by one's own army.

Noted politicians who can hardly be counted among the "pacifists" deem this weapon, which kills people but leaves objects intact, a "perversion of thinking." So far, it has been martial law to disarm the adversary but to spare his life. But basically all killing machines are perverted, in particular the mass destruction weapons. Viewed from this angle the neutron bomb is but another turn of the mad arms spiral. Dying by poison gas, napalm, fragmentation bombs or "ordinary" nuclear bombs is not in any way nicer, either.

The invention of the neutron bomb is not as trailblazing as to provide the West with a lasting military advantage. The blueprints of an atomic charge which converts 50 percent of its energy into neutron irradiation have been in the drawers of the Pentagon since the sixties. But the efforts of the military people were aimed at developing "clean" bombs, if possible, which would allow "surgical cuts" in the adversary's territory. They believed that the East bloc's great superiority in combat tanks could be neutralized by means of tactical combat arms, nuclear mines and armor-piercing ammuntion.

The introduction of the radiation weapon by one of the superpowers will have the consequence that the other will follow soon. The French, who are also working on the neutron bomb demonstrate as an example that this is not magic. But, with or without the neutron bomb, all calculations concerning the feasibility of victorious nuclear war are sandtable games by people gone mad. Reagan's decision in compliance with the urging by his Secretary of Defense Weinberger and apparently against the advice of Secretary of State Haig will strengthen the suspicion in Europe that the United States would like to restrict a potential fight with the Soviets to the old continent. The promise that the neutron bombs would be stockpiled in the United States does not in the least dispel this suspicion, because the new weapon has been tailored exclusively to the conditions prevalent in Europe. Where else could the Soviet Union make use of its huge armies of tanks that would have to be fended off?

After a clumsy tug of war, President Carter had taken a loss of prestige when the allies showed a negative reaction to the offer of deployment of neutron bombs. Having such regard is alien to the new team in Washington. Therefore, the next crisis in the Western defense alliance has been programmed already.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Editorial

[Text] The U.S. President has made a historic decision. The United States will place the so-called neutron bomb in serial production. At first the world public reacted with amazement. Then, depending on political shade, ideological trend and ties with Washington, came reactions of irritation, protest and ambigous statements. No government--except the U.S. Government--feels quite at ease. Meanwhile, this development is not so surprising at all. Talleyrand would have said that what is involved is a bit of news rather than an event.

This bit of news is first of all addressed to the Russians. What Reagan is doing is responding to very diversified Soviet challenges: Afghanistan, pressure on Poland, excessive armament and the SS-20. The announcement must also be understood as the technical supplement to the diplomatic concession of the new U.S. Government in the question covering arms control negotiations. Haig and Gromyko will establish unitial contacts in the early fall. The United States is prepared to talk about arms limitations with the Soviets. For this purpose, Reagan needs a psychologically firm position.

The mass production of neutron bombs is thus a political act. It fits into a comprehensive strategy of mutual deterrence. The neutron weapon is part of a defense policy which is based on the balance of terror. The United States is overcoming a disadvantage. Armament should swing to a point of "stability."

The production of shells and missiles loaded with "neutron explosive charges" also has a military-technical, tactical and operational side. What is referred to as simply the neutron bomb is called an "enhanced radiation weapon" by experts. It is being passed off as a "clean" nuclear weapon, "clean" because it releases more neutrons and less radioactive "fallout" than do other nuclear theater weapons.

The duration and intensity of the neutron radiation are less than those of "standard" nuclear weapons. It is wrong to simply contend that the neutron weapon saves equipment, houses and weapons but kills the soldiers. The destructive capacity of the neutron weapon also exceeds the power of imagination of those who are unfamiliar with the subject. It is true that tanks bombarded by neutron weapons can keep functioning mechnaically while their crews are dead. It is also conceivable that neutron polluted terrain can soon be crossed again by one's own troops in counterattack. The weapon offers the advantage of limiting damage for the purpose of one's own military activity. But it is strong enough to destroy enemy troops, above all those of the armored units.

Technically, the neutron weapon is a waste product of the hydrogen bomb. Its production would have been possible even a generation ago. Politically, its "existence" dates back as far as the McNamara era. Kennedy's secretary of defense was seeking a technical substitute for NATO's deficient divisions. The tactical nuclear weapons existing at the time--and kept in readiness even today--were too heavy, unwieldy and too big for his liking. Nearly all of them had ratings of destruction equal to those of the Hiroshima bomb. McNamara deemed their use in Europe in general and in the Federal Republic in particular psychologically impracticable. The neutron weapon was supposed to push the "big" tactical nuclear systems aside because it caused less damage.

But in the end, McNamara made a different decision. He feared that the reduced damage capability might induce politicians and generals to start early with the escalation of the nuclear retaliation potential. McNamara retained the old tactical nuclear theater weapons systems but demanded in return that the conventional armament of NATO be increased.

NATO, however, did not grow any stronger conventionally. In the meantime, 19,000 Soviet tanks along the European central front are faced by a mere 6,000 NATO tanks. A total of 40,000 Russian-made tanks threatens the Western alliance which has no more than 12,000 tanks. The neutron bomb could correct that imbalance somewhat. The central idea of a defense with neutron weapons is this; Soviet tanks may well penetrate quickly and deeply into the Western defense system because this system has gaps everywhere. These pentrations first would have to be blocked by massive neutron fire and the tanks destroyed afterwards. The Soviet fight in three stages, with the successive waves of tanks creating a heavy concentration. These would be the targets of NATO's "neutrons."

But should this take place on German territory? Posing this question means raising the crucial political question. The threat which the neutron bomb represents to the Soviet tank concentrations cannot be argued. The hazard run by the Germans in the event they decide to introduce this weapon as a means of defense is also evident. Granted, the "normal" nuclear weapons are even more destructive, but who wants to hear of this, anyway? So far Reagan has not offered us the neutron bomb. Yet, the start of its production is the beginning of a strategic development which will be hard for us to evade.

SPD Stance

DW111245 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Commentary signed HHGM: "Self-Preservation Urge"]

[Text] The "profound disappointment" of the SPD over the lone decision of U.S. President Reagan to produce the neutron weapon is a different term for rage held back with an effort. The 5-point statement by SPD Deputy Chairman Wischnewski, at any rate, in its clarity goes to the very brink of diplomatic courtesy.

The great government party has every reason to become clearly outspoken; so far it has only very inadequately succeeded in containing the widespread skepticism in this country, despite all U.S. promises, that the U.S. Government does not seriously intend to negotiate with the Soviet Union on arms limitations. Reagan's decision just a few weeks prior to the scheduled opening of the U.S.- Soviet talks in any event is bound to make these doubts flare up again.

The chancellor himself has linked his political destiny with the assurance that no marked deck would be used in this game. It may be that a downfall of the Social-Liberation coalition in Bonn over the quarrel involving armament and disarmament would only suit some of the new bosses in Washington; but there is no guarantee that the North Atlantic pact could be saved by a different government in Bonn if President Reagan continues to act as he does. There may indeed be some unpleasant surprises.

The justification used for the surprise tactics of the Americans shows how underhandedly the neutron-weapon deal at least is being worked. Since the neutron weapons for the time being are supposed to be stationed in the United States, the Europeans did not indeed have to be consulted, technically. Yet, the neutron weapon is primarily intended for the defense against packs of tanks; but to go by the planning games, these packs of tanks would hardly appear in Arizona but, in keeping with all logic, in the northern German lowlands. Even the layman knows where the weapon, once available, has to go as otherwise it would be standing around somewhere in absolute uselessness; to central Europe, to the Federal Republic.

The SPD in its 5-point statement now calls on the Federal Government to ensure that this weapon will not be deployed in Europe. This is tantamount to a call for a sort of subsequently open disobedience toward the leading power. Yet, the Bonn people probably must put up with it out of the urge for self-preservation.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT TO VISIT ITALY IN SEPTEMBER

LD101945 Hamburg DPA in German 1745 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will pay a working visit to the Italian Government on 11 and 12 September. Schmidt has been invited by Premier Giovanni Spadolini. According to the federal press office in Bonn today. the visit is part of the regular contacts between the heads of government of the two countries.

SOVIET NAVAL BUILDUP IN BALTIC SEA REPORTED

LD111032 Hamburg DPA in German 0944 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] Flensburg/Kiel, 11 Aug (DPA)--The Soviet Union is apparently gathering more and more warships in the Baltic region, thus building up the maneuvers fleet--now consisting of 50 units--off the Soviet part of the East Prussian coast. According to the fleet command of the Federal Navy in Gluecksburg, near Flensburg, today, the 17,000-ton helicopter carrier Leningrad which is part of the Soviet Black Sea Fleet, is meanwhile also on a northwesterly course at the entrance to the Dover Straits. It is accompanied by the Kreska class cruiser Admiral Isachenkov (8,000 tons). Also at the ready in the North Sea is a Soviet supply vessel of the Boris Chilikin class.

According to observations by the federal navy, the strong Soviet fleet unit in the Baltic has concluded its "preliminary exercise" north of Pillau. "The major maneuver units are at present at anchor or in port," said a spokesman for the fleet command in Kiel. One of the actions noted was air target practice from onboard an Alligator landing vessel carrying antiaircraft missile tanks.

The Federal German fleet command believes this maneuver was a preliminary exercise prior to the main exercises soon to begin. The fleet unit, consisting largely of landing vessels from the regular Soviet Baltic fleet, has been considerably strengthened during the past 2 weeks by units of the North Sea and Black Sea Fleets. Also in the Baltic, for the first time, is the 37,000-ton aircraft carrier Kiev, followed by the Soviet fleet's biggest landing vessel, the 11,000-ton Ivan Rogov.

The Kiev and several of the landing vessels had earlier taken part in landing exercises with Syrian units in the Mediterranean. The Ivan Rogov is normally stationed in the Indian Ocean and can transport up to 700 soldiers, 40 tanks and artillery.

GENSCHER ASKS USSR TO HELP EASE TENSION

DW101447 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1100 GMT 8 Aug 81

["Excerpts" from reporter J. Denso interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] You are certainly going to have a hot fall and not just a hot summer. What will be at the center of things is the stationing of American medium-range missiles in Europe. Is this a subject that will divide the government?

[Answer] No, because the decision in favor of the dual decision is borne jointly by the Federal Government and the opposition.

I, indeed, hold the view that the fall of 1981 will be an extremely important period for foreign policy. First, during the meeting of the UN General Assembly--in which I, too, will participate--there will be a meeting of the U.S. secretary of state with the Soviet foreign minister. It is the objective of the West that agreement is reached at this meeting on the opening of negotiations regarding medium-range missiles.

Second, the CSCE followup meeting in Madrid is to be continued in the fall of 1981. One of the most important goals of this conference actually is the convening of a disarmament conference for Europe.

Third, also during the session of the UN General Assembly, there will be meetings of the EC foreign ministers with the Soviet foreign minister. One important point of discussion will certainly be the EC initiative aimed at achieving a political solution to the Afghanistan issue.

Finally, in October 1981, a summit conference of 22 states will be held in Mexico, which will deal with North-South issues. This, in our view, is an important event because national and government leaders and foreign ministers from the states of the North and the South will get together with a view to bringing about a climate for progress in the North-South discussion through a constructive dialogue. We consider this to be an important contribution to the securing of world peace because the complex problems that exist between North and South are social ones with worldwide dimensions. They are so explosive that they can only be compared with the social issues that arose in the industrialized states of the North at the end of the last century. Unfortunately, the Soviet Union so far has not decided to participate in this significant conference.

I believe that the four subject mentioned here represent a test for the West as well as the East, a test of the will to contribute to world stabilization and to an improvement in East-West relations. It is quite evident that the West is taking a constructive stand on these four subjects. It is now up to the Soviet Union to contribute to stabilizing the East-West relationship. And nobody is more interested in this than our people because they would be the ones to suffer most from a relapse into cold war. I believe that the time simply has now come for the Soviet Union to make it clear whether it wants to contribute to reducing tension between West and East through visible, sensible and realistic steps. It is in a position to do so. It can do so by facilitating negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States on medium-range missiles through putting an end to its advance arming of medium-range missiles so as not to burden the negotiations through any additionally deployed missiles.

It can make a constructive contribution by accepting the EC proposal to introduce a political solution for Afghanistan, instead of continuing the military one; it can make a contribution by deciding to participate in the summit conference in Mexico and by no longer evading this great task of world peace aimed at overcoming social tensions between North and South; and it can make its contribution by agreeing to what the peoples of Europe so urgently desire, namely, a disarmament conference.

There actually is a joint position of the parties of the Bundestag with regard to the subjects I just mentioned. I do not want to conceal that I am concerned that words like "Moscow faction" or "lacking peace capability" are being exchanged between the CDU and the SPD. This could obstruct joint action rather than facilitate it. I want to appeal to the CDU and the SPD to remove from the political discussion such terms and instead to cooperate so as to contribute, with regard to these subjects through cooperation between the parties of the Bundestag, to enable our country--by acting on a broad political basis--to make its contribution to stabilization and to securing peace in Europe.

CROATIAN GROUP CLAIMS CREDIT FOR STUTTGART ATTACK

LD101452 Hamburg DPA in German 1421 GMT 10 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Stuttgart, 10 Aug (DPA)--A "Croatian Revolutionary Cell, Bruno Busic Department" has claimed responsibility for the attack on the R.S. Schulz publishing house in Percha on Lake Starnberg. An anonymous caller told the DPA office in Stuttgart today that the "revolutionary cell," which claims to have its headquarters in Paris, had detonated on Sunday 1 kg of dynamite, brand name "Mark 2." The explosive was of Swiss origin.

The caller said further that if the Tito memoirs are published by Schulz, then a further 2 kg of explosives would be detonated next week outside the publisher's home. The caller denied suggestions that the explosives were stolen from the Bundeswehr.

According to the anonymous caller, the "Croatian Revolutionary Cell" is an "organization working internationally" which is said to publish, among others, an illegal paper entitled HRVATSKA REVOLUTIA [CROATIAN REVOLUTION]. The movement is fighting the "unjust regime" in Yugoslavia. The caller emphatically denied any connection with the recent trouble in Kosovo.

According to the Stuttgart crininal investigation department, no organization of that name is known.

DER SPIEGEL ON POSSIBLE SCHMIDT-HONECKER TALKS

DW112005 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 10 Aug 81 pp 19-21

[Article: "Bait From the Crimea"]

[Text] A GDR representative disturbed the vacational quiet in the chancellor's office in Bonn. On Wednesday last week, an East German diplomat turned up there suprisingly and complained about the West German press. The envoy said his government was "not happy about speculations" published following the summer meeting of Soviet state and party boss Leonid Brezhnev and State Council Chairman Erich Honecker.

The emissary gave the Bonn people an instruction for reading the communique that the two top communists issued following their Crimea talks early last week. Brezhnev and Honecker stressed in it "that in the present complicated situation, a broad international exchange and active political contacts between the statesmen of countries with different social systems are particularly valuable and necessary."

The GDR diplomat said: "This is an interesting signal," but reports which precipitately speculated on a German-German summit in the near future could only be harmful. The Bonn people think that the SED chief's odd warning shows how much Honecker still fears that the Polish unrest will extend to his citizens. East Berlin is concerned that, like with Willy Brandt's visit to Erfurt in 1970, a spectacular visit of the chancellor would provoke the East Germans to spontaneous demonstrations-- an imagination bound to give the SED leadership nightmares in the present unstable situation.

Twice in the last few months, Honecker gave Klaus Boelling, Bonn's permanent representative in East Berlin, to understand that he absolutely wants Schmidt to visit the GDR, but his visit must be inconspicuous and modest. Under no circumstances must the program be as grand style as was envisaged for Schmidt's trip in 1980 which was called off by the chancellor at the last minute because of Poland.

Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl said on the message from the Crimea: "The light is yellow. But we should be aware that this yellow is not followed by red but by green."

How much value Honecker attaches to receiving the West German Government chief in the opinion of Bonn's Germany politicians is also shown by the fact that there is something missing in the communique. Contrary to the East's practice in recent months, the Crimea text does not contain any polemics against the Federal Republic in general and Moscow's least popular men in Bonn, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in particular.

Brezhnev and Honecker obviously have realized that they will by no means reach their main goal of preventing the deployment of U.S. missiles in Eastern Europe against Schmidt and Genscher but, they reckon, perhaps with them.

According to information obtained by DER SPIEGEL, East Berlin is preparing a detailed plan for the German summit which has been discussed with the Soviets.

To begin with, the GDR will offer Bonn more economic cooperation. East Berlin has a dual interest in such a cooperation. On the one hand, the SED leadership wants to warm the climate which has frozen considerably after the increase in the mandatory exchange rate for GDR visits; on the other hand, independent of Bonn's further tactics in the counterarmament issue, it needs to have more foreign exchange, given the permanent supply crisis in the East bloc.

In addition, the GDR speculates on an extension of traffic routes, above all, railway communications to Berlin and city railways in Berlin, as well as an expansion of intra-German trade. It also hopes Bonn will be accommodating when the interest-free overdraft credit (swing) in intra-German trade will be renegotiated this autumn.

What is more, East Berlin wants to have credits from Bonn for a number of large projects, after East Germany had to give up hopes for financial aid from Japan. GDR economic planners at present are working on a concrete wish-list.

To cause the Federal Government to oppose NATO's counterarmament--and this is the second stage of the GDR concept--Honecker, with Brezhnev's blessing, in addition may offer a big bait. To begin with, he will offer permanent consultations between Bonn and East Berlin in all important foreign-political questions, and finally, he will even beckon with a German-German economic community. The 1972 basic treaty, the SED says, is far from being exhausted.

But to force Bonn to move, the GDR has linked these offers with tough conditions. It demands that the Federal Government first abandon NATO's counterarmament or at least help Washington and Moscow reach an acceptable compromise in the negotiations on medium-range arms. In addition, Bonn will have to recognize the GDR internationally, as demanded by Honecker in Gera last year.

As unrealistic and unfeasible as the demands are, they do show how much Moscow is concerned about the threatening missile counterarmament.

When Honecker will surprise the Federal chancellor with his offers; whether he will do that prior to our following Breshnev's visit to Bonn by the end of November, was not said in the Crimea talks. The GDR leadership does not at all want to give the impression that its boss must ask the Kremlin's permission for a meeting with Schmidt.

The SED wants to show that it pursues its own policy and therefore will at least announce the German summit prior to the Brezhnev visit.

The chancellor has repeatedly let Honecker know it recent months that he, too, is interested in talks. In this way, Schmidt wanted to disprove his critics who like SPD chairman Willy Brandt and SPD Bundestag Party Chairman Herbert Wehner charged that the government chief had precipitately cancelled his GDR visit last year and then had failed to undertake intensive efforts for holding such talks.

Shortly after the Bundestag elections, Brandt said in an interview with DER SPIEGEL (46/1980) that the Federal Government must "undertake more efforts and give more thought to the question of how the relationship between both German states can be given more political substance." Above all, he said, Bonn must discuss with East Berlin what role the two German states could play within NATO and the Warsaw Pact in the East-West dialogue on nuclear armament in Europe.

In the spring, Brandt then demonstrated what he understands by normalcy in dealings between Germans in practice when he met French Socialist leader Mitterrand in the GDR and went with him from Weimar to the border.

Schmidt, under pressure, wants to remove any doubt about his wish to hold a dialogue with East Berlin. Minister of State Gunter Huonker, in charge of Germany policy in the Chancellor's Office, said: "They are aware that the chancellor is willing to hold talks. If they make a proposal, the matter will take its course."

It is true, the chancellor continues to be suspicious of the "attempts at constraint by communist propaganda" (Schmidt), no matter whether they are presented as a Soviet proposal to suspend the deployment of further missiles or possibly as an offer from East Berlin to set up a German-German economic community.

But Schmidt is also aware that he can no longer dodge a dialogue with Honecker, unless he wants to risk another conflict with his party. The deputy SPD chief, exhausted enough by the lasting quarrel about counterarmament, cannot afford such a conflict.

At the Munich SPD congress in April next year, at the latest, Schmidt wants to prove that, for all his loyalty to the United States and NATO, he will enforce the specific European and German interests and stick to the policy of detente. For this the chancellor needs to hold talks with Honecker as well as the meeting with Brezhnev in Bonn by the end of November.

Schmidt is proud of having wrested from U.S. President Ronald Reagan prior to the Ottawa world economic summit the written pledge to resume disarmament negotiations with the Soviets by the end of the year.

The chancellor was tough when business and the defense budget were discussed. Despite all warnings from Washington, the government chief kept to the German-Soviet billion-mark business on the supply of Russian natural gas for German pipelines. He also refused to grant the Americans the right to veto Bonn's technology exports into the East bloc.

Finally, Schmidt also offered resistance when Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger insisted the weekend before last that the Germans would have to increase their 1982 defense budget by the agreed 3 percent in real terms.

According to Bonn's economy measures, Hans Apel will receive a mere 4.3 percent more (a total of DM 43.7 billion), which means less money for men, arms and equipment, given a prospective rate of inflation of over 5 percent.

Schmidt even attacked the Reagan administration, charging that it was also responsible for Bonn's financial difficulties. The chancellor said: "After all, we didn't make the U.S. high interest rate policy." He made his spokesman Ruehl state that U.S. criticism, above all, by Weinberger, was out of place. It was "very unlikely" that Bonn would change its stance.

The chancellor hopes that his persistence will be honored by the comrades. The discussion within the SPD on NATO's dual decision is still confined to the question of whether and when Moscow and Washington will start negotiations on medium-range missiles.

But after Willy Brandt in July found out that Leonid Brezhnev is willing to hold talks, more and more Social Democrats have reflected loudly on whether counterarmament with U.S. Pershing-2 missiles and cruise missiles is dispensable at all.

Schmidt has not indicated so far whether he like Brezhnev's ideas. It was only at great effort that he allowed himself to be urged to give a positive assessment of Brandt's visit. The critics of counterarmament could soon be encouraged by another top comrade. In the first week of September, former negotiator with the East Egon Bahr will meet Politburo member Hermann Axen, in charge of foreign policy, in East Berlin. Their subject: the nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe.

Initial information about Bahr's lone action already alarmed the government. By the middle of June, Bahr visited East Berlin's representative Ewald Molot in Bonn. The Social Democrat asked whether Germans and Germans couldn't talk about disarmament outside the official government channels. Being the chairman of the parliamentary disarmament committee, Deputy Bahr felt competent; "where is it written that such talks are the exclusive business of governments?"

It was only by chance that the Chancellor's Office heard about the plan--not from Bahr, but from the GDR representation in Bonn. Minister in the Chancellor's Office Huonker anticipated a sensation, because Friedrich Ruth, envoy of the Foreign Ministry, announced that he would visit East Berlin in early July for an exchange of views on disarmament issues.

Bahr soothed Huonker saying that he did not plan to visit East Berlin before the late summer. Anyway, his subcommittee was having probing talks in Washington, Moscow, Geneva, Vienna and Brussels, and the GDR must not be excluded in this respect. As Bahr said: "We just can't start being hysterical when a deputy goes there to inform himself."

Meanwhile, Bahr sees his competences in a more relaxed way. True, as before, he is for deepening contacts between parliamentarians in East and West Germany. But he simply wants to talk to Axen as somebody who "has the advantage of being a generally political individual and at the same time a disarmament expert."

Above all, he wants to find out about "counterarmament of counterarmament" (Brandt). The SPD Chairman had brought information from the Kremlin that the Soviet Union would deploy new SS-23 missiles in the GDR. These missiles are more accurate and have less explosive force than the SS-20's. Therefore, experts believe, they are more suitable that the present missiles with high explosive force for an accurate use against military targets. Thus, the threshold of nuclear war would be lowered further.

Bahr wants to make it clear to the SED official that Bonn and East Berlin must have a fundamental interest in reducing the degree of the threat. The Social Democrat does not believe that by his visit to the GDR he might get into the chancellor's way; "Why shouldn't I be allowed to talk about it to our immediate neighbor?"

CHEYSSON REACTS TO SAUDI REMARKS ON ISRAEL

LD111143 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Saudi Arabia has caused a small diplomatic storm by proposing that the Arab countries recognize the state of Israel on condition that the Jewish state returns to the pre-June 1967 border situation. Riyadh is considered to be a hardline capital because it firmly supports the Palestinians, and its new proposal has been greeted with such interest. For example, Mr Claude Cheysson [minister of foreign affairs] has just said here that it could be very important.

MITTERRAND ACTED 'IN HASTE' ON FRENCH IN IRAN

PM111346 Paris LE FIGARO in French 8-9 Aug 81 p 1

[Serge Maffert article: "France-Iran: False Maneuvers"]

[Text] The crisis between France and Iran seems to be in abeyance awaiting the crucial day of Monday. It is then that an initial group of 60 French nationals is to leave the country in response to President Mitterrand's appeal. Will they be able to leave or will some new event occur to prevent them from doing so?

This sudden tension has highlighted an intra-Iranian conflict between advocates of economic realism and the zealots of devil-may-care orthodoxy. The former wanted to limit the damage to relations with Paris. The latter have decided to throw fat in the fire. Once again the outcome will depend on Imam Khomeyni's mysterious decisions. Do he and the men surrounding him need a new satan to denounce, the American satan having perhaps been too effective among Iranian opinion? Part of the answer will be given on Monday.

But above all it is necessary to examine the adequacy of the French approach since the affair began; in other words since Mr Bani-Sadr's arrival in Paris. When he came to take refuge in Neauphle-le-Chateau in February 1979, Ayatollah Khomeyni enjoyed the broadest political facilities and it was from his French headquarters that he led the start of the Islamic revolution against the shah. In August 1981 this same Khomeyni is apparently afraid that Mr Bani-Sadr might be able to play a similar role, this time against him. The fact that the ousted president lived for a long time in France and has many friends here possibly encourages the hypothesis of a plot more or less supported by Paris.

France could not refuse the right of asylum, which it makes matter of principle to grant to all political refugees, but it should have assessed the risks it was taking in welcoming the voluntary exile. The French authorities lost control right at the start: the specific instructions regarding discretion given to Mr Bani-Sadr were not respected by him, by his French visitors or by the media. All that was predictable.

The decision to allow three patrol boats ordered by the Iranian navy to leave did not ease the tension: it was interpreted less as a sign of good will than as the start of bargaining.

Finally the Elysee's sudden announcement of the recall of some 140 French nationals living in Iran gave a dramatic turn to a crisis which was almost exclusively taking place at verbal level. There are two possibilities: either the French Government had information that the French colony was in danger of serious maltreatment, or else the aim was to show French opinion that a tough line could be taken. In both cases the inappropriateness of the decisions is clear: The French nationals were unable to leave Iran quickly. Whereas their departure could have been arranged secretly and at the proper time, Paris has had to negotiate their departure with Iranians who are attracting attention to themselves by saying they are prepared to detain them.

Until Thursday our nationals did not seem to be seriously threatened. Who can now say whether or not they are threatened?

If this crisis ends well, it will at least have taught our leaders that haste does not necessarily mean efficiency.

CHEYSSON NOTES TIES WITH SPAIN, LATIN AMERICA

PM110718 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 5 Aug 81 pp 3-4

[Excerpt] Paris, 4 Aug (EFE/EUROPA PRESS)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson stated in San Jose, Costa Rica, Monday that France will not grant the extradition of political persecutees and that he hopes Spain will soon join the EEC.

The minister specified that "France is a land of asylum for political refugees; that is, France will never grant extradition for political offenses and even for political crimes."

"We have never talked about Basque Homeland and Liberty [ETA] in particular," Cheysson stated in reply to a question by EFE concerning the policy the new Socialist government will pursue in relation to members of the Basque terrorist organization who take refuge on French territory.

Cheysson emphasized that he was making no special statement but a statement "of a completely general nature."

As an instance of French policy on the matter he cited the case of former Iranian President Bani-Sadr, "who without belonging to ETA is causing the Mitterrand government many problems."

With respect to Spain's entry into the EEC, Cheysson stated that it is clear that Spain belongs to the same civilization and the same group of countries as the other EEC members.

"We really do want Spain to join the same communities as the French, such as the Atlantic alliance and the Economic Communities, and for us to have the same very close relations and the same understandings in the agreements concerning the Mediterranean," Cheysson added.

The French minister added that "France's new interest in Central America and the Caribbean is a further reason for rapprochement with Spain."

CCLOMBO INTERVIEWED ON NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

AU111555 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 11 Aug (ANSA)--The general impression among West European diplomats is that the Reagan administration's move to go ahead with the neutron bomb "might affect the resumption of (arms limitation) talks" with the Soviet Union, according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

"For our part," said Colombo in an interview in today's IL CORRIERE DELLA SERA daily, "the aim is to negotiate an agreement that guarantees security through balance."

With carefully measured words, Colombo explained how Italy was informed of Washington's decision to manufacture the deadly atomic weapon whose radiation kills people without doing any damage to property.

Neither Italy nor Washington's other European allies were consulted before the decision was taken.

On Saturday, an American Embassy official in Rome informed the head of the Italian Foreign Ministry's political affairs department, Bruno Bottai, about the announcement that U.S. President Ronald Reagan was about to make just a few hours later. U.S. embassies in other West European capitals more or less used the same procedure, Colombo reported, saying that he had gotten on the phone with his European counterparts after learning the news.

The IL CORRIERE interviewer said Colombo displayed disappointment over the way the communications were handled.

To the question, "What repercussions will the development have on East-West nuclear balance"? Colombo replied:

"The American point of view since the Carter administration, shared by NATO, is that the neutron bomb would not alter the existing balance because it is a substitute, and not an addition, to other weapons of the same power.

Colombo went on to answer questions about NATO's plans to deploy new generation nuclear-warheaded theater missiles in Western Europe. (The Italian Government has just picked the site for new cruise installations in Comniso, Sicily--ed. note) According to the Rome government official, the "so-called two-lane policy (of installing the missiles and promoting arms limitation negotiations) is going as planned.

"The European stand was accepted by the U.S. during the last NATO council session in Rome.

"(U.S. Secretary of State Alexander) Haig will be meeting with (Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei) Gromyko at the United Nations in the fall to arrange procedures and a timetable for the theater nuclear forces talks.

"In the meantime, NATO's high-level group--United States, Britain, Italy and West Germany--is at work drafting a possible negotiations platform."

GOVERNMENT WITHHOLDS COMMENT ON NEUTRON WARHEAD

LD112134 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] The Portuguese Government declined to comment on President Reagan's decision to give the go-ahead to production of the neutron bomb. However, an official spokesman stated that the government's position is identical to that already expressed by the Mitterrand government.

PREMIER BALSEMAO EXPLAINS RESIGNATION DECISION

LD111522 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Late this morning, Dr Pinto Balsemao went to Belem Palace to submit to the president of the republic his request to resign from the post of prime minister.

[Begin Pinto Balsemao recording] Today I presented to the president of the republic my request to resign, in the wake of the decision I took last Sunday at the Social Democratic Party National Council session. The president of the republic will issue a statement on the matter later today. I based my decision on the fact that since the beginning of my premiership there has been a systematic and sustained opposition by personalities and minority sectors forming part of the Democratic Alliance. These personalities have been saying, and more especially in recent times, that once my resignation was presented some alternatives would emerge. It now befalls these personalities and sectors to assume their political responsibilities and put forward these alternatives. I am confident that my party, the Portuguese Social Democratic Party, will know how to find the most suitable solution for this crisis, in the interests of the nation, for the commitments assumed by the Democratic Alliance, for democracy in general and always to do everything with respect for the party's program. The government will continue to operate calmly until a solution is found. At this moment, the Council of Ministers is in session, and that is where I am now going. Speaking as prime minister and without prejudice to statements which as leader of my party I intend to make, as prime minister I shall maintain the silence I have maintained so far. The functions of prime minister are state functions. The state and the national interest demand, demand that this silence, this standing aloof, are important when considered necessary. [end recording]

Dr Pinto Balsemao did not reply to my questions, although it is natural that questions will remain, at least until the communique from the presidency of the republic is issued. The decision of the Social Democratic leader was made known at the session of the party National Council. On that date it may be known who will succeed Pinto Balsemao. It may even be that the new prime minister will again be Pinto Balsemao.

President Accepts Resignation

LD112044 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] The president of the republic has accepted the resignation tendered by the prime minister earlier today. The meeting between the two lasted some 90 minutes and it was only in late afternoon that a presidential spokesman confirmed that the resignation had been accepted, reading out the following communique:

[Begin spokesman recording] The president of the republic today received in audience the prime minister, Dr Francisco Pinto Balsemao, who submitted his resignation on grounds that are already public knowledge.

Despite the fact that the president of the republic had not withdrawn his political confidence in the prime minister, and that no no-confidence motion had been passed in parliament, the president of the republic decided to accept the prime minister's resignation in the light of the reasons offered.

The resignation will take effect on 14 August after consultation by the Council of the Revolution, as stipulated in the constitution, during the Council's customary Thursday session.

After the resignation becomes effective, the members of the government will remain in office to ensure the continuity of the administration with the powers conferred upon them by the constitution.

On Monday, 17 August, the president of the republic will initiate the necessary demarches for the formation of a new government. To this end, he will receive representatives of the parliamentary parties, thus permitting the normal evolution of the political circumstances that have led to the prime minister's resignation.

The president of the republic expresses the hope that the sense of loyalty and the national awareness of the duty that befalls the parties chosen by the electorate to bear the responsibilities of government will make it possible to effectively and reliably surmount the real obstacles now standing in the path to the adequate resolution of the country's problems. [end recording]

Further Comment

NC111025 Paris AFP in English 1014 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] Lisbon, 11 Aug (AFP)--Portuguese Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao, due to hand in his formal resignation today to President Antonio dos Santos Ramalho Eanes, has accused members of his own centre-right coalition of sabotage.

In a statement issued by the prime minister's office, Mr Pinto Balsemao said that "identified members of the Democratic Alliance, which groups his own Social-Democrats, the Centre Democratic Social Party and the monarchists, should now bear the "political responsibility of suggesting an alternative government.

Mr Pinto Balsemao said that he hoped that "the Portuguese and their democratic institutions will overcome this grave crisis with calm," in order to safeguard his government's values of "freedom, dialogue and tolerance."

The outgoing premier was to meet President Eanes, who has cut short a brief holiday in his home town of Alcains, at 1000 GMT. Last night Mr Pinto Balsemao chaired an emergency meeting of his party's political committee.

In the opposition camp, the Communist Party has called for general elections, but the Socialist Party has not yet commented. Party Secretary Mario Soares has decided not to cut short an official visit to Yugoslavia.

PAPER VIEWS U.S. PRODUCTION OF NEUTRON BOMB

LD111042 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0820 GMT 11 Aug 81

[From the press review]

[Text] HELSINGIN SANOMAT writes about the neutron bomb with a certain coolness in its leading article today. There was already a violent dispute about the neutron bomb some 3 years ago. As this weapon, a kind of lesser hydrogen bomb, destroys life but spares structures, it has been described as inhuman and capitalistic. But the fact is that all nuclear weapons send off neutron radiation. Both superpowers have in storage great amounts of explosives whose neutron radiation exceeds in energy many hundreds of times that of the neutron bomb. Nuclear explosives that destroy both life and property are hardly any more human or socialistic. It has also been feared that the neutron bomb will lower the threshold between conventional and nuclear war. According to HELSINGIN SANOMAT, such claims are questionable. It is not likely that anybody would start using the neutron bomb without being aware that the opposing side can retaliate with more destructive nuclear weapons.

Washington was able to foresee that the new decision to produce neutron bombs would arouse opposition, HELSINGIN SANOMAT goes on. To do away with the opposition, it is noted that as neutron bombs for the time being are to be stockpiled in the United States only, the decision is an internal affair of the United States. This explanation does not reassure anybody. The neutron bomb has been developed expressly as an antitank weapon. Nobody can launch an extensive tank attack against the United States. On the other hand, the European NATO countries must take the possibility of such an offensive seriously. In the opinion of many experts, the neutron bomb is more suitable for a propaganda war than for actual combat. To correctly utilize its characteristics--accuracy, short range and comparatively weak power--it should be used at division level, which, HELSINGIN SANOMAT points out, is not sensible for economic and other reasons.

LEADERS CRITICIZE U.S. NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

PM111349 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 10 Aug 81 p 5

[Excerpts] The U.S. decision to begin producing the neutron bomb came as a surprise to [Swedish Prime Minister] Thorbjoern Faelldin, DAGENS NYHETER's correspondent Kaa Eneberg reported from Nairobi, where Faelldin is taking part in the UN energy conference.

"It is difficult for me to say anything off the cuff about the decision, but my spontaneous reaction would be to say that what the world most needs is a reduction in the number of nuclear arms and not an increase," Thorbjoern Faelldin said.

According to TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten made the following comments on the U.S. decision: To produce the neutron bomb means yet another dangerous and deeply worrying escalation of the arms race between the superpowers in recent years.

In the past the Norwegian Government has always opposed the neutron bomb. This view, which has broad support in Norway, is unchanged, Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said in comments to NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA.

In the other Nordic NATO nation, Denmark, Reagan's decision was met by unreserved criticism, DPA reported.

"The decision is particularly surprising because the two superpowers are about to start important negotiations on limiting the so-called Eurostrategic arms," Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said.

MORE SOVIET WARSHIPS ON WAY TO BALTIC

LD111842 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] The Soviet Union is concentrating ever-increasing naval units in the Baltic. According to reports from the West German navy, several Soviet warships are now on their way from the North Sea and the Black Sea to join the 50 or so ships which have already gathered in the Baltic. PAPER REJECTS REAGAN'S DECISION ON NEUTRON BOMB

NC111125 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 11 Aug 81 p 5

[From the I ELEVTHEROTIPIA column: "The Ill-Considered Decision"]

[Text] We cannot but express our concern over the U.S. President's order to begin production of neutron warheads for "Lance" missiles and 200-mm artillery shells. We believe that this decision will lead to an intensified nuclear arms race and that the outcome will be an increased danger to world peace, something that mankind faces with terror.

We find President Reagan's decision totally ill-considered and we stress our strong objection to it. With the arms race, mankind is under continual danger and the production of nuclear warheads will increase this danger even more. Every freedom-loving person should always work to confine this danger. We want to hope that the United States and all freedom-loving people will strongly express their reaction to President Reagan's decision and force him to cancel the production of neutron warheads. At the same time, we hope that the other countries that are in a position to proceed with producing such war materiel dangerous to mankind will show self-restraint and refrain from reprisals.

JUSTICE MINISTER REFERS TO TURKISH PROPOSALS

NC101143 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] The government refrains from making any public statements and comment on the Turkish proposals other than: President Kiprianou "will speak at the right moment." But Justice Minister Dhimitriadhis, in a speech yesterday, describes the Turkish proposals as "not substantive at first sight."

Speaking yesterday at the memorial service of 2d Lt Sotiris Marathevtis at Letimbou, Justice Minister Dhimitriadhis referred to the noted developments saying:

For the first time the Turkish side has now submitted proposals on the territorial issue of the Cyprus issue accompanied by a map and, irrespective of their content, this cannot fail to put some kind of action into the talks, which for months have been characterized as stagnated. Despite the fact that the proposals at first sight appear to be not "substantive," as promised by the Turks previously, they are nevertheless being studied responsibly and carefully by the government to ascertain their positive and negative elements.

What is necessary today is that all parties face the new developments responsibly and express their views and criticism not with petty partisan intentions and demagogy, but in a constructive serious spirit. We must face developments with prudence and a cool head without being led astray by patriotic agitations nor by the spirit of defeatism and submission.

Adhering to the course of finding a peaceful solution, we will struggle to convince the Turkish side and the world that keeping the Cyprus issue in abeyance and insecurity in the eastern Mediterranean is to the interest of no one. However, at the same time, we must once more emphasize to everyone that we are not prepared to sacrifice the essence of the issue for the sake of time and in any event we do not intend to recognize the faits accomplis of the treason and the crime. We will never sacrifice the fundamental human rights of our people or mortgage our country's future.

Government Comment

NC110918 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 11 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Commenting on Justice Minister Dhimitriadhis' 9 August speech delivered at a memorial service, the government spokesman made the following statement yesterday:

"What Mr Dhimitriadhis said are general remarks. The government's position on the Turkish proposals will be defined after completion of all preparations."

OFFICIAL STATEMENT ON WALDHEIM'S AIRPORT PROPOSAL

NC110910 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The foreign minister has given a verbatim account to President Kiprianou of the Greek Government's views on Waldheim's ideas on the Nicosia airport and the resettlement of Varosha. This was stressed in an official statement which denies the allegations published in yesterday's O ANEXARTITOS.

The full text of the official statement is as follows: "The O ANEXARTITOS report on the 'Nicosia Airport-Varosha Resettlement" surprises no one. It is simply a continuation of the malicious lies and EDEK's spiteful belligerence against the foreign minister.

"Regarding the above issue, it has been clarified that Mr Rolandhis gave a word-by-word account to President Kiprianou and the Council of Ministers of the Greek Government's views. Greek Ambassador Zacharakis gave Mr Rolandhis this information over the telephone in the afternoon of 31 December 1980. This information was:

"The Greek Government has studied Waldheim's ideas on the Nicosia airport and the Varosha resettlement and believes that these ideas must be seriously and positively studied, always within the framework of a more general settlement of the Cyprus issue whose final form must not be prejudged. Moreover, Ambassador Zacharakis personally briefed President Kiprianou--with whom he has regular contacts--on the Greek Government's views."

These views were expressed to President Kiprianou, Mr N.A. Rolandhis and Mr Y. Ioannidhis during their 11 January 1981 visit to Athens.

"Later, in February, when Waldheim's initial ideas were amended, the Cyprus Government in agreement with the Greek Government rejected these ideas in their new amended form. The National Council was informed accordingly at all stages. The foreign minister has nothing else to add. He simply leaves the pitiful distorters of truth to the scorn of the Cypriot people."

On the other hand, the Greek Embassy gave a statement on the same report, according to which the Greek Government had suggested to reject the return to Varosha in exchange for reopening Nicosia airport.

It stresses that: "When the Greek Government was asked by the Cyprus Government to give its views on the ideas, as initially presented, it replied that the possibility of a middle-way agreement would be expedient if it were to be studied seriously and in a positive spirit, always within the framework of a more general settlement of the Cyprus issue whose final form should not be prejudged."

Later, however, the statement concludes, these initial ideas were amended and changed the content. This compelled the Cyprus Government, in agreement with the Greek Government, to reject the ideas.

CUMHURIYET REPORTS ON TURKISH CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

NC111212 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 8 Aug 81 pp 1, 7

[Izzet Yalin report from Nicosia]

[Text] The map which has been submitted to the Greek Cypriot side for the first time, and which contains territorial proposals, envisages ceding about 20 villages and 6 regions. The six regions--Pergamos, Lysi, Limnitis, Louroujina, Kokkina and Avlona--as well as the strategically unimportant parts of the buffer zone are in the south. Three of these regions comprise whole villages. A large portion of Varosha, which constitutes the sixth region, and Dherinia are shown on the southern part of the line which is being made available for resettlement of Greek Cypriot refugees.

Among villages to be ceded to the Greek Cypriot side are large villages such as Pergamos, Limnitis, and Louroujina which are inhabited totally by Turkish Cypriots who have never moved to other areas. We have been unable to ascertain whether these Turkish Cypriot citizens will be moved to the TFSC areas or whether they will stay in the Greek Cypriot region.

The Turkish Cypriot proposals suggest two units which will constitute the federal republic, and the following areas will remain outside the TFSC borders:

1) Nine villages in the Pergamos-Lysi region;
2) Eight villages in the Limnitis region, and
3) Two villages in the Louroujina region, a total of 19 villages.

It is observed that a large area in the form of a crescent in the Pergamos region, which is actually a border enclave, is being left out of the TFSC borders for the first time. The border line in this area starts at the British base of Dhekelia and in the northeast of Akhyritou, then it runs below Gaidhouras, Sinda, and Vatili, and forms a straight line, leaving out the village of Lysi. In this area there are completely Turkish villages such as Pergamos and Louroujina whose residents had never been moved until the 1974 operation when they were transferred to Lysi, Ayios Vasilios and Akhyritou. This area also embraces the villages of Kondea, Kouklia, Kalopsidha, Athna, and Makrasyka. In addition, the village of Pyla which has a mixed population and which is on the British base, will be cut off from the Turkish Cypriot region.

The Louroujina region, an enclave from which most of the population was transferred to Lysi and the village of Pyroi and the main Nicosia-Larnaca road which has been under the control of the Turkish units, and over which the Greek Cypriots have unsuccessfully tried to gain control, are now being ceded to the Greek Cypriot side.

A sharp line stretching off Xeros and Kambos toward Ambelikou, that is, from the north to the south, and the whole of the Limnitis region is being left outside the borders of the TFSC. The following villages are included in this area: Limnitis, Amadhies, Selemani, Xerovounos, Ambelikou, Loutros, Varisha and Galini.

The Avlona area to the southeast of Katokopia, and the Kokkina area which has been defended by a handful of fighters, remain south of the line which divides the two units of the Federal Republic.

In Varosha, the area which was suggested in 1978 for resettling the Greek Cypriots, appears expanded on the map and a large area is given to the Greek Cypriots starting from Dimokratia Avenue, leaving out a vast part of the Varosha city and Dherinia, reaching as far as the southeastern part of the British base of Dhekelia. Turkish Cypriots also live in certain parts of the region south of the border line.

No percentage is mentioned in the Turkish proposals, but it is about 5 percent in these six regions. It is believed, however, that with the buffer zone included, it will rise to 6 percent.

According to our Ankara bureau on the other hand, highranking political circles support the view that the package of proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side for the purpose of finding a solution to the Cyprus issue, should be seriously considered by the Greek Cypriot side.

According to official circles which cherish this view, "by presenting these proposals to the negotiating table, the Turkish Cypriot side has ushered in a positive atmosphere and has shown the necessary flexibility. From now on, the Greek Cypriot side must seriously consider the proposals and reciprocate responsibly."

Again, the same circles recall the agreement reached in principle that the Cyprus issue should not be referred to international forums while the intercommunal talks are continuing, and they express the hope that this will not be done this year when the UN General Assembly meets in September.

Meanwhile, according to authorities in Ankara, first reactions from various capitals to the Turkish Cypriot proposals are positive. The UN communique, which is on official record, is quoted as an example. The communique in question describes the Turkish Cypriot proposals as "comprehensive."

On the subject of foreign policy, Cagatay noted that efforts will be made to explain the Turkish Cypriot viewpoint to the world, care will be taken to establish closer relations with Islamic countries, the EEC and other neighboring countries, and that efforts will also be exerted to seek a solution to the Cyprus problem by establishing an independent, nonaligned, bizonal and bicommunal state.

In the field of labor, Cagatay said that improved conditions will be secured for the workers, the property compensation system will be implemented soon, and efforts will be made to provide better social services to the people. Noting that a coalition government to be formed by the CLP, the RTP and the DPP should be ready to take over as soon as the minority government is overthrown, Ozgur reiterated that his party is ready to take over together with the CLP and the DPP and stressed that work should be intensified to form a tripartite coalition government.

VOTCP DECRIES U.S. DECISION ON NEUTRON BOMB

TA111002 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Station commentary]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners, it was announced last weekend that the U.S. administration has decided to produce the neutron bomb. This decision provoked reaction throughout the world and is continuing to do so. Apart from clearly showing that, despite all its deceptions, the U.S. administration is not in favor of resuming talks with the Soviet Union on reducing nuclear arms, this decision by the Pentagon exposes the increasing belligerency of U.S. imperialists and their ruthless intention to drag the human race into a hell of nuclear war.

Moreover, Washington made this barbaric decision on the anniversary of the atom bomb on Hiroshima as if boldly mocking all the forces in favor of peace and detente and announced it to the world on the anniversary of the atom bomb on Nagasaki as if it were a victory. Thus, the U.S. imperialists are acting as if they are proud of causing the death of hundreds of thousands of people and crippling an even greater number. They wish to spread fear to the world. If this is not barbarism, then what is it?

The decision by the Reagan administration to produce the neutron bomb is based on the illusion that all international problems can be solved through the use of force and that U.S. imperialism can regain its lost positions throughout the world by using force. However, this illusion is dragging the U.S. imperialists into adventurism--into a savage adventurism that brings the entire human race to the verge of annihilation.

Dear listeners, the Washington decision to produce the neutron bomb again demonstrates the basically different characteristics of the two opposite lines in global politics. On the one hand, there is the realistic, constructive and peaceful line of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries that express the interests of the entire humankind. On the other hand, there is the policy of tension and confrontation followed by the U.S. administration preparing to transform the world into an inextinguishable blaze overnight in a bid to safeguard the interests of the arms monopolies. The recent neutron bomb decision forces all human beings to make a choice between these two lines. This is a choice between life and death. Every government, organization or individual is obligated to make this choice. There are two paths: Either this warmongering and death-dealing policy of U.S. imperialists will be supported for the sake of blind and narrow interests and in order to secure the interests of a handful of collaborationists; or this policy will be opposed together with all the peace forces in the world. Nuclear rockets and neutron bombs do not discriminate between persons.

Dear listeners, some people may choose to ignore a danger that doesn't affect them personnally. They may wonder how Turkey could be related to the neutron bomb. However, let us recall that the Pentagon files include plans to deploy this bomb in Turkey. The U.S. Government will pressure our country on this subject as well.

Our country needs peace and friendship with all its neighbors. It does not need nuclear weapons. In this case as well, two lines emerge; the Soviet Union has clearly stated that it will not use nuclear weapons against countries that do not deploy them on their soil. The United States is trying to deploy more nuclear weapons in Turkey. One of these lines paves the way for friendship and cooperation that benefits both sides and the other line sets a death trap. Life compels everyone to make a choice. It is not possible to stay outside the worldwide struggle.

The junta government cannot defend peace by applying pressure on the peace forces. On the contrary, pro-Americans such as (Korkun) and those who trade in the business of dragging the country to the brink of annihilation benefit from this atmosphere of pressure. The struggle against the production of the neutron bomb and the attempts to deploy the neutron bomb in our country is therefore an urgent task today as well. This is a necessary condition of patriotism and the wish to live.

MILLIYET CRITICIZES MITSOTAKIS REMARKS ON CYPRUS

NC111124 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 7 Aug 81 p 8

["Telex" column by Teoman Erel: "An Untimely Threat"]

[Text] It is maintained that if the intercommunal talks do not yield the expected results, the Greek Cypriots will not be responsible for it. This [statement] was concocted when the Turkish Cypriot side submitted to the Greek Cypriot side proposals covering territorial concessions, and the author is Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. He decreed, even before examining the Turkish Cypriot proposals: "You either comply with our demands or you will be responsible [for the consequences]."

This is a negative attitude which justifies pessimistic speculations about the peace talks which have entered a new phase following territorial concessions by the Turkish Cypriot side. Many are those who believe that the Greek Cypriots and Greece do not intend to favor a reasonable compromise. Very few, even of those who actively participated in the preparation of the proposals are optimistic about the outcome. They say: "They will ask for three times as much as we can give them. On the question of the constitution, they will not in any way approach our demands..."

This impression prevails widely among the Turkish Cypriot authorities as well as in Ankara. By proclaiming in advance--and also in a sort of panicky way--at this stage that responsibility for the failure of the talks will rest on the Turkish Cypriot side, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis is in a way contributing to the stiffening of pessimism at the start of the intercommunal talks. Responding to a question as to what is going to happen if no agreement is reached, Mitsotakis says:" The struggle will continue in a different way."

We can afford not to take too seriously this camouflaged threat by the foreign minister of the Greek Government which is facing a critical general election. At this moment, Athens resembles a disaster scene. Terrorists who support the rightist members of the junta have been setting the capital of Greece on fire. The rightists in the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus have scored as much success as the communists while anti-democratic agitation has increased in Greece. The attempt to topple the government, which has also been confirmed by Defense Minister Averof, is still fresh in memory. Therefore, the threat uttered by the Greek Foreign Minister against the Turkish Cypriot side sounds more like whistling in the dark. Nevertheless, we have to watch Athens carefully and make realistic appraisals. For, the party in power in Greece may, for the purpose of softening the internal issues, which are assuming a critical character, decide to change its attitude toward Turkey and resort to certain escalations in its tactics. It may even compete with the chauvinist main opposition in displaying animosity toward Turkey....

We do not think that apart from propaganda and international intrigues, the struggle of the Greeks and the Greek Cypriots will take on a new "form." They will increase their past propaganda and tactics. They will try to exasperate Turkey through the pressure of Western allies and thus concentrate on their efforts to isolate Turkey completely. They will reiterate their argument that "the Turkish Cypriots do not want a settlement. They are only applying delaying tactics."

Under these conditions, neither Ankara nor the Turkish Cypriot administration need develop unnecessary complexes. No excessive concessions must be made so as to prove to the United States, to our other allies and to the world opinion that the Greeks and the Greek Cypriots do not intend to reach an understanding with ut.

The Greek Cypriots register every mellowing of the Turkish Cypriot side at various stages of the talks as points of no return and use the tactic of asking for more. They have been using this tactic for years. By ceding territory amounting to 9 percent [as published] of the island, the Turkish Cypriot side aims at starting "meaningful negotiations." The Greek Cypriots, on the other hand, seem to be planning to say "you had already accepted this percentage. We want more." They will also put these concessions on record and then carry on with their long term struggle.

We hope that the talks resumed on the island will disappoint the pessimists and that a just peace will be achieved. But when we look at the behavior and the speeches both in the Greek Cypriot sector and in Athens, we think it highly probably that a political marathon rather than a peace understanding is going to materialize eventually.

ARAYIS URGES BREAKING RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL

NC111146 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 1 Aug 81 p 9

["The Interpretation of Events" column: "Kill a Turk and Relax"]

[Text] In a statement at a press conference he held after the bombing of the nuclear station in Baghdad, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said: "Kill a Turk and relax." In reality, these words epitomize Begin's, that is, Israel's, that is, Zionism's political outlook: Kill a Turk, a Palestinian, a Libyan, an Iraqi, in short, whoever prejudices your interests, and relax.

We could afford to interpret these words as "the nonsense of a demented person" who has been denounced by world opinion and forget them. But Begin turns his eccentric views into militant actions and indulges in killing, bombing and attacking in order to relax. When this is an indication that Israel seeks to relax over the dead bodies of innocent people, Begin's utterances should be taken seriously.

Begin is playing a dangerous game. The other day, Ankara was shown among the targets that Israeli aircraft could strike. And now Begin says: "Kill a Turk and relax." As social progress is increasing in Turkey, as the Turkish nation is gradually grasping international realities and taking its place on the side of the just, oppressed and destitute, and as it is learning how unjust the contemporary international order is, it is bound to win millions of friends and naturally a few enemies. Those who wish to further the order of oppression and exploitation and those who wish to "confine Turkey to an oxygen tent" powerless are now including the Turkish people among their targets.

Turkey, which passionately rose against imperialism and the fascist administration set up in Cyprus in 1974, has been subjected to many treacherous traps since then. Our people have had to surmount all sorts of obstacles in their effort to reestablish their historic ties with their Muslim brethren in the Middle East. Those who aspire to force Turkey into acting as the gendarme of their secret interests in the Middle East and the Arabian Gulf are enraged when the Turkish people resist their plans and so wish to intimidate Turkey. Begin's statement concerning Turkey must be assessed within this context.

Despite all this, Turkey is still continuing its diplomatic relations with Israel. What is more, Turkey is the only Muslim country that maintains diplomatic relations with Israel. This is what we said in our 23d issue: "The representative of the Turkish people must be withdrawn from Tel Aviv. For, as Yasir 'Arafat said one day; 'There is in every Turkish home at least one person who feels in his heart the hardships that the Palestinians are suffering. 'If we are not to add pangs of conscience to these hardships, diplomatic relations with Israel must be severed."

We reiterate this call: Turkey must sever its diplomatic relations with Israel. It is the most natural right of our people to demand that the sharpest reply be given to Begin's audacities, which include our country too among Israel's targets.

UNITED KINGDOM

FOREIGN OFFICE, ITALY CONFER ON NEUTRON DECISION

LD111336 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1303 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Text] Britain and Italy have had brief consultations over the American decision to produce the neutron bomb, the Foreign Office confirmed today, without giving details of the nature of the dialogue. It appears the Italians telephoned the Foreign Office from Rome shortly after the American decision was announced. Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour, who is in charge of the department in the absence of Lord Carrington on holiday, took the call and gave an indication of Britain's initial reaction.

It is accepted in Whitehall that the American decision will cause acute difficulty for its European allies, particularly with the growth of anti-nuclear feeling in some European countries. The Italian Prime Minister's Office, in a non-committal public statement, said the decision to produce the neutron bomb was one for the U.S. since the weapons would be stored there, and this was in line with the initial reaction by the British Government. The response of European leaders has so far been notably muted, with no public indication of approval or disapproval.

PCE SPOKESMAN SCORES U.S. NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

LD111716 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 11 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The announcement about the neutron bomb has already provoked numerous reactions throughout Europe, and in the last few hours in Spain, too. Here is the opinion of the PCE, as expressed by its information spokesman:

[Begin recording] Our view is that the U.S. President's decision has come as no surprise to us, given his reactionary and aggressive policies which have been fully demonstrated since he took over at the White House. (?This is going to be good for other former presidents). It is becoming clear that U.S. foreign policy is (?moving even further to the right). This is perhaps an indication of its impotence in the face of the advance of the left and of the forces of reason in the civilized countries, for instance, in France, and so on. This new measure could provide an argument for the escalation of the arms race by the other great military bloc and create a climate of mistrust and hostility which would be totally negative. PLANTS FOR PRC--A contract providing for delivery by the Austrian VEW Steel Corporation of a 200-million-schilling plant for the production of insecticides to the PRC is expected to be concluded in the very near future. The Chinese side intends to place orders for another 10 plants of the same type with the Austrian company. The Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation is hoping to obtain a 7-billion-schilling PRC order for a coal liquefaction plant. These deals were prepared not by the company managements but by VEW shop council chairman Rechberger, who made a trip to China in March in an attempt to secure orders from the PRC. OPEC MEETING ONLY FOR 'GENERAL CONSULTATIONS'

AU121027 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] OPEC is going to hold a consultative meeting in Vienna [as published] on 19 August. This was confirmed officially by OPEC spokesman (Hamid Zaheri) in Vienna yesterday.

According to (Zaheri), the meeting will only be in the nature of general consultations, but the oil ministers "may at any time start special price negotiations if they so desire." The meeting will probably last 1 or 2 days.

STARIBACHER TO VISIT USSR 14-15 SEP FOR TALKS

AU121351 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] Austrian-Soviet economic talks scheduled to be held in Moscow 14-15 September will probably map out the development of economic relations between the two countries for 1982 and 1983. Trade Minister Staribacher will go to Moscow for a session of the joint commission for economic and scientific-technical cooperation.

The Soviet delegation will be headed by Foreign Trade Minister Patolichev. It was he who wanted the session to be held in Moscow rather than in Vienna. The main purpose of the talks is to complete work on a series of measures designed to make specific a cooperation program within the framework of the Austrian-Soviet cooperation agreement.

DOMESTIC EXPLOSIVE USED IN ISRAELI EMBASSY BOMB

AU121345 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 12 Aug 81 p 10

[Summary] Vienna/Beirut--While in Beirut an obscure "15 May organization," which to date had been completely unknown to Austrian police, claimed responsibility for the bomb attacks on Israeli institutions in Vienna, Athens and Rome, police experts in Vienna have made some progress: They have established that the explosive used in the Vienna attack Monday was gelatine-donarit, presumably produced by the Sankt Lamprecht explosives factory in Styria. The type of explosive and the expert way it was handled have convinced police that the attackers were not amateurs.

"Otherwise no progress whatever has been made toward clearing up the case, and even after a detailed analysis of the explosive there are virtually no chances of throwing light on the background to the bombing. However, Austrian security authorities are at least satisfied that the attackers were not able to get closer than 30 meters to their actual target, the Israeli Embassy, and that they had to confine themselves to a 'demonstrative explosion.'" They feel that this is to the credit of the efficient security precautions taken by the Austrian police.

NETHERLANDS

EUROPEAN VIEW ON N-BOMB 'CAN ONLY BE NEGATIVE'

FM121226 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] The Reagan administration advances two arguments for its decision to produce the neutron bomb and to stockpile it on U.S. territory. First the decision is a "sovereign" one by the United States. Second it is "a logical step in the process begun in 1978."

Both arguments are correct formally and factually. Washington does not need to ask permission of any of the powers to make the neutron bomb. In addition it was President Carter who made the decision in 1978--after fierce West European opposition to production and deployment of the weapon--that parts for the neutron bomb would be manufactured in the meantime.

However, there are some flaws in these arguments. First and foremost: The Reagan administration claim that this is a "sovereign decision" would hold water if the neutron bomb were being produced for the defense of U.S. territory. The last thing feared by the Americans is that the Russians might land on U.S. territory. Even less can one assume that the U.S. Government would use the neutron bomb to combat internal disturbances in the country.

The fact of the matter is that from the very beginning of the neutron bomb question it has been stressed that the weapon amounts to an effective defense against large-scale Warsaw Pact tank attacks in Central Europe. Thus the final destination for the neutron bomb is Europe and not U.S. territory.

It would be logical then if the Western European allies had been consulted about the Reagan administration decision to produce the neutron bomb anyway. Defense Secretary Weinberger promised something of the kind in an interview with U.S. CBS television in March: production of the neutron bomb would happen only after full consultations with the allies.

There are various arguments as to why Washington has not kept its word. First--as the New York TIMES suggests--Bonn's decision to make defense spending cuts has convinced the Reagan administration that pigs will fly before the Europeans agree to introduction of the neutron bomb.

The extension of this is that no NATO decision is necessary for the introduction of this weapon. In the final analysis the deployment of the neutron bomb is a question between the governments of the United States and those countries that are prepared to deploy the neutron bomb on their territory. In this respect the test of relations between West Germany and the United States is approaching its culmination.

U.S. Government spokesman Larry Speakes has called the Reagan decision "a logical step in the process begun in 1978." This suggests that Carter cut the Gordian knot and that Reagan is only making a decision of lesser import. This is incorrect. The Reagan administration bears full political responsibility for the neutron bomb decision.

This means that the philosophy of "logical steps" is nonsense. To follow logic, the next "logical step" is that the neutron bomb be deployed in Western Europe, since this is its logical place in U.S. strategy. The final "logical step" is that the neutron bomb be used in Europe. This is unacceptable, since this weapon contributes to the idea that it is possible to wage nuclear war on "a limited scale." Europe's answer to the U.S. decision can thus only be negative.

'Objections' to Weapon

PM121123 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The Hague, 10 Aug—"Although at the moment it is simply a matter of stockpiling in the United States, this does not alter the fact that Europe is the first place considered for the deployment of a weapon like the neutron bomb." Second Chamber deputy M. van der Stoel (Labor Party) [PVDA], who will become foreign minister if the present government formation attempts are successful, said this morning in reaction to President Reagan's decision to begin producing this weapon. For Van der Stoel the most serious reservation about the neutron bomb is that it obscures the boundary between conventional and nuclear arms. He also pointed out that not only the Netherlands but also other NATO partners have clear objections to introduction of the neutron bomb.

In a coalition cabinet of the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA], the PVDA and Democrats '66 [D'66], the Foreign Ministry will once again play a central role in the field of security policy and thus also in the question of nuclear arms. In recent months there has been talk of shifting responsibility from the Foreign Ministry to the Defense Ministry. Both PVDA and D'66 circles have criticized the idea of this transfer repeatedly. It is therefore assumed that in the life of the next government it will primarily be Van der Stoel who will determine Netherlands nuclear arms policy and policy with regard to the U.S. decision to begin production of the neutron bomb.

This morning no reaction to President Reagan's decision could be obtained from Foreign Minister van der Klaauw, who is still on holiday. In view of the cabinet formation negotiations, it is unlikely that he will be expressing any definite views on the matter. Government circles assume that The Hague will follow the same line as Bonn and London, namely one of clear reserve toward President Reagan's decision.

Van Mierlo Views

PM121415 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 7 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The Hague, 7 August--Mr H. van Mierlo, the probable Democratic '66 [D'66] candidate for minister of defense, is a member of the Advisory Council on Defense Questions (ADA). In the last advice offered by this council on the question of the modernization of medium-range nuclear arms (October-November 1979) he was the only member to adopt a position between the majority of declared supporters of this modernization and the minority which rejected modernization. The ADA advice was presented in the month before the NATO nations decided on the modernization of the nuclear arms with a simultaneous offer to the Soviet Union of negotiations on such arms.

Van Mierlo's view in this ADA advice was that in SALT III the negotiations between Washington and Moscow on arms including those like the Russian SS-20's and the NATO cruise missiles must begin "with NATO's express statement that the allies have already declared themselves to be prepared to allow new medium-range arms on their territory and that these systems would soon be manufactured if the question of these arms were not quickly settled."

The following clarification accompanied this statement: "To begin with, this could be achieved by asking the U.S. House of Representatives now to approve an appropriation and authorization of the money necessary for production of the arms systems.

"However, as yet no authorization should be given for production itself. This authorization could be given by the U.S. President after consultations with the alliance, if within a still to be decided period--thoughts immediately turn to the date when the protocol of the SALT II agreement runs out (the end of 1983)--negotiations with the Soviet Union have not led to any positive results. Then the allies would have to state their willingness to allow the deployment of these systems on their territory.

"'Positive results' should not only be taken to mean the final results of the negotiating process, but also the development of a situation in which the prospect of a favorable outcome would be strengthened.

"Indications of this latter possibility could be the freezing of the production and then numerical reduction of the medium-range systems on the Soviet side. Depending on the situation at the time, the West could in such circumstances begin to reconsider its decision of December 1979.

"The possibility can in no way be excluded that the West may have to introduce a certain number of medium-range systems to fill a gap in the deterrent balance.

"The option put forward here would have the advantage that the decision to introduce new arms could be dependent on a process of negotiation instead of on a unilateral decision to which the other side's reaction cannot be predicted. The possibility still cannot be excluded that a decision made by the West not to produce and introduce new missiles would cause the Soviet Union to react with the introduction on their side of new arms systems alongside the continued or escalated production of existing systems....

"It should be stressed that the Soviet Union cannot be allowed to gain one-sided advantage by delaying the negotiations. If there are any indications of this, the December 1979 decision must be implemented.

"In the form described here, this option could be characterized as a combination of determination and self-control in the sense that on the one hand cohesion within the alliance is guaranteed--an indispensable prerequisite for favorable progress in the arms limitation negotiations--while on the other hand no actions are taken which could frustrate the final goal--restraint on the part of the Soviet Union in its production of medium-range systems--but on the contrary the Soviet Union would be given ample opportunity for positive reaction."

REACTIONS NOTED TO REAGAN'S NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

Strauss Voices Support

LD121712 Hamburg DPA in German 1400 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 12 Aug (DPA)--In the view of CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss, the neutron weapon should be available to the Bundeswehr. The Federal Government said on Wednesday that it thought it unimaginable that the United States would make use of its formal legal possibility of stationing the neutron weapon on German soil without political consultation with Bonn. Leading SPD politicians again sharply criticized President Ronald Reagan's decision to construct the weapon.

In an interview to be published tomorrow in DIE WELT, Bavarian leader Strauss said that the production of the neutron weapon would make sense only "if the Americans, and in my view also the allied forces, have these weapons available under U.S. control wherever they are in danger of having to deal with massed Soviet armored units." The Federal Government's statement that the stationing of the neutron weapon of German territory was out of the question at present is, in Strauss' view, due to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's fear of his own party and of Brezhnev.

Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said in Bonn that the introduction of the weapon for U.S. forces in the Federal Republic is "a clear case for consultations." Such an introduction is not only a legal but above all a political question. It is "unimaginable" that elements of the United States forces would be equipped with new weapons without the agreement of the Federal Government, he said. He said it was unimaginable that, in such an important question, Washington would make a unilateral decision on formal legal grounds. The government spokesman reiterated that the Federal Government's attitude had not changed since 1978 when the chancellor said that the East-West balance of forces required further development of nuclear battlefield weapons including the neutron weapon.

The minister-president of Hesse, Holger Boerner (SPD), said today that the U.S. decision showed "a remarkable lack of consideration for the interests of its European allies." In a statement, published in Wiesbaden, he said that the unilateral decision to build the neutron bomb could start developments which might shake the foundations of the alliance. Reagan's decision made harder the job of everybody who is working for a lower level of armaments in the East and West.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Commentary

DW111157 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 11 Aug 81 p 4

[Dieter Schroeder commentary: "Reagan's Frivolous Decision"]

[Text] A vehement public discussion on the neutron bomb will hardly be avoidable though the Federal Government thoughtfully seeks to diminish the political fallout of the decision made by Reagan. Its political instincts must command it to act appeasingly and soothingly; for such a debate inevitably is bound to encroach also on the discussion on the counterarming and to jeopardize the government's freedom of action. Already before, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt felt compelled to link his political fate with that of NATO's dual decision. With new propaganda ammunition, the opponents of the decision more than ever will leave no stone unturned to question the Americans' will to peace and to prevent a stationing of the neutron weapons in Europe later on.

The political reasons against the decision to produce the neutron weapon now were well known to Reagan. Upon the advice of his secretary of defense the President has brushed them off the table because he does not want to give the Europeans a "veto" over U.S. defense-political decisions. The argument well befits a man who simply fires unruly air traffic controllers and who impresses his voters with doing what he had promised. In the domestic respect, Reagan thereby has won a "victory" which may enhance his popularity. But it is another question if it will benefit his foreign policy in the long run. The Europeans are aware now that it is the very conservative wing around Secretary of Defense Weinberger and not their "friend" Haig, who is in power in Washington. They also know about how this group assesses the role of the Europeans in the Atlantic alliance--namely as that of people receiving orders, who need not even be consulted.

There is no need for consultation anyway as long as the neutron weapons are not to be stationed in Europe. By leaving the issue of the stationing out of consideration, Reagan at least showed regard for the domestic difficulties of his partners. But since the weapon is suitable for deployment on the European Continent only, the Europeans must gain the impression that they simply are to be faced with faits accomplis. This can have only adverse affects on the already weakened cohesion of the alliance. Reagan wants to enhance NATO's deterrence power; but at the same time he destabilizes the alliance and the steadfastness of several European governments. Politically his decision came at the wrong moment.

Creating new rifts in the alliance is an all the more inept move since tension between the superpowers now will increase, too. The climate for arms control talks becomes more frosty and it will be more difficult to confine the negotiations between Moscow and Washington, scheduled for the fall, to the subject of medium-range missiles in Europe. Though the neutron weapons have nothing directly to do with these missiles, it is hardly conceivable that one will be able to achieve agreement in one field if ever new imbalances are being created. The Soviets will not put up with setting off their tanks against the neutron weapon, but will build the neutron bombs, too.

As can be seen from its initial reaction, Moscow likewise will not miss its opportunity to diabolize the Americans and to exploit for its own purpose--namely for sowing even more distrust between Europe and Washington--the aversion of many Europeans to a weapon considered to be immoral. Its first great propaganda success achieved against the neutron weapon will strengthen it in this intention. In 1978, President Carter postponed the manufacture of these weapons because the European governments, in the face of angry public opinion, were not willing to give him any guarantee for their stationing on their territories. He, however, connected his temporary renunciation with the hope that Moscow would honor his decision by exercising restraint in the construction of SS-20 missiles and new tanks.

This hope has been profoundly disappointed. That is why the Soviets can hardly be surprised that Reagan no longer wants to rely on their good will. Nevertheless, it would have been enough now to threaten the manufacture of the neutron weapons in the event that the envisaged negotiations will bring about no results. The introduction of these weapons should have been an ultimate step only, even more so since the required psychological preparation then would have been easier. Egon Bahr's word of the "perversion of human thinking" still has a jamming effect, though there hardly exist moral distinctions between nuclear weapons. The Soviets are denouncing the "cannibal-like instincts" of the United States, as though they were manufacturing their own atomic weapons for the arms museum only, and they are operating with the fear of "threshold," though everybody in Europe ought to know that in the case of a Soviet attack, NATO must rely upon atomic weapons in good time.

Seen from the military angle, the effect of the neutron bomb as a tank-breaking weapon may have even increased deterrence and raised the threshold of war, but regarding the political aspect, it was, above all, irresponsible.

Weinberger Interview Reviewed

DW120947 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 12 Aug 81

[From the press review on the interview granted to German television by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger]

[Text] The Duesseldorf WESTDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: The attack on Bonn by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger in which he suggests that Bonn must blame itself for the neutron bomb because of its cuts in the defense budget, is but another proof of the irritation of the U.S. Government in its dealings with the Federal Republic. The Americans and Germans are alternately disappointing and antagonizing each other. The anti-Americanism developing in this country as a consequence of a peace campaign meets with an echo beyond the Atlantic in the shape of fatigue regarding Europe together with signs of isolationism.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG makes the following comment: Washington's Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who always likes to needle, did not miss the opportunity to link the construction of the U.S. neutron bomb directly with the cuts in European defense budgets, especially that of the FRG. He should not do this so readily because just recently his colleague Alexander Haig professed the formula that the defense readiness and combat potential of NATO armies cannot be measured by figures and percentages alone.

The Kassel HESSISCH-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE declares: Secretary of Defense Weinberger lets the cat out of the bag when he says that the United States intends to evade the endless debates on the deployment of neutron weapons in Europe. His calculations in this respect are wrong, of course, because Reagan's decision has not only triggered vehement discussions on the value or lack of value of nuclear destructive potential, but has also shaken the alliance's basis of confidence.

The editorial of SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG says in part: The reaction of some politicians in our country to the news that the United States proposes to place the neutron bomb in serial production was exceeded in shrillness only by the communist East. This is understandable, if only because the current hysteria with which any strengthening of the U.S. military power is criticized in our country--military power which has been neglected for years. Naturally, all this has not escaped the attention of the Reagan administration, which thinks and acts in keeping with the motto that you cannot please the Germans anyway. Correspondingly, the White House acts with little regard for German sensitivities, including those of the chancellor. The Reagan team does not like the trend Bonn is following, and thinks that much of what is still official Bonn policy toward the East today is simply weak pussyfooting around.

FEDERAL MINISTERS NOTE BERLIN WALL ANNIVERSARY

LD121244 Hamburg DPA in German 1144 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 12 Aug (DPA)--According to Federal Minister for Intra-German Relations Egon Franke, the Federal Government will continue to utilize all opportunities to achieve an understanding with the GDR. Franke stated in Bonn today on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the erection of the [Berlin] Wall that 13 August 1961 marked the absolute low point of relations between the two German states. During the past 10 years, however, progress has been achieved in practical cooperation with the GDR, Franke said. "The Federal Government will not let itself be diverted from this policy," he said. Neither would it accept the drastic increase in the compulsory minimum exchange rate.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher described the building of the wall as "the oppressive symbol of German division"; however, the Federal Government will continue to make efforts toward overcoming the present situation using peaceful means. Despite all the differences on political and legal issues, the Federal Government is trying to achieve settlements with the Eastern side in order to make the wall more passable.

Deputy CDU/CSU parliamentary group chairman, Alfred Dregger, stated in the Cologne EXPRESS (Thursday's edition) that the GDR is profiting from its economic links with the FRG and the EEC. This should not be granted for nothing.

Since the building of the wall, the central registration office of the regional justice administration in Salzgitter has registered 115 killed at the GDR border with the Federal Republic, not counting the cases in Berlin. Apart from this, it registered 26,000 acts of violence on the GDR border and in the GDR. Among these are more than 4,000 serious cases with self-triggering firearm devices, mines and the use of firearms. Among the acts of violence were also 597 cases of mistreatment, 1,704 cases of political allegations against people, 2,585 arrests as well as 16,975 political sentences, among them 9,506 with inhuman severity.

Further Comments

LD121504 Hamburg DPA in German 1411 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Bonn/Berlin, 12 Aug (DPA)--The Berlin Wall, erected 20 years ago by the GDR was judged to be a "symbol of division" at the meeting of the Federal Cabinet on Wednesday.

Social Democratic Party Chairman Willy Brandt expressed the view in an interview with North German Radio/West German Radio that in order to reach agreement on unresolved German questions a "closer mutual approach by the Europeans in East and West" is an important precondition. Only if things change decisively between the parts of Europe over and above the practical relations which currently exist "will there be a chance that the Germans can settle their affairs differently."

The leader of the opposition in Berlin, Hans-Jochen Vogel, demanded that "superficial emotion and pathos without perspective" be foregone in connection with the anniversary of the building of the wall. Speaking to Berlin journalists, he included in this the "violins in the background" accompanying the rally to Berlin planned by the International Society for Human Rights. Manfred Schmidt, the president of the Association of Central Germans, is of the opinion that in the Federal Republic, too, it is necessary to dismantle a "wall of ignorance and indifference" toward the people of the GDR.

According to the latest official statistics of the West Berlin police, there has again been more shooting at the wall. Since August 1980, 26 cases have been registered when GDR frontier troops fired their weapons. In past years the frequency of such incidents was sometimes considerably lower. Since the building of the wall in 1961, 71 killed escapees, escape-helpers and West Berliners have been registered. There were also 112 people wounded by shots from the Eastern side.

SUPPORT FOR U.S. URGED AT LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE

DW121109 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 12 Aug 81 p 2

[Erich Reyhl dispatch: "Hard Confrontation"]

[Text] Geneva--The Federal Republic of Germany will now have to show its hand at the Law of the Sea conference. So far, the Bonn delegation in Geneva had been hoping that the United States alone would eliminate those parts of the draft Law of the Sea treaty which are also at variance with German interests. What is primarily involved are regulations on the future exploitation of the seabed and the transfer of technology.

The developing countries are now trying to isolate the United States. In their joint statement, they pretend that the United States is the only participant which wants to reopen the matter of the compromise agreement. They do admit that many other countries also disagree with this compromise as well, in particular also the developing countries, but they say that practically everyone has reconciled himself to not only making profits but also suffering heavy losses in the whole business.

In the interpretation of the Third World, the world's seas and coastal regions have already been distributed, with or without a Law of the Sea treaty. The Third World declares even now--prior to the conclusion of a treaty--that the potential exploitation of seabed resources by the United States or any other country would be "illegal." Granted, the spokesman of the group of developing countries conceded to the United States the right to stay out of the treaty, yet he said any unilateral action aimed at exploiting the seabed would be "at variance with international law." In no uncertain terms, the United States has been strictly denied any reopening of negotiations on those parts of the treaty already adopted. The developing countries wish to wind up the "costly negotiations" of many years and adopt a treaty text during this 10th meeting which is to end no later than 4 September.

Judging by what can be learned, the developing countries are serious. They have learned that the United States can be overruled without any serious consequences, despite its great political and economic weight. In their joint statement, they did not leave open any easy ways out of the hard confrontation. This is why the United States now urgently needs support from another side which wields weight internationally. This would be the European Community, for example. But since the EC, "in violation of contract," failed to come to terms regarding a common policy on the Law of the Sea, it would be up to EC members, Belgium and the Federal Republic to go on record alone if they are dissatisfied with the draft treaty. In doing so, they will take the risk of being overrun as well. This means that the German delegation is being asked to undergo a veritable test of courage.

In view of the rather unanimous position of all Bundestag parties toward the Law of the Sea treaty, it ought to be possible, however, to intervene actively in the course of events. The course has been outlined. The European Community must be mobilized even if it is already late. A Law of the Sea treaty unilaterally dictated by the developing countries could hardly be put into practice without the financial contribution of the United States (25 percent of the budget of the Law of the Sea authority) and without the contributions of the EC countries.

After all, the example of the Law of the Sea treaty shows quite clearly that even words with no legal force can very well create precedents of great political and economic weight. In the future, it will be necessary to be more careful and not reach the point where the whole thing ultimately becomes too big to handle. What remains in such cases is simply the option of rough blocking maneuvers, as shown by the Law of the Sea conference right now.

PAPERS COMMENT ON REAGAN'S NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

L'HUMANITE Editorial

PM121011 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Yves Moreau editorial: "A Dangerous Threshold"]

[Text] In announcing his decision to start manufacturing the neutron bomb, President Reagan took care to accompany it with comments aimed at reassuring public opinion. For instance, the White House spokesman said that it is an "internal U.S. affair" and that there are no plans "at present" to deploy the neutron bomb outside the United States.

Some consolation!

A new generation of nuclear weapons will start with the neutron bomb. How can anybody maintain that this does not concern mankind as a whole?

How can anybody imagine that the stocks of these bombs would remain for long on U.S. territory alone when, on the Pentagon's own admission, these weapons would be mounted only on short-range weapons such as the Lance missiles or 155mm artillery shells? Unless of course, the Washington strategists are planning a war on Canada or Mexico, it is difficult to see the point of neutron bombs which would be deployed only on U.S. territory.

Indeed, everybody knows that they are intended for a possible European battlefield.

The characteristics of these weapons are that they have only a minimum destructive effect, but have deadly enhanced radiation. In other words, they spare the buildings, industrial installations and equipment but destroy all life. This is a modern version of the famous "death ray" of science fiction novels. They are mass extermination weapons.

They are miniaturized and are highly transportable and maneuverable.

All these properties dangerously increase the ease and consequently the temptation of using them.

The neutron bombs would increase the probability of a nuclear war even more than the Eurostrategic missiles such as the Pershing II, cruise or SS-20 missiles. In other words, they would lower the nuclear threshold to such an extent that the irremediable step would be likely to be quickly taken. Moreover, even before the United States has equipped itself with the neutron bomb, U.S. theoreticians are spreading the insane idea that, thanks to this new weapon, "limited" nuclear wars could henceforth be launched. This crazy illusion is based on the scenario of a conflict in which Europe would be laid waste while America would remain an untouchable sanctuary.

According to yesterday morning's New York TIMES this is the kriegspiel dreamed of by Mr Caspar Weinberger, defense secretary in the Reagan administration. According to the hypothesis which he has just imposed, the Europeans' anxieties should in no way affect U.S. military decisions.

It will be remembered, however, that in April 1978, Mr Carter, Mr Reagan's predecessor, was forced to take account of opposition from European opinion and postpone the manufacture of the neutron bomb. Unfortunately, in France the Giscardian government immediately took over and decided to actively study the enhanced radiation bomb. At that time we stressed the full gravity of such a decision.

The decision which Mr Reagan has just taken should be energetically combatted. No weapon is more inhumane, in the full sense of the word, than the one whose production he is ordering.

No country yet has neutron bombs. Mr Reagan's initiative is aimed at breaking the existing arms balance in favor of the United States. It will undoubtedly spark off countermeasures in the Soviet Union. Thus the escalation in the death race will move a step further forward.

In this situation, France's international action should be aimed at halting before it is too late the terrible process which Mr Reagan is threatening to launch.

In order to prevent a dangerous break in the balance, why should our country not propose a final and universal rejection of the neutron bomb? Would this not be a way of starting the vital negotiation on all so-called Eurostrategic weapons and finally to move forward along the path of gradual disarmament instead of allowing the apocalypse race to be stepped up?

FRANCE-SOIR View

PM121402 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Benoit Rayski editorial: "A Political Bomb"]

[Text] At last here we have this terrible weapon which, before it was even produced, struck fear into the trembling cohorts of the self-righteous advocates of neutralism and pacifism.... Here is this weapon which, when still in limbo, mobilized such peace-lovers as Leonid Brezhnev and the marshals of the Soviet Armed Forces.... Here is this weapon whose name just had to be mentioned to draw cries of indignation from Western communist parties....

What is so terrible, abominable and atrocious about this neutron bomb whose production has just been announced by President Reagan? Nothing, except that it is American and that its effects are likely to prevent the unleashing of Soviet tanks across Western Europe (it can annihilate tank crews without destroying the equipment, and its use would not necessarily draw a nuclear response). Nothing, except that the USSR does not have this sophisticated weapon although it has so many others. Nothing, except that instead of being stamped with the red star--perfect proof for some of inoffensive moral and political purity--it will carry the stars of the American flag.

Let us make ourselves clear: The fact that the neutron bomb is American does not give it any special worth in our eyes. A weapon is a weapon. A weapon is intended to kill.... Of course, there is reason to fear that Reagan's decision could prompt the USSR to revive the arms race. But, in our view, the debate raised by the neutron bomb is such that it partly removes it from the conventional strategic-military implications dear to the general staffs. For this debate is essentially and strongly political.

Carter's decision to revoke his decision to manufacture this weapon was political; the man who was then U.S. President showed by his about-face either that he feared the Soviet protests or that he hoped for a concession from Moscow in return (he was wrong in both hypotheses). Reagan's decision to restart work on this weapon is political; the new U.S. President is thus showing his intention not to bow before the Soviet Union and his determination to challenge it if necessary (and after the invasion of Afghanistan and the deployment of Soviet missiles threatening Western Europe, this was probably rather necessary).

This is probably the most important effect of the neutron bomb. And it is by no means the worst....

LE MONDE Editorial

LD121354 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Mr Reagan's Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] The assertion made in PRAVDA this Monday 10 August that Mr Reagan's decision to start production of the neutron bomb constitutes "an extremely dangerous step" in the arms race must be wholeheartedly approved, but we must equally agree with French External Relations Minister Cheysson's reaction when he said that the U.S. decision "is no suprise" and that the United States is merely announcing what others are doing without admitting it.

In loudly bewailing the horrors of the arms race, whose future dangers and present economic consequences cannot be overemphasized, the CPSU organ merely forgets to add: "Whose fault is it?"

It is rather too easy to gloss over the past and rewrite history as it suits you. Who built up an enormous arsenal of Euromissiles which, it cannot be said too often, the Atlantic allies will at best only start to obtain in 1983? Who sent tanks to fight in Afghanistan close to the West's energy resources and vital routes? Who will pretend to believe that these Soviet challenges did not make a major contribution to Mr Carter's defeat? The latter--has this been forgotten too--openly announced in 1978 that, while having the technology to produce the neutron bomb, he was not authorizing the U.S. arsenals to use it to produce weapons.

Mr Reagan's election was the logical consequence of Mr Carter's foreign policy disappointments; the Republican President's arms program, of which the neutron bomb is, moreover, just one element, is the logical consequence of that election.

Nobody doubts that Soviet scientists, like the French and all those who have the appropriate means, are working on 'enhanced radiation' just like the U.S. researchers, under an even stronger veil of silence. Moreover, nobody can criticize them for doing so. Moral responsibility rests elsewhere, in the political decisions.

It is at this level, and not that of popular emotions, however, justified they may be, that the military powers great and small must pull themselves together. While militarism does not lead to peace, neither does pacifism. Between the two world wars the memories of the horrors of the 1914-1918 period led the democracies to follow in various forms--the Maginot Line in France, appeasement in Britain, and isolationism in the United States--policies which led straight to Munich and to the slaughter which followed. The greatest danger which could be created by Mr Reagan's decision is that it could be misunderstood in Europe, and especially in the FRG, and could encourage the tendencies toward a neutralism from which, to the French Socialist leaders' satisfaction, France is at present spared.

To avert the dangers of the present crisis--the most serious crisis between the superpowers since the Cuba affair, as UN Secretary General Waldheim rightly said--it is now up to Mr Reagan to adopt an open policy. Having shown his determination, he and the rest of the world with him have everything to gain from so doing.

PRESS ON LEFT'S ATTACK ON NEUTRON BOMB, MISSILES

AU121600 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 12 Aug (ANSA)--The issue of nuclear armaments has taken over the editorial pages of the Italian press in the wake of the two sensational developments in Rome and Washington which have shaken the country out of its traditional mid-August lull.

The Rome Government's recent decision to install a "cruise" missile base in Sicily for NATO's new-generation nuclear theater weapons and Washington's announcement that the neutron bomb was in production has completely swayed attention from local political issues.

Many newspapers today pointed out that even the pressing problem of installing local governments in the cities and provinces where elections were held June 21 seems to have fallen by the wayside in the nuclear flurry.

As Turin's LA STAMPA daily put it, "The Euromissiles in Comiso (Sicily) and the announcement about the "N" bomb is keeping politicians and party newspapers busy taking stands, analyzing and commenting...."

The nation's leftist parties and the radical party are "on the attack," LA STAMPA reported, giving the following account of their anti-nuclear moves:

The Communist Party (PCI) is demanding an emergency meeting of the Senate defense commission....

"M.P. Lucio Magri (Proletarian Unity Party) wants the lower house foreign relations commission to meet....

"Adelaide Aglietta (Radical Party) is calling on the Communists to endorse a petition for an extraordinary lower house session, which requires the support of three parties...."

The Communist response did not take long in coming, LA STAMPA noted. PCI lower house floor leader Fernando di Giulio formally asked the speaker to call the house back into session earlier than scheduled for debates on the missile installations in Comiso and the "N" bomb.

Di Giulio stressed in his request that he "may hope" that the goverenment and the other parties agreed that Parliament's summer recess should be cut short in the face of the two developments.

Yet, LA STAMPA had the impression that the focus of the debates was drifting from "the primary objectives" and moving in on "the usual target--Italian politics."

Rome's rightwing IL TEMPO daily dwelt today on the "tough" response the government coalition had to the communist protest.

"Mainly," the daily asserted, "that the West's determination to negotiate (arms limitation) has been undermined by moves necessitated by Soviet policy."

The Reagan administration's decision to build the neutron bomb, according to Rome's wide-circulation IL MESSAGGERO, has strained relations between Premier Giovanni Spadolini and the Communists.

The issue, the daily added, "is overshadowing the 'special attention' that Spadolini hoped to instill in relations with the Communist opposition."

"So much so," IL MESSAGGERO said, "that the kind words Spadolini had for (PCI Secretary Enrico) Berlinguer in a recent interview has embarrassed and worried the coalition allies."

IRAN WARNS AGAINST OFFERING BANI-SADR ASYLUM

AU121549 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 12 Aug (ANSA)--The Iranian Embassy served notice on Italy today that it would not be a good idea for this country to consider offering asylum to former President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

"We judge our friends by the way they behave towards us," said embassy spokesman (Hassan Ghadiri). "We are nice to friends, not to whom protects Iranian criminals."

"Bani-Sadr is a criminal," (Ghadiri) charged in remarks to reporters here today, "and that is why we have requested his extradition from France."

The embassy spokesman said that relations between Italy and Iran were good at present and "it was not even imaginable that the ousted president could find hospitality" in this country.

(Ghadiri) also said he had no idea of how many Italian workers were currently in Iran, stressing more than once that, however many they were, they were considered "friends" by the Iranian people "at this time."

Although Italian-Iranian relations were "satisfactory," the embassy press chief added, there was still room for improving them.

The possibility that Bani-Sadr might seek asylum in Italy was reported in the press as his own idea shortly after his flight to Paris.

"If France gives Bani-Sadr back, relations may return as before," said (Ghadiri); "otherwise, they'll precipitate even further."

According to the diplomatic press officer, Bani-Sadr was in league with "terrorists," did propaganda against the revolution, and was plotting to overthrow the Islamic republic "for which we had more than 70,000 martyrs."

The proof (Ghadiri) provided that Bani-Sadr was in cahoots with "terrorists" was that he fled Iran in the company of leftwing guerrilla leader (Massud Rajavi).

"(Rajavi), like Bani-Sadr, is a criminal," exclaimed the spokesman. "That he should find asylum in a civil country is inconceivable."

"France better give him back immediately," (Ghadiri) warned, "otherwise we'll stop acting like friends."

CDS PARTY LEADER COMMENTS ON POLITICAL SITUATION

Press Interview

PM101130 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] In statements made to DIARIO DE NOTICIAS yesterday, [Social Democratic Center Party (CDS) Chairman] Prof Freitas do Amaral denied that the CDS is prepared to accept a Social Democratic Party single-party government, as we stated in reports published in yesterday's edition. We transcribe those statements below:

1--It is not true that the CDS is prepared to accept the formation of an exclusively Social Democratic government, which it would support in parliament. That hypothesis has never been debated in any party body and is directly ruled out by the nature of the Democratic Alliance, which, moreover, is a government coalition.

2--The statement that the CDS regards as "collaborationists" its members who are in the government and that it is not prepared to "take up arms" for them is untrue and unjust. The CDS has always formally expressed its esteem for the members holding posts in the current government, as well as for the activity which they are carrying out, and maintains full support for each and every one of them.

3--It is untrue that the CDS National Council made any suggestion in Aveiro about the government's resigning. An official communique with an entirely different purport which is common knowledge emerged from that meeting.

4--It is true that there neither has been nor is any "rapprochement" with Belem Palace on the part of the CDS or its chairman. But is is untrue to say that there is an atmosphere in the CDS favorable to the resumption of close relations with the president of the republic or a strong current which advocates ending the guerrilla warfare; first, because there has been no guerrilla warfare and, second, because nobody has yet proposed in any party body the possible alteration of the policy which has been pursued in relation to Gen Ramalho Eanes.

5--I deeply regret that one or more CDS members have apparently made the above-mentioned statements to DIARIO DE NOTICIAS--a newspaper of recognized prestige and impartiality--thus causing it to publish gross errors. Next week I will order an enquiry to discover those responsible.

6--In view of the distrubing evolution of the political situation and the increasing multiplication of false reports and unfounded speculations, I intend to make a public statement in the next few days on the CDS' stance on the current political crisis.

Editorial note--DIARIO DE NOTICIAS reaffirms that the report published on its front page yesterday was based on statements made to a journalist of this newspaper by a prominent CDS personality, and so we confine ourselves to recording with due prominence the clarification made by Prof Freitas do Amaral.

TV Statement

PM120852 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] Freitas do Amaral said on television yesterday that it is not surprising "that the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] should adopt no stance now on the prime minister's retention or replacement, since that problem, as was the case with the prime minister's appointment last December, rests essentially with the Social Democratic Party [PSD].

And in connection with this viewpoint, the Christian Democratic leader added: "The Portuguese people did not take this view. Ramalho Eanes' victory compels us, of course, to respect him as president of the republic until 1985.

In an address which was previously announced and awaited with great expectation in political circles, since it would constitute the disclosure of the Christian Democrats' stances on the current situation--following their Executive Committee's meeting--the CDS leader also stated that his party "remains prepared--as since the beginning of the crisis--to seek with its Democratic Alliance partners in the spirit of sincere cooperation which has always existed among them all the solutions most capable of eliminating the causes of the crisis and of paving the way for a new stage of hope and tangible achievements, for the benefit of the Portuguese people."

Causes which, moreover, the Christian Democratic chairman set out--"Resolution of the PSD's crisis; reconciliation of the government with the parliamentary majority; cabinet reshuffle; redefinition and dynamization of the Democratic Alliance and relaunching the political activity of the government and the democratic alliance"--ranking them and suggesting that "the resolution of the current crisis [words apparently dropped in newspaper] on the above-mentioned five points.

First, the CDS chairman recalled the circumstances which led to the setting up of the Democratic Alliance, stressing that at that time "the political situation in Portugal was characterized by the existence of a socialist and communist leftwing majority in the Assembly of the Republic, by a succession of presidential governments, by a collectivist economic and social system, by a constitution with a Marxist tenor which was marked by the democratic system's subordination to a nonelected body of military tutelage, by local government dominated in most municipal councils by the Socialist Party and the PCP, by a strategy of confrontation between Lisbon and Madeira and the Azores, by an economic policy of reducing citizens' purchasing power and, last, by a foreign policy composed of ambiguities and unclear in its commitment to the West."

He added: "It was against all this that we rose up and it was in order to offer the Portuguese people a new policy--emphatically democratic, modern and European--that the PSD, the CDS and the Popular Monarchist Party decided to combine their efforts in a joint blueprint which was aimed not merely at sharing out and exercising power; but to transform society, rebuilt the state, secure full democratization of the system and offer the Portuguese people better living conditions."

And after stressing that "the Portuguese people understood the message and endorsed the blueprint, citing as proof of this viewpoint the Democratic Alliance's victories in the 1979 and 1980 legislative elections, Freitas do Amaral, while acknoweledging that Democratic Alliance is undergoing a difficult crisis," asserted, however, that the reasons which led to that coalition's formation remain.

He emphasized further: "Certainly, none of our voters wishes to return to the socialist and communist majority or to the presidential governments, or to maintain the Council of the Revolution, the economic backwardness, the social injustices or the uncertainty about Portugal's position in the world."

Regarding as a prime cause of the current difficulties "the events which deeply affected us in December 1980," Freitas do Amaral also said that "the defeat of General Soares Carneiro and the victory of General Ramalho Eanes are having negative repercussions on the implementation of the blueprint put forward to the electorate by the Democratic Alliance."

He said: "When we witness today the Council of the Revolution's fourth veto on the law on the public and private sectors; when we observe the exasperating slowness of the revision of the constitution, and when we watch with concern the crisis in which the two largest Portuguese democratic parties are struggling, perhaps we realize better how essential victory for General Soares Carneiro was to democracy and to the Democratic Alliance's blueprint."

However, it does not compel us to agree with him or to support him. At the institutional level, the president of the republic is a state body with which it is necessary to cooperate; at the political level, General Ramalho Eanes is not an ally of the Democratic Alliance but an opponent."

He continued: "I have never advocated nor do I advocate any institutional guerrilla warfare. But neither will I fail to criticize the president whenever I deem that criticism just and opportune."

Democratic Alliance Has No Valid Alternative

After citing what he regards as "the principal causes of the Democratic Alliance's current crisis" and without failing to emphasize that "it would be dishonest on our part to omit mention of the Democratic Alliance's own mistakes, which, however, have been made," Freitas do Amaral asserted that the CDS regards the current ruling coalition "as a lasting solution which must not end in 1981 and should not expire in 1984." "In our opinion," he added, "the Democratic Alliance is a natural alliance and has no valid alternative in the country. The CDS is therefore wholeheartedly in the Democratic Alliance--for good times and bad."

At another point in his address, Freitas do Amaral said that that those who "prophesy that if the electoral prospects were bad for the Democratic Alliance, the CDS might detach itself from the Democratic Alliance" are mistaken, stressing that his party is in the coalition "in order to win, but will not desert it if it loses," then dwelled on a matter "in which the CDS cannot take part"; that is, "in resolving the PDS's crisis." "And it cannot because it must not," the centrist chairman emphasized.

He said: "That crisis is a private problem of the PSD in which nobody outside should interfere, whether it be the other parties or the president of the republic."

Within this context, however, the Christian Democratic leader, after expounding his party's stance on the prime minister's retention or replacement, stressed that "the issue of a possible search for alternatives to the current government and its prime minister can only be considered, at least in the first place, by the Democratic Alliance's majority party."

Posts of Greater Importance

As an epilogue to his statement, Freitas do Amaral declared himself to be "as committed as at the outset to the Democratic Alliance's blueprint and determined to struggle for its strengthening and dynamization." "I have sought to help resolve the crisis," he said, "with the utmost loyalty, and therefore vigorously reject any occusations of conspiracy or similar, which have not the slightest foundation and are offensive in themselves."

And after asserting that "it would be the last straw at a time when the president of the republic is meeting with former ministers of Salazar, if I could not meet with former ministers of Sa Carneiro," and also before expressing a final wish "that the Democratic Alliance will be able to surmount rapidly the difficulties which it is experiencing in order to devote itself wholly and exclusively to urgently resolving the nation's major problems," Freitas do Amaral stated:

"The Democratic Alliance is something which is too important to be discussed merely among two or three people; we are all needed to resolve its crisis."

And he continued: "As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to consider, within the framework of the overall resolution of the current crisis, the possibility of holding in the near future a post of greater importance in the Assembly of the Republic or in the Democratic Alliance's coordinating structure, if that is deemed advantageous for the Democratic Alliance itself. However, I am anxious to state that I have no demand for posts or people to put forward, just as I had none in December 1980, either."

DENMARK

JORGENSEN EXPLAINS NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE VIEWS

PM130757 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 3 Aug 81 p 2

["Viewpoint" article by Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen: "The Nuclear-Free Zone Debate Must Not Isolate the Nordic Countries"]

[Text] Part of this summer's political debate has revolved around the deeply serious problem that continued nuclear rearmament poses for mankind. The debate became particularly heated when we discussed this problem at the Socialist International meeting in Bonn in July. The debate here in Denmark has especially concerned the role of the Nordic countries in nuclear arms trends.

The Nordic countries are nuclear-free and wish to remain so. The debate on a nuclear-free zone therefore has not come about as a reaction to a wish for the introduction or production of nuclear arms in our countries. No one cherishes such a wish, not even any of the nonsocialist parties in Denmark. Thus it would be superfluous to discuss the situation in the Nordic countries in isolation.

A nuclear-free zone including the Nordic countries as well as other countries and areas connected with it, is, however, a new and important idea. But this would only be of interest if it could cover areas in both the East and West in a reasonable and balanced way. Such a zone would represent a concrete step in the direction of nuclear disarmament in Europe. On the basis of our experiences in the Nordic countries, we believe this would be a positive development for the countries involved and for the detente process as such. And what is good for the Nordic countries could also be good for Europe.

During an official visit to Finland the press put to me the question of making the Nordic countries into a nuclear-free zone. It was in this context that I said that I could not be bothered to discuss the question in that way. What the question is really about is to extend the Nordic nuclear-free zone to larger areas of Europe. And at the same time I said that this is only of interest if such an extension embraces both sides of the line that divides Europe. In its usual way, LAND OG FOLK misunderstood this statement. Since then the paper has quoted me at regular intervals as having said I could not be bothered to discuss nuclear-free zones, and the paper "forgets" to add what I also said--that the question should be seen in a broader European context. This has been the government's policy the whole time.

Some critics of the government's policy on this question--on both our right and left--consciously single out either one or other of the elements contained in the government's position.

A polemic which has only one of these elements as its point of departure is without value. Indeed it could be harmful for our endeavors to achieve results, for it will be interpreted as if we are trying to separate the problems from reality. The government is not playing cat and mouse in international power politics. It must, therefore, be with the greatest possible sobriety and realism that we demonstrate openness toward any possibility of detente, no matter how small.

We cannot create detente alone, but we can perhaps make a contribution which would lead us away from a trend which could otherwise mean the destruction of the human race. Therefore we will not abandon the idea that the Nordic experience of nuclear-free status could contribute to the solution of the problems in a broader context.

Our region has not been beset by major crises or episodes which have been an immediate threat to peace. This is why it is an obvious thought for us that a more restrained role for the nuclear powers in larger areas of Europe could be an advantage.

I admit it could be difficult to extend the nuclear-free area. So far there has been no success in removing nuclear arms from the areas where they have been deployed. We also know that the Soviet Union is still producing and continuing to deploy SS-20s. A new missile every 5 days.

From the military viewpoint, strategy in both East and West rests on the nuclear arms' supposed detterent effect. This is what we call the balance of terror. Some people think this is the best we can hope to achieve. They think it is unrealistic to make attempts at arms reduction by means of extended nuclear-free areas.

After the meeting of the foreign affairs committee on 21 July 1981, the Danish liberal and conservative parties issued a joint statement which almost put a gag on the government and the Social Democratic Party. They want to make the subject taboo. The same parties claim the government has altered its foreign policy. If this is the case, it is remarkable that they have not voiced these views before now, for what we have been saying corresponds closely with what we have always said, including what we have said in answer to questions from Folketing members.

If we are not to live in the shadow of the balance of terror forever, we must consider how best we can reduce the importance of nuclear arms. Why should the experiences of the Nordic countries not be able to contribute to this?

Unfortunately we are still a long way from being able to do away with nuclear arms. We must make do with welcoming each endeavor to limit nuclear rearmament and perhaps even endeavors to reduce stockpiles. For this the government is of the opinion that talks, debate and good will are needed. By good will I mean we must take each other's views and motives seriously. Otherwise talks are meaningless.

Good will is not irreconcilable with each side's adoption of the self-defense measures it considers necessary. The government continues to attach the greatest importance to NATO. This alliance serves the dual purpose of preventing acts of war and promoting the detente process. For this reason, during the whole of the period of its membership in NATO, Denmark has always supported negotiations on arms limitation and disarmament with a view to achieving balance and stability at the lowest possible level.

It is this policy we want to continue and develop. In the field of nuclear arms, the SALT and TNF negotiations are of great importance. The question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries can therefore be seen in the context of these. In the imminent TNF negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union we will hopefully be given a clarification of the superpowers' positions on the question of halting nuclear rearmament in Europe.

The rest of us who will not be participating directly in these negotiations must make use of all the opportunities we have to ensure the broadest possible foundation for the negotiations. Thus when the Soviet Union's president makes statements which can be interpreted as willingness to discuss nuclear arms on Soviet territory too, it must be right to test the scope of these statements. The signals that have come have not been uniformly unambiguous, but it cannot be a matter of indifference that the seemingly most positive signals have come from the president himself.

Let me stress that it must be up to the Russians themselves to make clear what it is they mean. There can be no question of Nordic-Soviet discussions on this issue. A nuclear-free zone as the government envisages it is not only an affair between the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union. That the Soviet Union is in agreement with this is shown by the fact that the Soviet Union has all along contemplated a nuclear-free zone guaranteed by the nuclear powers. Thus is it is not only the zone, but also the debate about it, which must be seen in a broader context.

PARTICIPATION IN NATO NAVAL EXERCISE VIEWED

PM121547 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Norway and the Naval Exercise"]

[Text] Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg will undoubtedly find broad political support in Norway for the view that Norwegian naval vessels should not take part in naval exercises with South American vessels or in their waters, and also that NATO ought not to undertake any extension of the alliance's geographical area of responsibility. But it is a lot harder to understand why Norway is not taking part when our most important allies--Danish, Dutch, British, West German, American and French--will meet in the late summer and fall for a naval exercise just off our own coastline. We are dealing here with a comprehensive exercise stretching over many months and over large areas of sea and which is of the greatest importance for the forces and the waters involved in the defense of Norway.

Important considerations in respect of our allies, the effects on Norwegian public opinion and of the interpretations in Moscow mean that the government must be extremely careful not to give the impression that Norway is attempting increasingly often to find the minimum solution for its involvement in NATO cooperation--as in the nuclear-free zone affair--or that we take part as much out of consideration for the interests of others as for our own. It is this latter impression that is reinforced when the defense minister says Norway's "no" to the exercise is meant as a warning to our allies, primarily the United States, not to extend the NATO area.

Norway is by no means alone within NATO in its opposition to an expansion of the geographical area of responsibility, which is not actually a current policy, but we will win little or no understanding from our partners if we are opposed to individual countries in NATO having military involvements outside the NATO area. Not only the United States but also Britain, France and to a certain extent West Germany do this--especially in the areas around the Middle East, where vital Western economic and political interests are at risk. Norway too would be hard hit if, for example, oil supplies from the Middle East to Western Europe and the United States should break down. And it is difficult to see the logic when Norway--as Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland did in a speech in Oslo in May--even expresses its opposition to countries which involve themselves outside Europe also meeting in small groups to discuss their policies.

We have similar difficulties in seeing the connection when Defense Minister Stoltenberg links Norway's refusal to participate in the naval exercise with disagreement over North-South policy, as was expressed at the Ottawa summit this week. It is quite clear that in its first 6 months the Reagan administration has been relatively dismissive of the idea of negotiations between the world's large and small nations on a "new economic world order." But is this to have any real influence on our security policy cooperation with the United States? Should we for this reason refuse to take part together with our allies--whom we need as much as they need us--in exercises off the Norwegian coast less than a year after we agreed on the contingency stockpiling of U.S. military materiel in Norway? Today Norway, NATO and the United States face security policy tasks that are sufficiently difficult for us not to make more difficult by mixing issues that should be treated separately.

BRUNDTLAND MAINTAINS OPPOSITION TO NEUTRON BOMB

PM121029 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 10 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] "The Norwegian Government has opposed neutron weapons in the past. This view, which has won broad support in Norway, remains unchanged," Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA in commenting on the U.S. decision to begin production of the neutron bomb.

The prime minister said it is important now for all parties to give the highest priority to negotiations covering nuclear arms in Europe, and therefore not to do anything that could make these negotiations more difficult.

"We have informed the U.S. Embassy directly of the points I have mentioned and have stressed our conviction that negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe must be the most important consideration and that we view anything that could upset the possibilities of such negotiations' starting with the greatest concern," Prime Minister Brundtland said. She also expressed the fear that it could now turn out to be more difficult to get such negotiations started after Reagan's demarche. The prime minister did not want to comment when she was asked if the government intends to take any steps to protest the U.S. decision.

The government was informed of the U.S. decision Saturday, and Gro Harlem Brundtland said one would have expected such an important decision to be announced and discussed in greater detail than was the case.

Per Hysing Dahl, chairman of the Storting Defense Committee, said the decision to produce the neutron bomb is a U.S. affair. "We must get to know more of the background to this decision and, together with the Americans, assess how they see these arms being deployed. If the United States sees neutron arms being deployed in Europe, then it is clearly a question for NATO and its member nations," Hysing Dahl said.

DEFENSE CHIEF QUESTIONED ON USSR BALTIC EXERCISE

LD121734 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] The commander of the Swedish Defense Forces, Lennart Ljung, thinks antagonisms and confrontations will increase between the big powers during this decade. In an interview in DAGENS NYHETER, Ljung sees the increase in military exercises as an example of this. Ljung does not regard the Soviet naval exercise underway in the Baltic as exceptional, although there is uncertainty in Sweden so far about its purpose. According to Ljung, the number of ships involved is capable of a fairly big, geographically limited attack, but not of a landing. Jari Lumikero reports from Stockholm:

[Lumikero] The period of detente in the seventies is now over; in the eighties we can expect considerably tougher stances, antagonisms will increase, and so will confrontations between the big powers on various issues. These are theses put forward by the commander of the Swedish Defense Forces in an interview granted to DAGENS NYHETER. According to Ljung, the aggravation of tension is also to be seen in an increase in military exercises. Increasing military forces must be exercised and they must also be displayed as a demonstration of power. Commander Lennart Ljung notes that the Soviet naval exercises in the Baltic (?have) a target for comparison, for a big NATO exercise is underway in the Atlantic.

As regards the Soviet naval exercise in the Baltic, Ljung does not regard this as exceptional in any way. At least so far. At this stage the Swedes do not know what kind of exercise is ultimately to be held here. Its nature may become clear only later. According to Ljung, some 50-60 ships are on the move, which is as many as in the exercises of the Warsaw Pact's Baltic fleet some 3 years ago. The difference now is that this time only Soviet vessels are taking part in the exercise; they have (?gathered) in the Baltic from the Black Sea, the Far East and the Arctic. Most of the vessels taking part in the exercise belong; however, to the Baltic Fleet.

Three years ago a landing exercise was held, and General Ljung thinks this time they may want to exercise various units, ships and artillery to coordinate, which will be needed "some time, somewhere" as Ljung says.

The Swedish Defense Forces have to some extent increased their readiness on account of the Baltic naval exercises. Planes and warships were transferred and a naval visit to Britain was reduced to half of what was planned.

What would the fleet gathered in the Baltic be capable of in military terms? To this question by DAGENS NYHETER, the commander of the defense forces replies: It would be capable of a fairly big, geographically limited attack, but not of a landing. For this, reinforcements would be needed, of which we have not yet seen any sign, Ljung says.

ULLSTEN STATEMENT ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE PRAISED

PM120956 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 7 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Zone Debate"]

[Text] It did some good for Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten in a statement Thursday to make it clear that the current debate on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is oversimplified because it does not even describe the difficulties connected with reaching a situation in which negotiations with the superpowers would be possible.

Ullsten also deserves some recognition because he, unlike Olof Palme with his sweeping statements, made it clear that the possibilities of disarmament are today unfortunately small and that we should rather accustom ourselves to the idea of rearmament.

On its news pages Thursday, SVENSKA DAGBLADET was able to report that Permanent Under Secretary Leif Leifland will travel to Moscow on 9 September at the invitation of Deputy Foreign Minister Igor Zemskov. It is, as Ullsten quite rightly said, a routine visit. Since there are no regular contacts between Sweden and the Soviet Union at a higher level, meetings like this take place for orientational talks.

The Riksdag has instructed the government to conduct informal discussions with the other Nordic countries on the zone question. This fixes the framework for the government's authority.

Talks of the type we are dealing with here cover both Swedish-Soviet questions and international questions in general. Within this framework we cannot escape the fact that Sweden has declared its interest in hearing the Soviet Union's clarification of what its own commitments would be in the event of the establishment of a nuclear-free zone. In a much-reported statement in SUOMEN SOSIALDEMOKRAATTI a while ago, Leonid Brezhnev said the Soviet Union did not "exclude the possibility of discussing other questions (than guarantees), including measures affecting our own territory in the areas bordering on the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries."

It is natural that during Leifland's visit Sweden should try to gain a clear picture of what the Soviet Union is contemplating, if this is possible.

Sweden is a nonaligned nation. There could never be any question of a settlement with one of the superpowers. The informal talks Ullsten had a few days ago with his U.S. counterpart, Alexander Haig, once again stressed the negative U.S. attitude and Washington's concern that the debate on the zone question will make the coming U.S. negotiations with the Soviet Union on medium-range missiles more difficult.

Copenhagen and Oslo have taken note of this. One cannot, of course, expect the most vociferous advocates of the zone in Sweden to do so. However, responsible politicians, like Ullsten, should.

NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE DEBATE SEEN COOLING

PM121458 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 Aug 81 p 2

[Axel Waldermarson "Political Perspective" article: "The Zone--Back to the Rules?"]

[Text] It could be time to stem the debate on the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone, which flared up recently. The time is suitable precisely because the meeting of the Socialist International in Bonn a few weeks ago in fact acted as a watershed, although this may have been unintentional. In both Denmark and Norway the and question, which in these countries constitutes political dynamite of unusual force, is in the process of returning to normal. At the same time proposals have been made which are an alternative to the call for unilateral Nordic measures and which also facilitate greater support for the two countries' NATO involvement and give further urgency to the zone question.

Norwegian opposition leader Kaare Willoch has formulated the alternative in the following words: "Thus the nonsocialist parties have stressed that we do not want such a treaty between the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union. On the other hand we could be party to a treaty between the NATO nations and the Soviet Union."

It is primarily the contradictory statements by prime ministers Anker Jorgensen (Social Democrat) and Gro Harlem Brundtland (Social Democrat) in connection with the talks in Bonn which have made the international's meeting a watershed.

The two prime ministers' statements led to demands at home for unambiguous clarifications. Have the Social Democrats in the two countries broken the foreign and security policy truce which has existed for some time now? Are the two parties on their way to setting a course which would finally lead to departure from NATO?

Let me begin with Denmark, where the conservatives and the liberals put Anker Jorgensen on the spot and demanded a special session of the Folketing--if what was happening really was a change of course in security policy. However, a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee was enough.

Jorgensen explained to this committee that his government had no plans at all for a Danish initiative in the zone affair. From the prime minister's statements the conclusion was drawn generally that the Social Democrats will in the future continue to pursue foreign and security policy in harmony with the conservatives and liberals.

Former foreign minister and Folketing speaker K.B. Andersen also warned in a statement against pursuing the zone question as propaganda against the only security policy alternative Denmark has- NATO.

However, the split in the party remains. Folketing member Jytte Hilden from the party's leftwing has called on the party's rightwing to enter into an open debate on the zone question. In reply, K.B. Andersen said this would hardly be fruitful since Hilden wants Denmark to leave NATO and there is no alternative to attachment to the Western defense alliance. In any case the two factions will meet eye to eye when the Social Democratic Folketing group meets on 11 August to discuss security policy.

In Norway the zone question is discussed the whole time with the immient Storting election and the Labor Party's record-low opinion poll figures as background. It is also difficult to find any othe rparty or any other government that has found itself caught up in so self-destructive a security policy debate as the Labor Party and the Harlem Brundtland government.

What the party sketched in the spring, ministers are now free to discuss--even in Moscow. The government is under constant attack from the leftwing faction, which appeals to the pacifist groupings that have been strong traditionally in the party. At the same time there is always the nucleus in the party which mounts a strong guard on NATO membership and views with concern every attempt to soften this up.

The meeting of the full Storting Foreign Affairs Committee on 21 July was, however, less dramatic than had been expected. It became clear that there was broad agreement that any future negotiations on the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone must be pursued within NATO and as part of NATO's disarmament negotiations with the Soviet Union. By all accounts the government gave a clear undertaking that there can never be any question of bilateral negotiations between the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union. Willoch had every reason to be satisfied.

However, this does not mean that the government has gagged itself or chosen passivity. But the zone question has been completely subordinated to the coming superpower negotiations. The prime minister stressed this most recently on Thursday in ARBEIDERBLADET. At the same time she emphasized that the zone question is not about an isolated unilateral solution but would have to involve counterconcessions within the framework of a broader European solution.

However, the Labor Party is still faced with the problem of closing its ranks. But it can stand its youth organization's loud lamentations.

Of course it is bad enough that Anders Aune (Social Democrat)--former Storting representative and now provincial governor in Finnmark, which borders on the Soviet Union--has indicated in a newspaper article that the Labor Party deputy chairman, Minister of Church and Education Einar Forde, is no longer following the party line after his recent visit to Moscow but is really striving to bring Norway out of NATO.

However, it is even worse that Ambassador Jens Evensen, just as he did on the question of EEC membership, is taking no account at all of his party and on his own initiative has now declared that he is willing to draft the text of a treaty for a Nordic zone. The text could be a bomb in the election campaign.

The otherwise clumsy Soviet diplomacy has been both smooth and successful on the zone question. The Labor Party's strategists were playing a dangerous game when they believed that a softening of Norwegian attitudes was not particularly dangerous since the Soviet Union would nevertheless not be able to agree to its territory being affected by a Nordic zone. However, with his statement in SUOMEN SOSIALDEMOKRAATTI, Brezhnev has given them something of a dilemma despite his noncomittal wording.

The crux of Brezhnev's statement is as follows: "The guarantee not to use nuclear arms against the zone in the prime and undoubtedly most important commitment the Soviet Union is willing to make. But it does not exclude the possibility of discussing other questions, including measures affecting our own territory in the area bordering on the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. The Soviet Union is prepared to discuss such questions with interested nations."

Will not the alternative--negotiations through NATO--gradually come to seem to the Soviet Union more constructive than reliance on public opinion, which flares up quickly but also cools just as quickly?

LEADERS', PRESS REACTIONS TO NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

Papandreou Opposition

NC121527 Athens NEWS in English 12 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] Opposition leader Andreas Papandreou last night issued a statement condemning the Reagan decision to go ahead with a neutron bomb buildup.

Mr Papandreou stated that the stockpiling of neutron bombs is a new, extremely dangerous option for the course of mankind.

The decision, stated the head of PASOK, is based on a vital misassumption--that the neutron bomb could be used against conventional Soviet forces in Europe, without leading to an immediate and total nuclear confrontation between the two superpowers.

"A limited nuclear war is unthinkable," declared Mr Papandreou. "Undoubtedly the neutron bomb is being produced for use on the European Continent and it is indicative of the role which the United States has laid out for Western Europe, that the nations of Europe were not even informed of the developments which concern the survival of their peoples."

The statement goes on to stress the U.S. decision has immediate consequences on world peace, adding that nuclear disarmament talks, particularly concerning nuclear weapons in Europe, have been torpedoed by the U.S. decision while encouraging at the same time immediate arms buildup.

"The government of the United States must be made to understand by the leadership of the Western European nations, that they will not tolerate neutron bombs on their land, even if the U.S. persists in its decision and proceeds with the production and stockpiling of the bombs, despite the international outcry. This obviously is the duty of the Greek Government as well," he said.

Meanwhile, according to reliable sources a demonstration took place outside the U.S. Embassy in Athens last night protesting the Reagan administration's neutron bomb decision.

Press Reactions

NC122057 [Editorial Report] The Greek press on 11 and 12 August carry comments on the U.S. decision to produce the neutron bomb as well as reaction to this decision from both Western Europe and the Eastern bloc, particularly from the Soviet Union. However, none of the Greek progovernment papers--with the exception of AKROPOLIS of 12 August--offer any comment on the neutron bomb.

The 12 August edition of AKROPOLIS carries in its "Laconic" column a comment headlined "Prudence Must Prevail," saying that undoubtedly all this noise about the neutron bomb causes fear, but we all knew that we would arrive at this point since wars have never ceased. The paper adds: "While we were reading for many years that the arms race had never stopped, that huge amounts were spent on the Pershing and cruise missiles, that fighting was raging in Lebanon, Israel, the Persian Gulf or in Afghanistan--we should not have cherished futile hopes that we would not end up with the neutron bomb." In conclusion, the paper stresses: "At this crucial phase, with world war III hovering over us, prudence must predominate in the judgment of the leaders of the great powers before a total nuclear disaster marks the end of the world."

The 11 August edition of the liberal paper TO VIMA reports that the Political Bureau of KODISO--Party of Democratic Socialism--issued a statement on 10 August stressing that "U.S. President Reagan's decision to proceed with the production of the neutron bomb causes justified uneasiness among the world public and Greek people."

The KKE paper, RIZOSPASTIS, on 11 August reports on its front page a statement by KKE Secretary General Florakis--presumably made on 10 August--condemning the neutron bomb decision and adding that the U.S. decision is directed against Western European countries, which will be destroyed or sacrificed in the event of a nuclear war. Florakis' statement concludes: "We call on the government of our country--if it is even slightly sincere with its declarations about peace--to condemn the U.S. decision. Thus, it would not again lag behind other Western European governments which disassociate their position from and criticize the new criminal action of U.S. imperialists."

The pro-KKE-Interior paper I AVYI of 11 August carries on its front page a statement by the KKE-Interior Central Committee released on 10 August stating that President Reagan's decision "constitutes an extremely dangerous action on the part of U.S. imperialism that increases the danger of nuclear disaster for all of mankind, thus leading to a new arms race, although the people have been demanding detente and disarmament." The statement condemns the decision and calls on the Greek Government "to denounce this escalation, bearing in mind that Europe will definitely be the first victim in the event of a showdown between the superpowers, just as the first reaction from many European countries shows."

The leftist paper ELEVTHEROTIPIA of 11 August comments on "the neutron provocation" and states that foreign governments should not have been surprised because if the Reagan government had not proceeded with this action it would have been betraying itself. The paper adds that the West European countries of NATO rightly protest because they have been disregarded by the "leading power." The paper says that European military experts have disclosed that the neutron bombs will be used in Europe in order to strike at vital Soviet targets. It stresses: "Thus, the U.S. Government intends to have them in Europe, whose opinion it even refuses to seek, as if Europe were its protectorate."

In a frontpage editorial headlined "Decisive Reply," RIZOSPASTIS of 12 August describes the great catastrophe that the neutron bomb can cause and adds that Western Europe is awakening and that governments and every political power are called upon to make responsible decisions. The paper stresses: "The New Democracy government, being incapable of adopting a bold stand of resistance to the pressure by the cold war circles and being a captive of its own policy, states that it will study the question and will give its reply 'in due course.'" The paper concludes by stating that the people throughout the country have protested against the criminal Reagan plan from the very beginning, and that they will continue their struggle in order to foil the criminal plans of U.S. imperialism.

In a comment entitled "Insanity" I AVYI of 12 August states that although millions of people living in the countries of the Third World have been dying of starvation, huge funds are spent on the arms race in order to achieve military supremacy, which is being sought by U.S. imperialism, which has suddenly decided to produce the neutron bomb. The paper stresses: "Whatever the excuse is for the bomb and regardless of the angle from which one would view it, it is clear that this decision bears the seal of either callousness or insanity."

CONTINUATION OF IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER VISIT

Meeting With Ulusu

TA121131 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yasin Ramadan, who is currently in Ankara on an official visit, has begun his contacts. The visiting deputy prime minister was received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu this morning.

In a statement during the meeting, Ulusu said that Turkey wishes to further develop relations with Iraq. Ulusu noted that work is being done to develop the relations between the two countries in accordance with the instructions by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and Iraqi President Saddam Husayn. Pointing out that Turkey also wishes to entertain good relations with all the Islamic countries in the Middle East, the prime minister said: Working for the establishment of peace in the Middle East is an inevitable goal and task for Turkey as well as for the sake of world peace. On this subject, we are waiting for the early solution of the Palestinian problem. Turkey will exert every effort both as an individual and within the Islamic Peace Committee in a bid to secure a just, urgent and comprehensive solution to the Iran-Iraq war, which we have been following with sorrow for a long time. We are at the disposal of the two neighboring, friendly and brotherly countries regarding this matter.

In his statement, Ramadan said that Iraq wants to further advance the relations between the two countries and serve as an example to Third World countries. Noting that all the foundations are present for the establishment of good relations between the two countries, the Iraqi deputy prime minister stated that the good relations between Turkey and Iraq would include not only the two countries, but all the other countries in the region as well. Referring to the war between Iran and Iraq, Ramadan said: We would like to point out that we have no desire whatsoever for Iranian soil. The war has been continuing for 11 months. Even if it continues forever, unless the Iranians admit and acknowledge our rights, we must continue the war. Ramadan added that Iraq is ready to cooperate with all the good will delegations working to put an end to the war between the two countries.

The meetings of the joint Turkish--Iraqi economic and technical committee also began at the Foreign Ministry with the participation of the Turkish and Iraqi delegation respectively headed by Ulusu and Ramadan.

In a speech before the meetings, Ulusu noted that Turkey attaches great importance to the friendship and cooperation with Iraq. He continued: I would like to point out that within NATO--in which Turkey as a member with the aim of providing maximum guarantee for its foreign security--Turkey does not follow a bloc policy. Turkey exerts efforts to prevent a complete break in the process of detente despite everything and Turkey always gives priority to the interests of the region.

Ramadan said that Turkey and Iraq share common interests and that the measures that can safeguard these interests in the long term must be taken. The talks between the Turkish and Iraqi delegations are expected to end today. A protocol in the fields of trade, natural resources, oil, transportation and culture is also expected to be signed between the two countries at the end of the talks.

INA Report

JN121140 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1030 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Aug (INA)--Taha Yasin Ramadan, Revolution Command Council [RCC] member and deputy prime minister, met here today with Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. The Iraqi official praised relations between the two countries, expressing confidence that the two neighbors truly desire to promote these relations in the service of their interests.

Ramadan said the promotion of these relations will positively affect relations among the countries in the area. The first deputy prime minister said Iraq wishes that Muslim Turkey would play a more advanced role with regard to the Palestinian issue.

Alluding to the recent Zionist attack on Iraq's nuclear installations, Taha Yasin Ramadan said this act is further proof of the Zionist entity's desire to extend its attacks to the entire area. He asserted that the only thing that can deter the Zionist entity is the cohesion of the states in the area of which Turkey is an important state.

Dealing with the Iraqi-Iranian struggle, Ramadan said Iraq's stand is firm on regaining all of Iraq's rights and ending the war imposed by the Iranian regime. He reiterated that Iraq does not covet Iranian land and that it will not give up its legitimate rights even if the war goes on for several years.

Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu praised relations between the two countries, stressing the need to promote them to the fullest. He pointed out that his country is endeavoring to establish peace and security in the Middle East area, for these are two inevitable matters for the world at large. He said Turkey aspires to finding a solution to the Palestinian problem. He added that his country will exert efforts either unilaterally or within the framework of the Islamic good offices committee to find a just and lasting solution to the Iraqi-Iranian struggle, asserting his readiness to proceed with this step should the two countries approve.

In another development, Tayih 'Abd al-Karim, RCC member and oil minister, met with Turkish Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol and Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk to discuss bilateral relations and the means to develop these relations in the economic fields. Ramadan and his delegation arrived here last night on a visit of several days to Turkey.

The Turkish side was led by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and included Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol and Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk.

Addressing the session, Ramadan said that Iraq is ceaselessly working to increase its cooperation with Turkey in all fields, asserting that the two countries' capabilities and resources are complementary and can positively affect the entire area. He added that Iraq is working to draw up solid foundations for long-range integrated cooperation so as to establish permanent confidence and reassurance between the two neighbors.

The deputy prime minister reiterated Iraq's principled and firm position toward ending all problems among countries through negotiations and mutual understanding, pointing out that Iraq is sincerely working to end the Iraqi-Iranian struggle through peaceful means and without harming Iraq's historical and national rights over its land and waters. He said that upon Iran's recognition of Iraq's legitimate rights, Iraq will withdraw from the Iranian land on which the Iraqi Army is positioned.

Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said his country attaches great interest to Iraq's development, for this affects Turkey. He pointed out that the establishment of peace in the area would greatly benefit world peace and security. He stressed the need for ending the Iraqi-Iranian war, adding that his country will continue its endeavors to this end.

Ulusu Gives Dinner

TA122038 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that a new phase has opened in Turkish-Iraqi relations and that important and hopeful steps have been taken in connection with the future. Ulusu gave a dinner in honor of Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yasin Ramadan, who is on an official visit in Ankara, at the Prime Ministry this evening. In a statement at the dinner, Ulusu noted that the cooperation between the two countries has greatly developed in recent years and added that Turkey's exports to Iraq, which was $10 million a few years ago, is expected to reach $500 million this year. Noting that despite the speedy development of Turkish-Iraqi cooperation, the two countries have not fully exploited the existing opportunities, Ulusu said that the highway and railway connection between the two countries are insufficient, and that direct communication has not yet been established. Ulusu added, however, that great steps hopeful for the future have been taken.

PAHR CRITICIZES DECISION TO BUILD N-WEAPONS

AU131232 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1049 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Roland Machatschke interview with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr--recorded, date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Pahr] Austria's basic attitude toward armaments in general and toward nuclear armament in particular also applies to the neutron bomb. However, in our opinion the production of the neutron bomb marks the beginning of a new, very regrettable and very dangerous development, a development that amounts to a new step toward a new arms race. Indeed we have already reached a point where qualitative armament is more important and more dangerous than quantitative armament. We are confronted here with a new weapons system that will undoubtedly lead to new weapons system on the other side too. And thus all endeavors to bring armaments under control have been foiled. As to the dangerousness of the new weapon, I think there is no need to go into detail.

[Question] Mr Minister, would you then say this new U.S. decision has dealt a serious blow to detente and that thus the talks due to be held some time or other--especially on disarmament in the medium-range missile sector and on the SALT II agreement, which the United States still has not ratified, and on a potential SALT III agreement, that is, agreements concerned with strategic nuclear arms limitation--would you say all this is now virtually doomed to failure?

[Pahr] It can be said at any rate that the decision to produce the neutron weapon is a blow to the endeavors to continue the policy of detente, because the whole policy of detente would fundamentally cease to be credible if new weapons systems were constantly developed. I would not like to say a priori that all endeavors to halt armament have been foiled by this move, but they will at any rate become much more difficult. Certainly the armaments problem must be viewed as a whole, and if new weapons systems are developed, armaments will simply shift to another sector. We have seen that already in the case of SALT, where attention was concentrated on intercontinental weapons while the Eurostrategic weapons, the medium-range missiles, were disregarded. As a result, we are faced today with the problem of the medium-range missiles.

[Summary] Laenderbank director general Vranitzky yesterday announced that his bank was no longer willing to finance recovery programs for the ailing Eumig electric appliances and metal goods company, which has incurred losses totaling 2.1 billion schillings since 1978. Vranitzky said insolvency proceedings for the company are unavoidable. The company still has about 3,000 people on its payroll. Vice Chancellor Sinowatz said he regrets the bank's decision since numerous jobs will be endangered. He declared that the government will make every effort to support at least a partial continuation of production and subsidize projects aimed at providing alternative jobs for the workers.

EGON BAHR WARNS ON RETURN TO 'STRENGTH' POLICY

LD131106 Hamburg DPA in German 0729 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Hamburg, 13 Aug (DPA)--SPD politician Egon Bahr has warned against a return by the Western powers to a policy of strength. In an interview with NORDDEUTSCHER RUNDFUNK today, Bahr recalled the behavior of the Western powers after the erection of the [Berlin] wall 20 years ago. "Those who today again talk about a policy of strength must find it strange" to remember that "both the Western powers and, more particularly, the Federal Government were made to eat humble pie" even though Western military superiority was then far greater than today.

Bahr described the behavior of the Western powers in the following terms: "It took 36 hours to persuade the allies to send a few patrols to the sector border. The Berliners felt abandoned. Another 72 hours passed before the capitals of the three Western powers issued a fairly mild protest in Moscow." At the time, the specific interests of the Germans had been ignored, because "the three powers felt our rights are not in jeopardy."

According to Bahr, the result of the wall is that it is no longer sufficient "to invoke our rights and to make proclamations," but if we want to make the wall more penetrable the Federal Government cannot avoid "discussing this with those who hold power, and in this cast it is the GDR Government."

Referring to his planned talks with GDR politicians in September, Bahr stressed he would talk about the range of problems pertaining to arms control. The objective is not that Bonn and East Berlin should play a preparatory role for the superpowers. Bahr said: "It would be sufficiently interesting and important if the two German states were to uphold their interests, become aware of their interests and defend them with regard to their respective leading powers."

DIE ZEIT ARTICLE ON NEUTRON WEAPONS ISSUE

DW131329 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Theo Sommer article: "Muscle or Tact?"]

[Text] It was just what the harassed West European NATO members needed--for Ronald Reagan to dig up the neutron weapon again and thus additionally complicate the counterarmament debate, which is difficult to begin with. It will not be just in the Federal Republic alone where such an extra push is bound to excite the agitated minds even more. Even those people in this country who do not have any criticism regarding the object of the decision are shaking their heads at its justification, and particularly at the timing of the decision and the manner in which it was announced.

In any event, most of the common arguments against the "neutron bomb"--in reality, missile warheads for the Lance missile and shells for NATO howitzers--might as well be forgotten.

First, neutron weapons are definitely "more humane" than the 6,000 tactical nuclear weapons stockpiled in the Federal Republic right now (quite apart from the fact that tactical weapons with low power already develop more neutron radiation than explosive force). All things being equal, neutron weapons would, in case of hostilities, not only cause less destruction to buildings, bunkers and vehicles, but would also claim fewer human lives.

Second, the contention that the introduction of the neutron weapons would lower the nuclear threshold cannot be proved. Rather, there is every indication that the categorical difference between conventional and nuclear weapons would remain even with lower detonation ratings.

The danger of an escalation up to a nuclear clash between the United States and Russia can never be removed; any use of nuclear weapons, even tactical weapons, would conjure it up. The idea that nuclear war could be "localized" remains absurd. This is why the argument that neutron bombs make nuclear war feasible cannot convince anybody.

Third, it cannot be denied that neutron weapons, which above all threaten the aggressor's armored forces, may well help prevent a war. The value of deterrence is enhanced because a weapon destroying primarily Soviet armor is a more reliable deterrent than a weapon which first of all devastates the defender's territory. A potential aggressor may well believe that he will not get anywhere with his aggression, and, therefore, will prefer to forget it from the outset.

More Emotion Than Analysis

Let us not hesitate to state how matters stand. The excitement of the neutron critics stems from emotional insecurity rather than from a clear analysis. The broadsides of Soviet propaganda cannot be taken seriously anyway. After all, every week the Russians deploy one SS-20 missile whose three warheads have an explosive force 20 times that of 1 neutron weapon (for Lance missiles, 380 warheads have been envisaged, as have 800 shells for the artillery). As far as the much-abused differentiation between human beings (who are killed) and material which remains undestroyed is concerned, this likewise applies to the thousands of chemical weapons which the Soviets have stored in their arsenals, which are also stockpiled with their troops in the GDR and which they have repeatedly tested in large-scale exercises. In Moscow, the tricks of agitation and propaganda are supplanting analysis.

Consequently, the actual problems caused by Reagan's decision must be sought elsewhere in the military sphere, on the one hand, and in the psychological-political sphere on the other.

CDU defense expert Marx says that neutron weapons are "classic defensive weapons." But can we be so sure about that? The Soviets have been working on neutron weapons for a long time (as have the French, by the way). The West will not retain its monopoly for long. But once both sides have the new war implement, the defender will lose his advantage and might even be at a disadvantage. After all, the defender must inevitably concentrate at fixed points and along specific lines. His defense positions would be just as vulnerable to radiation weapons as would the aggressor's armored spearheads. An aggressor who would like to ensure that his armored spearheads can break through under any conditions would probably not shrink from a preventive strike against the places where neutron weapons are stockpiled. In the end, the balance of terror would merely be shifted to a higher, more costly level--and would be much more unstable than before.

It is probably time anyway to again ponder the basic problems of the theater nuclear forces. What good does a "gradated deterrence" do if it just means the escalation of any conflict to the nuclear Armageddon? On the one hand, would any U.S. President really be prepared to use weapons against a Soviet tank advance of 20 kilometers into West Germany if this use might spell the American nation's annihilation?

On the other hand, when U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger nonchalantly states that the neutron weapon helps in view of the balance of 47,000 East bloc tanks against 12,000 NATO tanks, even the FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE, which is above any suspicion of idea that "the neutron weapon is for swarms of tanks as DDT is for flies."

There is still something else. The scene has changed fundamentally since April 1978 when Jimmy Carter decided to discontinue the production of neutron weapons (which an embarrassed Federal Government at the time succeeded in transforming into a decision to continue production of the individual components, but not to assemble them for the time being.

Since then, the new equipping of the Bundeswehr has started which will fill up our arsenals with 100,000 antitank weapons alone, and the development of modern precision arms has made tremendous progress. We do not need the neutron weapons for antitank purposes just as the Israelis did not need them in the Yom Kippur war of 1973 when they stopped 1,200 Syrian Russian-made tanks on the Golan Heights with one-hundredth of the combat strength which the West has in Central Europe, and at an affordable cost. One neutron weapon costs as much as 50 antitank missiles.

Symbol of Disturbed Relations

Thus there are conventional alternatives. They are also adequate, for there is no danger of war in Europe today. The degree of readiness of the Eastern armies is low and their reliability is dubious. In view of the fermentation process in Poland, Brezhnev could not sound the bugle for an attack against NATO even if he wanted to.

What remains is the psychological, political and diplomatic aspect of Reagan's surprise coup. Let us leave aside the fact that what the President did was merely make a production decision--and at the moment the new weapons are not supposed to come to Europe, what Reagan orders to be produced in the United States is, in fact, his own business. However, where should the neutron weapons be stationed if not in Europe? What this inevitably adds up to is this: For the weapons to be, stationed here, further information will not suffice, nor will any superficial consultation; what is required is the concurrence of the countries where deployment is planned.

This is a foregone conclusion. Should it not also have been self-evident that the allies shouldn't be surprised--especially the most important ally in this particular case, the Federal Republic--with a thunderbolt out of the clear blue sky? Ever since the days of erratic Jimmy Carter, the neutron weapon has seen the symbol of troubled German-American relations. When U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger once again brought up the subject in February, his colleague in the Cabinet, Secretary of State Haig, passed the word to the allied governments that they should not worry about it; when Helmut Schmidt was in Washington in May, he was told that the matter was not topical. Is that the way a President deals with allies whom he promised more consultation and cordial cooperation?

Fear of the Arms Race

Reagan has taken Weinberger's side against Haig. He should not be surprised if on this side of the Atlantic the fear now prevails that an uninhibited arms race will now begin with Europe as the primary victim. He should not be surprised if the question is loudly raised as to whether he really knows how to set priorities--counterarming in the medium-range sphere first, and then we will see what happens--or whether all that matters to him is gesticulating. He should also not be surprised if the military-industrial complex in Moscow takes the Washington decision as a mere pretext for increasing the arms spiral even more.

The neutron decision is an ersatz action. It cannot gloss over the fact that so far Reagan and Weinberger have not made one single concrete strategic decision--they propose to solve their defense problems with money, but they do not know how. The decision cannot make people forget that they do not have any arms control concept except conservative skepticism of all efforts toward disarmament--all they want is to arm; more, more, more. They are the victims of a fatal mistake. They consider a lack of tact the proof of muscle.

Ultimately they will in this way strengthen the very anti-American and blindly pacifist resentments in the old world which they, after all, propose to counteract. That's all that Helmut Schmidt needed--and the Dutch, the Belgians, the Italians and the British as well.

MORE REPATRIATES, AMBASSADOR ARRIVE FROM IRAN

LD121920 Paris Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Summary] The Iran Air Boeing from Tehran carrying 50 French people being repatriated from Iran landed at Orly Airport 2016. Just as those who were in the first group repatriated on Monday, they are all surprised about the fuss being made about them. Also on the aircraft was French Ambassador Guy Georgy, recalled for consultations by Francois Mitterrand. There now remain about 30 French people in Iran, 4 of whom are at the French Embassy.

Ambassador's Statement

NC131626 Paris AFP in English 1436 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 13 Aug (AFP)--Guy Georgy, France's ambassador to Iran, said today that the situation in Iran was "extremely tense and extremely violent", and the slightest incident could turn it into drama. Mr Georgy, who returned to Paris yesterday with the second and last group of French people flown home from Iran, was speaking in support of the repatriation.

Asked during a French television station [as received] whether the evacuation was really necessary, he said the French nationals' safety had been threatened by the instability of authority in Iran. Sudden actions could be taken by the mullahs after a passionate Friday sermon in a mosque, he said.

SOVIET TECHNICAL EXPERT SEEKS ASYLUM IN FRANCE

NC121126 Paris AFP in English 1047 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Aug (AFP)--The head of the Soviet scientific station on the French-ruled Indian Ocean islands of Kerguelen has asked for political asylum in France, the External Relations Ministry announced here today. Vladimir Sankowich would be able to take advantage of a French law of political refuge, the ministry said.

France has sovereignty of the Kerguelen Archipelago, in the southern part of the ocean. By agreement, the Soviet Union has a weather research station there, manned by nine engineers and technicians.

Mr Sankowich applied for asylum on August 6, the day before a Soviet vessel was due to arrive to take him off.

Mr Sankowich is the second Soviet civil servant to seek asylum in France in two months. At the beginning of July, Alexievitch Plechakov, a diplomat attached to the UNESCO Secretariat and a specialist in oceanography, was granted asylum.

PAPERS COMMENT ON REAGAN'S NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

LE FIGARO Article

PM131452 Paris LE FIGARO in French 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "The Supreme Tactical Weapon"]

[Text] The production of neutron bombs poses no difficult scientific, technical or industrial problem, but it nonetheless has a strategic significance which must be realized and political implications which must be foreseen.

Let us recall that it is an "enhanced radiation weapon" (ERW) characterized by a reduction in the heat and blast effects which it would produce for the same kilotonnage and an increase in the radioactivity effects. This warhead can be fitted to ordinary 155 or 203-mm artillery shells, and President Reagan has explained that it will be fired by 8 inch guns. In short, it is a weapon which causes little collateral destruction but which on penetrating armor and fortifications can decimate enemy forces' personnel. Furthermore, a strike involving neutron bombs can be envisaged very close to any friendly troops since the safety margin which the latter have to comply with is smaller than in the case of an ordinary nuclear bomb.

This is why the neutron bomb has essentially been devised for the destruction of concentrations of armor. Consequently, its advocates have always described it as an essentially defensive and tactical weapon; to such an extent that two of the most famous of them--the American Samuel Cohen and the Frenchman Marc Geneste--have reached the conclusion that the defense of West Europe can solely be ensured exclusively be a more or less deep curtain of neutron bombs with would neutralize any offensive by enemy armor like a new Maginot line.

In any case, belief in the effectiveness of neutron weapons against armor was sufficiently general to convince us during our initial talks with representatives of the Reagan administration in February 1981 that the U.S. administration would soon decide to have them built.

The first conclusion which can be drawn from this is that, President Reagan's decision to stockpile neutron bombs on U.S. soil cannot be deemed final. Obviously, it is a question of diplomatic caution with respect to NATO countries, whom the United States has already found very difficult to persuade on the deployment of Pershing and cruise missiles on their soil, decided in December 1979, and who fear that an increasingly large number of nuclear arms at the sole disposal of the U.S. President is to be stockpiled on their soil.

If it really is a question of effective weapons against tank offensives, these weapons must be concentrated where such offensives could theoretically take place, that is, on European soil. Their transfer from one side of the Atlantic to the other at a time when everything would largely be over would hardly make sense.

It should be added that the hypothesis is mentioned to justify the building of neutron bombs, namely the hypothesis of a large-scale general tank offensive, is questionable to say the least.

In fact, why should the potential enemy, that is, the Soviet Union, engage in exactly the type of conflict expected from him and willingly expose his tanks to action by U.S. "enhanced radiation" weapons especially designed to destroy them?

Public opinion in Western countries should be the more heedful of these question, since it has now been sensitized to the problem posed by the Soviet SS-20 missiles. One of the features of those missiles, which are the most effective--that is, the most accurate--anti-personnel weapons known, is that they are able to destroy with one or two salvoes the main body of NATO military structures and conventional forces, including the depots in which some 7,000 U.S. tactical weapons have been stored in Europe. If you take this threat seriously, it is quite clear that any territory could be occupied following such preemptive launchings, which would be aimed first of all a concentrations of guns fitted with "neutron bombs."

The conclusion that can be drawn from all this is that the U.S. administration is gradually turning onto a path which all general staffs throughout the world are urging on political leaders, that is, a solution which can make a "nuclear war," that is, a conflict in which nuclear arms would support conventional forces, plausible, rational and winnable; on the assumption that the superpowers would forgo the use of their strategic nuclear arms which enable them to destroy each other as if by committing collective suicide.

Another, probably more comforting, observation must be made. The decision to build neutron bombs has followed the decisions not to ratify the SALT II agreements and to deploy Pershing II and cruise missiles in Europe, prior to starting the production of B-1 bombers, MX missiles, and, possible, new antimissile systems. Therefore, it could lead to a general renegotiation of an agreement on arms limitation in which the United States would talk--or would believe that it was talking--from strength, with the Soviet Union giving up the idea of entering so many races simultaneously.

Obviously, France could only be in favor of such a resumption of dialogue between Moscow and Washington, provided it doesn't limit its freedom to develop is own forces. The president of the republic has confirmed the decision made by his predecessor to continue the tests of enhanced radiation weapons, either with a view to developing a tactical weapon which could be utilized in the same way as the present tactical nuclear arms--as an integral part of the strategic deterrent and as a preliminary to it--or with a view to developing a new generation of strategic arms. Be that as it may, the reason for France's decision to continue its tests is different from the reason behind the U.S. decision simply because France's strategy is different from that of the United States since it implies a national nuclear deterrent against any aggressor instead of the prospect of nuclear war.

L'HUMANITE Views

PM130852 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Aug 81 p 7

[Article by PCF Central Committee Secretary Gaston Plissonnier: "No to the Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] On the 36th anniversary of the Nagasaki tragedy President Reagan announced the U.S. decision to manufacture the neutron bomb. The neutron bomb is designed as a battle-field weapon. Its characteristics as a miniaturized tactical weapon justify its use, in the imperialists' eyes. It will therefore increase the risk of a nuclear war.

The neutron bomb, whose aim is to kill people, should make possible a limited nuclear war on the European Continent, in the U.S. leaders' view. Europe would thus be the hostage of U.S. strategy. The manufacture of the neurton bomb would mean a formidable revival of the arms race whose burden weighs so heavily already. Reagan's decision is unacceptable.

It will be remembered that, 2 years ago, Carter was forced to abandon such a plan in face of indignant world opinion. Today a vast protest movement is emerging throughout the world against President Reagan's recidivism.

We communists are anxious to make our contribution to anything which safeguards peace and preserves life. We will step up our initiatives to do so.

We consider that France can, by its action, help to curb this fearful course by proposing, for instance, a final and universal renunciation of the neutron bomb.

Wisdom and good sense show that France, throwing all its authority into the service of peace, could make an effective contribution to the necessary arms deescalation in which security for all would be guaranteed at each stage of the reduction in forces and arms.

LE MATIN Editorial

PM131305 Paris LE MATIN in French 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "A Cold War Logic"]

[Text] "The most effective deterrent against overwhelming Soviet superiority in infantry and tanks in Europe," according to U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, and "mental aberration," according to German SPD expert Egon Bahr--the neutron bomb, with which President Reagan has decided to endow the U.S. Army, is continuing to keep polemics alive. It has led to a profound change in the strategic concepts on which the balance of forces between East and West has been based. How can you decide who is right: Those--the experts, diplomats and political leaders--who believe that it represents the best way of deterring the Soviet Union from any ground intervention in Europe, or others of the same kind who, however, take the opposite view, believing that it renders the use of nuclear arms more likely? The neutron bomb is like Mr Prudhomme's sword--it can be used just as effectively to maintain peace as to make war. However, have all nuclear arms not played such a role in the balance of terror for the past 30 years?

Therefore, tactical considerations seem of almost secondary importance in view of the symbolic significance of the U.S. President's decision. It is quite obvious that what it means is that the policy of detente has come to an end and will probably not be resumed for a long time to come. A policy which, as a result of a series of international events in recent years--from the entry Soviet troops into Afghanistan to the deployment of SS-20 missiles in East Europe and U.S. Pershing II missiles in West Europe and including the breakdown in SALT negotiations between the United States and the USSR and U.S. plans for selling arms to China, not forgetting Poland, whose situation has created an additional and permanent factor of psychological tension--has become a mere memory.

It is true that the detente-global nuclear deterrent tandem has not prevented regional conflicts from multiplying during the two past decades. It is even possible to take the view that in the Cold War era the two big powers confronting each other were naturally inclined to stick to their positions whereas detente may have, as it were, encouraged the Americans and the Soviets to seek to extend their zones of influence since both sides were virtually insured against the risk of an extension of any marginal conflict. But at least it must be said to its credit that detente averted, a priori, any direct confrontation between the United States and the USSR. President Reagan's gesture seems to signify that he believes that this chapter in world history has not been concluded, that the kind of hot peace which has hitherto prevailed no longer seems to him acceptable and that he has readopted the Cold War Logic. Henceforth, speeches on disarmament can only be deemed tantamount to empty words or hypocritical statements--Cold War logic means arms race.

L'UNITA DESCRIBES BERLINGUER KOMUNIST INTERVIEW

PM121027 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 1 Aug 81 pp 1, 14

[Text] Belgrade--The League of Communists of Yugoslavia's weekly KOMUNIST carries a lengthy interview with Enrico Berlinguer on the Italian situation and the PCI's strategy.

With reference to the Italian crisis, within the framework of the international crisis, Berlinguer states that it has taken on the structural and political traits of the complete exhaustion of the ruling class and the kind of economic development and social order that have existed for the past two generations. This decline is manifesting itself in tragic and disturbing ways. There is a combination of negative economic and social phenomena--both inflation and recession, a balance of payments deficit, increasing numbers of young people, women, elderly people and inhabitants of southern Italy being excluded from productive work.

If we pass from the "structure" to the "superstructure," Berlinguer points out, we notice that an acute ideological and cultural crisis is underway; that there is a fall in political intensity, though the level in Italy is still higher than in other capitalist countries; that corruption is spreading in the governing parties and in public life; that the governing parties' power, patronage and electoral mechanisms are growing, causing serious harm to the efficiency and prestige of the state bodies and the public administration.

Next, the party secretary general explains that all this indicates a crisis not at all in the institutional order of the state, but in the kind of political relations based on anticommunist discrimination that brought about what Togliatti called a "lame democracy." Hence the need for a democratic alternative. It is inconceivable to govern in Italy today, that is to resolve the huge problems assailing it, without a bold and rigorous policy of regeneration, without ending what we have called the DC's power system, which is supported by its government allies. Broad masses of people and even business circles now find incomprehensible the insistence on solutions that are still contained within the closed circle of parties that have been in the government over the past decade. Since the DC and its allies have shown their inability to lead a process of moral reform and regeneration of the state, it is up to the PCI to act as the driving force behind, and major guarantor of, a new government embracing the best forces of Italian democracy.

With regard to the latest government solution, Berlinguer points out that the non-DC prime ministership constitutes a novelty but not yet an innovation. The novelty lies in the fact that the continous succession of DC premierships has been broken.

The Communists were the first to fight for it--steadfastly, and alone at first. But there has been no innovation, because to date it cannot be said that the arrival of a non-Christian Democrat has sparked off a turnabout with respect to the past. In particular, Berlinguer identifies a number of contradictions between the desire and aims announced by the present prime minister and the specific demands and conduct of the governing parties, as well as the existence of conflicts within the majority, already.

A large part of the interview is devoted to the historical sources, formulation of theory, political strategy and internal characteristics of the PCI. In particular, he said: As far as the formulation of policy and theory are concerned, the points that they have reached are fairly well known, with regard to matters concerning new internationalism, the autonomy of the various communist and workers parties, the different paths to socialism, the relationship between democracy and socialism, freedom of culture and research, pluralism, and so forth. While it is necessary to further extend our study on these points, we are also trying to tackle with greater involvement other issues that have forcefully emerged from the developments in domestic and international, social and political life. I could cite the following for instance: the problems of disarmament; the problems of the new international economic order and, in connection with them, of the social structure and lifestyles of the advanced capitalist countries; the problems of the relationship between planning and a market; the problems posed by the advance of the womens' emancipation and liberation movements; and the problems posed by the increasing phenomena of isolation, especially in the major urban areas.

Other topics broached in the interview include the bond between the party and the people, the swing to the left in France, internal party democracy and relations with the Yugoslav comrades.

POPE RECOVERING, EXPECTED TO LEAVE HOSPITAL

AU131547 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Aug (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II has successfully completed his post-operative hospitalization, according to a medical bulletin released by the pontiff's doctors today.

The bulletin, the twenty-ninth since the pope was shot in the abdomen on May 13 in St Peter's Square, said that the pope "no longer needs hospital care".

His convalescence, however, will last "at least until the end of September, after which he can gradually resume all his normal activities", his doctors forecast.

Despite his complete recovery, the pope will not leave the hospital today as had been announced previously.

Vatican spokesman Father Romeo Panciroli said, however, that "starting tomorrow, any day is good".

It is believed that the pontiff will finally leave the hospital tomorrow morning.

The pope's doctors have ordered him not to appear in public or grant general audiences until September 30. He has been given permission to take walks and even swim in the pool at the papal summer residence at Castelcandolfo, about thirty miles south of Rome.

GOVERNMENT SAYS IRANIANS SEIZE BOATS IN CADIZ PORT

LD140832 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] The Diplomatic Information Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has issued a note in which it explains the attack yesterday on the tugboat Salazon based in Cadiz. Apparently, the attackers were people of Iranian nationality who had hired the vessel for a pleasure trip round the bay of Cadiz. They destroyed the communications equipment on board and forced the Salazon's skipper to come alongside a boat that turned out to be one of the three Iranian boats that had been in the military port of Cadiz since 7 August.

The note from the Diplomatic Information Office ends by saying that once the incident was discovered, units from the navy and air force immediately put to sea to locate the Iranian boats, observing that two of them had anchored in Algeciras and a third had entered the port of Tangier.

AZADEGAN Claims Seizure

NC140951 Paris AFP in English 0946 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Aug (AFP)--A Paris-based Iranian opposition movement today claimed to have captured three French-made gunboats bound for Iran.

The claim was made by the "Iranian Liberation Forces" (Azadegan) group in a telephone call to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE, shortly before news came from the Spanish Foreign Ministry that at least one of the three vessels had been seized.

All three captured gunboats are now at Casablanca, according to Behruz Kia, spokesman for Azadegan, which claims loyalty to Iranian General Nehram Aryana.

"A commando of three armed men, members of the forces of liberty, on the morning of Thursday, August 13, captured the three gunboats, which are now in Casablanca," Mr Kia said.

(The Spanish Foreign Ministry announced today that its aircraft had spotted one gunboat heading for Tangiers and two others moored at Algeciras, southern Spain.)

The Azadegan spokesman said at least two of the vessels had been captured in international waters off Gibraltar, but would give no details on the fate of the third. He refused to give details of the operation.

He also revealed that an Azadegan member yesterday flew a plane from Iran to Oman, without giving any details about the aircraft.

(An Iranian military plane with 16 people on board yesterday touched down in Oman despite a refusal by Omani officials to grant permission to land, according to reports from Manama.)

The Azadegan spokesman said his movement had gone over to the offensive in action against the Teheran government. "I am virtually certain there will soon be a general uprising against the government of (Ayatollah Ruhollah) Khomeyni," he added.

He also said that Gen Aryana, former chief of the Iranian imperial army, had left Paris three weeks ago to lead insurgents near the Iranian border.

DENMARK

SOCIAL DEMOCRAT LEADER CRITICAL OF NEUTRON PLANS

PM131317 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 11 Aug 81 p 2

["Viewpoint" article by Lasse Budtz, Social Democratic foreign affairs and defense committee chairman: "The Nuclear Arms Race Has Been Escalated to the Detriment of the Missile Negotiations"]

[Excerpts] No matter how you look at President Reagan's decision to begin production of the neutron bomb, there can be no doubt that it is a new escalation of the nuclear arms race. The Social Democratic Party is opposed to any furthere development of nuclear arms, just as all our sister parties are. It might be correct, that in a purely technical sense it is an internal U.S. matter, since the President has announced that the neutron bombs will be stockpiled in the United States, and that requests will not be made to have them stationed in any European country. Nevertheless it remains doubtful whether one can really assert that it is exclusively a U.S. affair.

First, everyone knows that the neutron bomb is not being produced for use in the United States but for use in combatting a possible tank attack in Europe.

Second, we know that production of such tactical nuclear arms may rightly give rise to suspicions that the so-called nuclear threshold is being lowered and that certain circles in Washington are considering the possibility of a limited nuclear war in Europe--a possibility numerous experts both in the United States and Europe dismiss as absurd.

Third, it is obvious that a decision at the present time on production of the neutron bomb damages the imminent negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States on limiting the deployment of medium-range missiles in Europe--a problem that became important when the Russians began to mass-produce and deploy the completely new, long-range, multi-warhead SS-20 missiles.

We have not only the Kremlin's not-unexpected words to demonstrate that the negotiation climate has been worsened by Reagan's decisions we know this from no less a person than U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

In his discussions with the President and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger before the decision was made, Haig declared, according to U.S. sources, including the New York TIMES, that production of the neutron bomb would have serious consequences for U.S.-European relations, that the Europeans would have the feeling that the United States would be ready to fight a nuclear war, but on European soil, and that the decision was particularly unfortunate in a period when there was growing opposition in Western Europe to the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles on European soil.

Both Reagan and Weinberger have said that it is not the Europeans who will decide, and that the Europeans do not have the right of veto over U.S. arms decisions. This would seem to be confirmation that the U.S. President wants to pursue a U.S. and not an allied or Atlantic foreign and security policy. If this trend continues, it would be unavoidable that it would damage the relationship between the United States and Western Europe.

The decision to begin production of the neutron bomb also clearly affects the possibilities of detente. Thus it is not only an internal U.S. affair. Any action that increases tension is our business too. And in addition there is the absurd dimension that in the opinion of many military experts the neutron bomb is perhaps not strategically necessary at all.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE Editorial

PM131014 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 11 Aug 81 p 8

[Editorial: "The Neutron Bomb"]

[Excerpts] It was already clear after the strongly emotionally charged discussion in 1977-78 on the so-called neutron bomb that the last word had not been said. Now President Reagan's decision to produce a certain number of neutron warheads for short-range missiles and artillery will set off the debate again.

The logic behind the U.S. decision is unassailable and the U.S. right to make this decision is indisputable. Soviet superiority in tanks has grown even stronger in the last few years, and neutron weapons, with their radiation effect, are a peculiarly effective response. It would be less logical if the neutron warheads were to remain in the United States, for it is in Europe that there is a use for them. But while the U.S. allies in Europe neither can nor want to attack the U.S. right to produce and stockpile them, the Europeans of course have the final say concerning their deployment in Europe.

There is a parallel here to the similarly heated debate on the decision about the U.S. medium-range missiles. It was not forced on the Europeans by the United States, but arose from European worries about the lack of missile balance in Europe as a result of the deployment of the Soviet SS-20 missiles. These worries were expressed most clearly in a speech in 1977 by Federal Chancellor Schmidt.

The debate onthe neutron bomb gives the impression that this weapon is worse than other nuclear arms. But the effects of all nuclear arms are terrible. The extremely vehement Soviet reaction is easily explained as the expression of anger that the Soviet Union's tank superiority, achieved through enormous spending, will to some extent be neutralized. The moral indignation is pure hypocrisy.

The fear of nuclear war on the other hand is genuine, and it is felt in both the East and West. But the neutron bomb is not a suitable weapon of attack, while the tank is. The U.S. decision could help make a nuclear war in Europe less likely--provided that the Western Europeans do not endanger their alliance with the United States by opposing it in condemnatory terms and allow the Russians to confirm and strengthen their military superiority.

SOVIET DEPUTY TRADE MINISTER ARRIVES

LD132124 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1900 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] The first deputy minister of foreign trade of the USSR, N.D. Komarov, arrived this evening on a 5-day visit to Finland. During Minister Komarov's visit an agreement will be signed between Finn-Stroi of Finland and the Soviet side on the contract for the second and third stages of the Kostamus mining company. Minister Komarov will meet President Urho Kekkonen Friday.

BRIEFS

USSR BORDER TRADE--Border trade between Finland and the Soviet Union has grown favorably. Last year's trade amounted to about FM430 million and this year it is expected that a total value of over FM480 million will be reached. This was noted at a meeting of the border trade working group of the Finnish-Soviet economic cooperation commission, which ended in Helsinki today. The growth of border trade is partly due to the fact that the Soviet Union has extended the area of the border trade. [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 13 Aug 81 LD]

COAL DELIVERY--The biggest coal shipment ever brought to Finland--nearly 43,000 tons--arrived in Inkoo today on the Norwegian vessel Nordvard, which is the biggest coal ship ever to visit Finland. The American coal is to replace the Polish coal deliveries which have lately been suspended. [Text] [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 13 Aug 81 LD]

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS BY TURKS

NC131113 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has instructed the Cyprus UN permanent representative, Mr Mavrommatis, to lodge a protest with UN Secretary General Waldheim on the airspace violations of the Republic of Cyprus by Turkish military planes on Tuesday, 11 August. At the same time, the Foreign Ministry's director general, Mr Pelayias, summoned Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, to his office to protest the violations.

North Reaction

TA132002 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Minister of Interior, Foreign Affairs and Defense Kenan Atakol has said that Turkish planes can fly in the skies of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus whenever they want. He was replying to reporters' questions about the complaint lodged with the United Nations by the Greek Cypriot administration about the so-called violation of Cypriot airspace by the Turkish planes. Atakol said: Only the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus is responsible for the skies of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. We are responsible for our seas and our skies. Turkish planes will fly in these skies whenever we want and they will carry out every kind of military exercise. No one has the right or authority to complain about this or to say anything about it.

Atakol stated that the complaint lodged by the Greek Cypriot administration was a new example of the long-lasting and antiquated Greek Cypriot policy of not seeing the realities.

MITSOTAKIS, ROLANDHIS MEETING TO STRESS CYPRUS

NC120854 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 12 Aug 81 p 1

[Athens correspondent report]

[Text] The Greek Government considers the Turkish proposals as comprehensive and feels that they must not be rejected despite the fact that they do not offer what was expected. At the same time, the Greek Government believes that at present the Turks are being pressured by the EEC and the United States and that they will make further concessions in the future.

Our correspondent, Mimis Konstandinidhis, reports the following from Athens: Authoritative government sources in Athens have informed me that the Greek Government has at hand the packet of Turkish proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus issue and they are being studied unhurriedly in a serious and thorough manner so as to draw positive or negative conclusions. These government circles have stressed that the Turkish proposals--although they do not offer what was expected--nevertheless should not be immediately rejected as they are comprehensive.

In any case, they offer grounds for future settlement of the issue with the prerequisite, as they characteristically stressed, that the Turks must put "water in their wine" and make further concessions on particularly vital points of their present proposals. The sources have told me that the Turks seem to have the ardent desire to boost the Cyprus issue following a thwarting pressure by Western allies and particularly by the EEC and the U.S. administration. The sources believe that most probably the Turks will make further concessions, particularly on the percentage of territory to be handed over. Finally, the government sources stressed to me that the Greek and Cyprus Governments are making separate studies of the proposals. On 19 August, Foreign Ministers Mitsotakis and Rolandhis will meet in Athens to exchange views and probably decide on the stand to be taken by the Cyprus Government--accepting or rejecting the Turkish proposals or decide to refer our national issue to international forums.

SPD'S BAHR ON NEUTRON WEAPON IMPLICATIONS

DW141123 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 14 Aug 81 p 4

[Theo Sommer interview with Egon Bahr, SPD disarmament spokesman; date and place not given]

[Text] ZEIT: When the neutron bomb first became the subject of discussion in the summer of 1977, you termed it a "perversion of thinking" and called it "obscene." Is that still your attitude toward this weapon today?

Bahr: Yes, exactly the same, because considering man as the central figure, I just cannot believe it is progress to have a weapon which harms man more than it does objects. At the time, we had a discussion on the ethical question in this connection. However, I do not hesitate to say that other arguments in favor of the neutron weapon may indeed be advanced. But I stick by my judgment.

ZEIT: But isn't there a bit of ethics in the purely pragmatic argument that the neutron weapons--if they were already existing and their use on German territory were necessary--would do less harm to people and material than would the nuclear weapons slated for that purpose today?

Bahr: No, because the deterrent value of the neutron weapon is less than that of larger nuclear weapons.

ZEIT: What do you think of President Reagan's decision to produce neutron weapons in the United States now?

Bahr: I consider this a mistake, both politically and militarily. I think it is a mistake in the military respect because neutron weapons naturally are not exclusively defensive weapons, but might also be of interest to a potential aggressor.

ZEIT: What you mean is that if the Russians follow suit and use neutron weapons in a potential attack, the defender will be more at a disadvantage because for defense he must concentrate at specific points.

Bahr: I proceed from the premise that the Russians read newspapers. If they do, they will read that they must kindly attack with large numbers of tanks against which we will use neutron weapons. Surely they will not be that foolish. Much rather, an aggressor will be inclined to use neutron weapons to clear the area he wants to conquer of defenders, if I may use this expression, so as to gain possession of the production facilities with the least possible damage. This means that neutron weapons are highly interesting offensive weapons as well. This implies that if the Soviets also have this weapon, the balance will be restored only to the disadvantage of the Germans--and at the price of lowering the nuclear threshold.

ZEIT: This is the point where the military-strategic debate starts. Let us leave that up to the military people for the time being. How do you assess the political effects of the U.S. decision?

Bahr: The first point, naturally, is for us to recall the statement by the Soviet Union that it would not manufacture or produce this weapon as long as the Americans do not produce it. The U.S. experts said in 1978 that the Soviet Union's lag time in the production of this weapon was 6 months. This length of has now passed six times. Thus we cannot but assume that the Soviet Union likewise will start producing neutron weapons, with or without an announcement. This equals further escalation of the arms race in the nuclear field, especially regarding the so-called mininukes whose value is controversial anyway. This is the first negative conclusion. To this we must add the negative political impact of the U.S. decision which, in a situation where the discussion involves medium-range missiles, additionally burdens that discussion. The issue is emotionalized without any sense being included.

I consider it to be a political mistake. Either we trust what the Americans have said on this occasion, namely, that they do not intend to deploy the neutron weapons in Europe--and wonder about the sense of producing the weapon--or we come to the conclusion that some day certain pressure will be applied on the European countries to deploy these weapons on their territory. Consequently, it is my view that after considering the overall situation and our interests, there is but one option, namely, giving a clear "No" to the deployment of such weapons.

ZEIT: How do you justify this "No"?

Bahr: It cannot be in German interests to lower the nuclear threshold and to introduce weapons into our country--after all, they would have to be introduced in the Bundeswehr if they are to make any sense--to which the counterweight exists on the other side already from the beginning. It would be tantamount to another step in the direction of isolating the European war theater along the lines of a dissociation or in the sense of nuclear war being possible alone in Central Europe; and this cannot be in our interests.

ZEIT: Mr. Bahr, what you termed the first negative consequence was that the Soviets will follow suit. In second place, you said that the counterarming negotiations will be aggravated. Do you believe that the Soviet receptiveness to negotiations will decrease after the U.S. neutron decision? Or will the Soviets pursue negotiations in the same way they did before?

Bahr: I believe that the Soviets continue to be interested in negotiations on the medium-range missiles. The justification is that the missiles can reach the Soviet Union, while the neutron weapons cannot.

ZEIT: Do you believe that the psychological basis for these negotiations has been weakened in Western Europe by Reagan's decision? Do you think that the peace movement will new impetus by it? Are you afraid that the leftwing in your own party will intensify its opposition to the counterarming decision?

Bahr: I believe on the whole that the skepticism about the objectives of U.S. policy will grow. After all, it is a bit too much all at once to reject the option of contractually ensuring or expanding the denuclearized zone existing in northern Europe; to plan the introduction of cruise missiles andPershing-2 missiles in East Asia, in Japan and in South Korea; and at the same time to make a decision which starts Western advance armament toward a new weapons system. This is quite a lot for 1 week.

ZEIT: As early as in 1977 you asked: "Is mankind about to go crazy?" Do you fear this all the more now?

Bahr: Much to my horror, I only see that the constant escalation of the constantly more sophisticated armament ends up in the well-known result of continuously further jeopardizing, rather than enhancing, security. This must stop. This may well lead to a point, too, at which individual states will simply say: We are quitting.

ZEIT: Could you imagine that the Federal Republic would belong to these states?

Bahr: Not at the moment.

ZEIT: Is it conceivable that the Americans will introduce the neutron weapon merely into their own arsenals in the Federal Republic and that they will not deliver them to the allied armies?

Bahr: Juridically and theoretically this is possible. In the juridical respect it is possible because of the troops treaty. Theoretically it is possible because the Americans, after having produced the neutron weapons, could unload them at their airports in the Federal Republic. In the practical and political respect, however, I consider this impossible.

In the practical respect for the following reason: If the weapon is supposed to be a defensive weapon, then it makes sense to have it in the center of Europe only if not only the Americans but also all the others are equipped with it.

ZEIT: It is above all, the defenders who are supposed to build up the defence at places where tank advances can be anticipated most likely.

Bahr: In north German lowlands--exactly. I consider it impossible in the political respect because it is bound to burden the alliance nothing short of breaking it up. Such weapons cannot be introduced without the approval of those on whose territories they are to be stationed.

ZEIT: Thus the armament concept must be an alliance concept which must not rely on the absolute command of the allinace's leading power?

Bahr: That's correct.

ZEIT: There are Bundeswehr officers who believe that the introduction of neutron weapons is nothing but a necessary step for modernizing obsolete atomic arsenals in the Federal Republic. There are other Bundeswehr officers who consider this an advance in armament and who prefer to rack their brains so as to find alternatives. How do you see this?

Bahr: I am of the view that neutron weapons are a new category of arms, the military sense of which I fail to see. And I am of the view that the West, if it introduces them, will be the one who starts turning the armament screw. This means that we would do what we are blaming the Russians for in the SS-20 field. I would not be surprised on principle if the Eastern side, viewing it from the angle of equilibrium, would urge for negotiatons in this field as well. This could give the West quite a bit of trouble because there is a great superiority in the field of tactical nuclear weapons on our side, as is known.

ZEIT: Would you be in favor of the very defense mission which conceived for the neutron weapon being assumed by other non-atomic weapons?

Bahr: I believe that the allince's degree of deterrence remains great enough for the near future. The risk for the aggressor still remains uncalculable even if it has been reduced. This ought to be enough, all the more so since the defense capability of the Bundeswehr, in particular against tank attacks, in the past few years has been increased systematically and enormously.

SCHMIDT REPORTEDLY CABLED HONECKER ON RELATIONS

LD151024 Hamburg DPA in German 0926 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Frankfurt-Bonn, 15 Aug (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt sent a personal letter to GDR State Council chairman and SED chief Erich Honecker about 2 weeks ago, FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU reported today, quoting Bonn government circles. The report is unconfirmed.

According to the paper, Schmidt tried to persuade the GDR State Council chairman to avoid a general deterioration in the political climate between the two German states in the light of current international difficulties.

The letter is said to contain no concrete proposal concerning the GDR meeting between the chancellor and Honecker which was postponed last year; Schmidt also does not mention any deferred negotiating topics or suggestions. All that is known about the contents of the letter is that the chancellor made a friendly suggestion to Honecker not to break the lines of communication between the two German states.

IRANIAN GROUP IN PARIS CLAIMS GUNBOAT SEIZURE

Paris Report

LD141040 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] In the past hour we have obtained a few more precise details about the hijacking of the three patrol boats from Cherbourg which France finally delivered to Iran only a few days before the return of the first contingent of French people from Tehran.

In fact, contrary to what was believed, only one of the missile-launching patrol boats was intercepted. It is now in the Moroccan port of Tangier. The other two patrol boats managed to escape and reached Algeciras in Spain. The commando group, which mounted the whole operation very carefully, belongs to the Iranian Liberation forces, an anti-Khomeyni movement led in Paris by former general in the Iranian Imperial Army, General Bahram Aryana. This group has just claimed responsibility for the capture of the Iranian patrol boat.

Everything was perfectly prepared. A group of Iranians hired a tugboat yesterday in Cadiz, officially to make a pleasure trip. When the three patrol boats heading for Iran were off the coast of Spain, the commando group caught up with the leading patrol boat and boarded it. Threatening the crew with their weapons, the Iranians forced them to lie down on the deck, with their hands behind their heads, and headed the vessel southward. It was then that the two other patrol boats managed to escape toward the Spanish coast. Warned by radio, Spanish naval vessels pursued the hijacked patrol boat, while Spanish fighter aircraft watched it right up to the entry to the port of Tangier. The deputy director of the Spanish Foreign Ministry and the charge d'affaires of the Iranian Embassy in Madrid are, of course, at Algeciras to investigate.

For the monarchist circles in exile, the operation is a half success or a half-failure, as you like, but they affirm that this blow against the Khomeyni regime is part of a larger offensive against the present Iranian Government.

Bani-Sadr Statement

NC141908 Paris AFP in English 1835 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Aug (AFP)--Ousted Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, who sought refuge here late last month, today termed the capture of an Iranian gunboat off the Spanish coast a "normal" reaction on the part of anti-Khomeyni forces.

In a statement to the Paris-Press Agency, Mr Bani-Sadr said that "when one despotism is replaced by another, groups of all sides await any chance to topple the new tyrant. The ground for such actions was laid by the leader (Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni)," Mr Bani-Sadr added.

Iranian Exiles 'Communique'

NC152024 Paris AFP in English 2020 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 15 Aug (AFP)--The Iranian gunboat hijacked Thursday by commandos of the Azadegan group opposed to the Tehran regime is now "the first seat of the national government of Iran," according to a communique quoting Azadegan leader General Bahram Aryana.

A spokesman for the Paris-based opposition group said the French-built boat had left the region of Morocco and was now in international waters. "She passed far off the Moroccan coast and never went alongside Morocco," the spokesman said, adding that the vessel had no precise itinerary. The gunboat was hijacked off the coast of Spain on its way to Iran.

The spokesman said the commando consisted of 40 people, 20 military and 20 civilians, including one woman. He said the "Tabarzin" gunboat had no fuel supply problems yet.

Gunboats Described

NC141257 Paris AFP in English 1250 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Cherbourg, northern France, 14 Aug (AFP)--The three French-made gunboats, which a Paris-based Iranian opposition group claimed to have captured today while they were en route to Iran, received authorization to leave this north-west port city on August 1, three days after ousted Iranian President Abolahasan Bani-Sadr was awarded political asylum in Paris. The three--the Kanjar, the Tabarzin and the Neyzem--left here for Iran each with a crew of about 30 Iranian sailors.

France was viewed as trying to appease French-Iranian relations, strained by Mr Bani-Sadr's presence in this country, by giving the go-ahead for the three ships to be delivered. They were part of a fleet of 12 ships ordered in 1974 by the since deposed regime of the former shah. The other nine were delivered between 1975 and 1978, but delivery of the final three was held up by the Islamic revolution, the seizing of the American hostages in Iran and a number of financial questions.

The three rapid patrol boats, 49 metres (yards) [as received] long, were each to have been armed with 76-mm and (?40-mm) cannons and four Otomat missiles with a range of 160 kms (100 miles). But none of the missiles was in place when the ships left Cherbourg on August 1, it was reported here today.

The three, weighing 280 tonnes, can travel at a speed of more than 30 knots (49 kms) an hour. A cargo ship was supposed to have delivered the three gunboats, all completed in 1978, but no vessel large enough to make the delivery had been found. The three ships were apparently similar to five ships ordered by Israel, which slipped out of Cherbourg at Christmas in 1969 despite a French Government ban and were "hijacked" by their Israeli crews.

IRAN'S BANI-SADR DENIES PLAN TO LIVE IN EGYPT

NC170945 Paris AFP in English 0931 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 17 Aug (AFP)--Ousted Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, living in exile here, today denied press reports that he has accepted an invitation from President Anwar as-Sadat to go and live in Egypt. "It is a false news item deliberately sent out by the official Iranian news agency PARS. The item is a lie. I have never contacted President as-Sadat and he has never contacted me," he told the evening newspaper France-Soir in an interview published here.

Mr Bani-Sadr, interviewed in a country villa near Paris, said that he preferred to remain in France, where had lived in exile for 16 years, until he returned to Iran. "At the present moment I have no plans to go anywhere. I plan to stay here."

FRANCE-SOIR asked him whether "you were mistaken about Ayatollah Khomeyni. You believed in him once."

Mr Bani-Sadr replied: "I was mistaken over Khomeyni's weaknesses. I had not seen them. He proclaimed principles of liberty and national independence. He said that he would never interfere with state affairs. Unfortunately he gave in to his tendency to be a personal dictator. I never thought that he was so weak."

LE MONDE WELCOMES NEW U.S. PLEDGE ON ARMS TALKS

[Editorial: "For American-Soviet Negotiations"]

[Text] Confirming the statements made by Mr Haig in New Orleans on 11 August, the State Department has reiterated through his spokesman, Mr Fisher, the U.S. "firm pledge to begin by the end of the year full negotiations with the Soviet Union on the control of theater nuclear arms" (Euromissiles). The U.S. decision to produce neutron weapons, Mr Fisher explained, has in no way modified this pledge whose objective is to achieve "balanced and verifiable accords with the Soviet Union." Mr Fisher also referred to the fears entertained on this side of the Atlantic that the new weapon may enable the United States to "limit any nuclear war to European territory." "It is ridiculous to envisage," he stated, "any nuclear conflict in Europe in which the United States would not be involved."

The aim of this explanation was to dispel the unease which the U.S. decision has magnified, especially as far as West German and Italian public opinion is concerned, and counter the U.S. press criticisms with respect to its timing. "A good decision militarily but a disastrous one diplomatically," the New York TIMES wrote on Wednesday. There is no "logical reason" why NATO should deprive itself of an "effective antitank weapon," the paper added, which, however, as a result of "years of Soviet propaganda" has become an "explosive question for friendly governments." They should have been "asked for their views as to the timing of the decision," as Secretary of State Haig recommended. This lack of consultations is not surprising. All new U.S. presidents make promises in this respect, which they virtually never keep.

Nonetheless, Mr Schmidt and Italian Prime Minister Spadolini will find it hard to "thwart" those who harbor the hope -- or the illusion -- of being able to allow their countries to opt out of an East-West confrontation. Obviously Mr Strauss, whose reputation as a firebrand is established, will not help the West German chancellor contain neutralism by demanding -- as he did last Thursday -- that neutron weapons be stockpiled in Europe.

Now as to the main point: During the latest Atlantic meeting the Reagan administration promised that, while the "modernization" of the allied nuclear force was taking place, it would initiate "by the end of the year negotiations with the Soviet Union on the limitation of theater nuclear arms within the framework of SALT."

But is the Soviet Union prepared to engage in dialogue? A TASS commentary on 11 August suggested that it is, but no definite conclusion could be drawn from it.

You cannot disarm unless you are armed. No unilateral disarmament has ever ensured, at least in Europe, peace and security. Furthermore, any reduction in the balance of forces to the lowest level -- a formula favored by the French Government (which, by the way, has kept its cool and remained discreet with respect to this controversy, despite the presence of some Communist ministers) -- presupposes a desire to negotiate.

DEFENSE MINISTRY COMMENTS ON MURUROA NUCLEAR TEST

PM170929 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Aug 81 p 20

[Text] The Defense Ministry announced late in the morning of Tuesday 4 August: "In the framework of France's defense policy, which is a policy of peace, an underground nuclear test, the last in a series planned for several months, has just been carried out on Mururoa."

SPADOLINI INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN, DOMESTIC ISSUES

LD162315 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini interview by (Sandro Ponto de Leon); place and date not given--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] We are in the middle of August, a month of new international tensions and rough polemics. As the UN secretary general said, the world is passing through a serious crisis, perhaps more dangerous than that of 1962. Against the background of cold war signals and dialogue, relations between East and West are aggravating and deteriorating. Between the industrialized countries and the developing countries there is a kind of cumulative effect. Do you agree with this diagnosis and how do you think our country can make an original contribution to international detente?

[Answer] The Italian Government will do its utmost in close agreement with its own European allies to favor the process of unavoidable global negotiations between East and West with a view to attaining, under conditions of mutual security, a balanced and verifiable reduction of nuclear and conventional weapons at all levels. After the recent tensions there are many signs of some openings, both in the U.S. initiatives and in the latest Soviet initiatives. A Europe integrated in NATO can and must make an original and unique contribution to this process. We must perform with scrupulous coherence our own (?duties) in the Atlantic alliance in order to reestablish the equilibrium of military forces which has been modified to the advantage of the Warsaw Pact. At the same time, we must carry out all indispensable diplomatic initiatives within our power to induce the United States to explore in every way possible the Soviet Union's readiness to halt the arms race.

Fully aware as Italians and Europeans of the danger inherent in the search [words indistinct] of nuclear superiority, in a world that is changing rapidly and often (?stormily), relations between the industrialized countries and the developing countries are no less important than traditional East-West relations. It was not by chance that this theme dominated the latest Luxembourg and Ottawa summits. Both these relationships play a relevant role in the definition of world (?equilibria) and therefore in safeguarding peace against the horror of atomic catastrophe. Very strong pressure proceeds from all the emerging countries toward the European governments--and Italy is particularly sensitive here--to orient ourselves to lower levels of balanced and controlled [passage indistinct] armaments.

[Question indistinct]

[Answer] As regards terrorism, we find that it now obeys new rules compared with those in existence a few months ago in the sphere of what I recently called negotiated violence. There has been a sinister and disquieting evolution in the sense that today the terrorists aim at political objectives. They exploit social deprivation such as we find in Naples and put forward requests of a [words indistinct] or populist nature, exploiting the most desperate social situations in order to widen the consensus around their own actions. That is how it started 6 months ago with the proletariat of the prisons during the Durso case. It measures to defeat the armed bands which aim at usurping the [words indistinct]. I do not believe that social inequalities are the causes or detonators of terrorism. I believe rather in the will of the terrorists who were prevented 7 or 8 months ago by the resolute and effective actions of the forces of order from exploiting new and peculiar situations for their subversive ends. The government, which has taken measures to normalize the secret services and has made all (?necessary preparations), must have an adequate response. The government is preparing to introduce at the next cabinet meeting new norms for those who repent. The fight against terrorism should engage all political forces; it is certainly not the task of just the parties in the government.

[Question] Your government, Prime Minister Spadolini, is the first postwar lay government [words indistinct] stability and alternation have been the great hope of these last years. Your advent to the Palazzo Chigi has been an important signal of alternation. But looking ahead, are alternation and stability a prospect within reach?

[Answer] The government over which I preside is based on a comprehensive equilibrium of lay and Catholic forces. This is something new and in a certain way exceptional: to have a lay presidency which places among its objectives the task of rebuilding on a more solid basis the essential relationship between laymen and Catholics which has characterized the three republican decades. Without neglecting anything from the past, without bringing any prejudice to future evolution, [words indistinct] however we are aware of the complexity of our history and are against all formulas which are [words indistinct] or simplifying. As for the prospects, I wish to recall what the socialist secretary, Craxi, said in his important speech in Rhodes at the conference of the Mediterranean socialist parties; Italy needs a period of stability. Alternation and stability are in fact not contradictory.

KIDNAPPED ROME BUSINESSMAN MANASCI RELEASED

NC150859 Paris AFP in English 0852 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 15 Aug (AFP)--Kidnapped Rome businessman Cesare Manasci, 32, has been freed and admitted to a clinic here after being held 12 weeks, police said today. Doctors were treating him for injuries received at the time of his capture on May 22.

His release last night still leaves two Rome people in the hands of kidnappers--Mirta Corsetti, 13, abducted near Rome on July 17 and Giovanni Palombini, 80, held since April 17.

PCI ASKS GOVERNMENT TO HALT NEW MISSILES BASE

PM141613 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 9 Aug 81 pp 1, 14

[Excerpt] Rome--What a prompt parliamentary initiative. The PCI has asked the government "not to start construction of the Comiso missile base." The request is contained in an urgent interpellation addressed to Prime Minister Spadolini and Defense Minister Lagorio presented by several Communist members of Parliament, including several from Sicily--La Torre, Rubbi, Baraccetti, Ahgelini, Spataro, Rossino, Rindone, Bottari and Pernice--which states that the "major decision" taken by the government on Friday "seems particularly unjustified following the latest positive Soviet offers for an immediate start to negotiations on a nuclear moratorium in Europe." "This being the case," the interpellation continues, "Italy must play its own positive role by aligning with the European governments exerting pressure on the U.S. administration for immediate negotiations."

For this reason, the Communist deputies "voicing the unanimous protest of the population, the local goverment authorities, the democratic parties and the chairman of the Sicilian Regional Council, call on the government not to go ahead with the construction of the missile base in Comiso."

This is the PCI's first intiative after the announcement, made by the government in mid-summer with Parliament in recess. For his part, PCI Foreign Section Chief Comrade Antonio Rubbi said: "The decision taken by the government to build a base for cruise missiles in Comiso is a serious and disturbing decision, and it is no accident that it immediately aroused energetic opposition from all the island's political forces and its population.

"This was bound to happen," Rubbi said, "and the statements made by the defense minister are in no way reassuring. Such a decision is part of the logic--reiterated recently at the Ottawa summit without the Italian Government's putting forward at that summit the many proposals contained in yesterday's Defense Ministry note--of negotiating from a position of strength and restored balance. This logic, which the government's decision follows, does not contribute either to opening negotiations or to the possibility of a positive conclusion to negotiations; but it objectively encourages the line followed by those who want to prolong, further than the 20 months already wasted, the period of negotiation and instead speed up the production and deployment of the missiles, thus stepping up the nuclear arms race. This definition also takes on a negative meaning compared with the new Soviet proposals and the concrete terms in which they are put forward to offer a constructive basis for negotiation.

"It is therefore completely laughable," Rubbi added, "to try to assure the Sicilian population, who realize the extreme danger of becoming a nuclear target, that this decision would not involve any risk, and it is misleading to put forward the mirage of the resulting benefits for the local economy, which needs very different action. It is therefore necessary to oppose this grave decision with as much determination as possible, creating a broad unitary movement demanding immediate negotiations, an end to the nuclear arms race and the establishment of a military balance on both sides at the lowest possible level. The Communists will throw all their effort into this struggle, which is decisive for the future of security and peace in Italy and Europe."

SENATE, HOUSE TO DISCUSS MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

AU141053 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 14 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian Government decision to deploy 112 intermediate range nuclear cruise missiles in Sicily and the intention of American President Ronald Reagan to move into full production of neutron weapons will be discussed in Rome on August 21 in a joint session of the lower house Foreign Affairs and Defense Commissions.

The announcement of the special joint session of the house commissions was delivered in the evening, one day after the Premier's Office put a joint meeting of the Senate Foreign Affairs and Defense Commissions, for an examination of the same issues, on the calendar for August 20.

The government decision on the site for the American-made missiles, to be installed beginning in 1983, was made last Friday on the basis of parliamentary authorization for the deployment of these missiles on Italian territory which was accorded in a vote in 1979.

A total of 572 American cruise and Pershing Two medium range nuclear missiles are scheduled to be deployed in a number of European NATO countries in response to the Soviet buildup of their SS-20 nuclear missiles in Eastern European countries.

This announcement, coupled with the White House decision to go into neutron weapons systems production, made public last Saturday, has dominated political debate on the national level at a time when the press and political figures are usually in the midsummer Ferragosto holiday doldrums.

In the intervening week before the four parliamentary commissions get together for their two joint sessions to debate the issue of the Euromissiles sitting and the neutron weapons, debate among the political parties is expected to continue, in somewhat more moderate tones however.

The small Radical Party, in a statement released Thursday, criticized the Socialist president of the Sicilian Regional Assembly, Salvatore Lauricella, for his vote in Parliament in favor of opening the door to the deployment of the intermediate range nuclear missiles in Italy. This vote was taken on December 6.

"Now (Lauricella) is contradicting the ballot he cast a year-and-a-half ago with so much diligence and conviction," the Radical statement insisted.

The Radical Party, along with the major opposition force, the Communists, and the Proletarian Unity Party, led the drive to convene a joint session of the Senate Foreign Affairs and Defense Commissions for debate on these matters.

The Social Democrats, a minor partner in Premier Giovanni Spadolini's five-party coalition, lashed out against the Communist Party again in the latest of their series of statements on the nuclear issues.

Deputy Secretary Ruggero Puletti said Thursday that the views of the government on the neutron bomb are expressions of the Social Democrat Party's position. He affirmed that these views "cannot be modified nor presented in a distorted fashion by appealing to more or less illusionary popular movements.

"There is no doubt," the Social Democrat leader added, "that in today's conditions, it will be difficult for the Italian Communist Party to recreate the old partisans for peace movement."

The Socialist caucus in the Senate, members of another government party, have filed a formal query with the premier and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo seeking information on: "What initiatives we have undertaken or intend to promote in international quarters, within NATO and in other quarters for the purpose of an immediate resumption of negotiations between the superpowers to avert a progressive return to rearmament."

Though no official word has been pronounced as yet, many members of Parliament have said that the September 7 date for reconvening the lower house after the summer recess may be set forward for full scale debate on the nuclear issues.

PCI PAPER HITS GOVERNMENT'S N-BOMB STANCE

PM141228 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

["An.C. report: "Italian Government Embarrassed and Evasive"]

[Excerpt] Rome--It took 24 hours after the announcement that the Reagan administration had given the go-ahead for the deadly neutron bomb for the Italian Government finally to express a view on an act which increases the threat to peace to an incalculable extent. This long delay did not, however, make for a clear stance but seemed to have been dictated solely by the temptation to play for time and wait for some indications on the attitude adopted by the other European allies.

The statement finally issued from the Palazzo Chigi is embarrassed and evasive, and does not even touch on the crucial problems raised by the dangerous U.S. decision: It is difficult to say whether this is due more to the traditionally submissive role toward the allied power or to an internal maneuver aimed at playing down and portraying such a serious matter to Italians almost as an ordinary administrative decision.

Hence, we find no answer in this initial Italian Government stance to the questions asked by the PCI in its immediate political response. In a question to the foreign minister, our comrades Senators Bufalini, Valori, Vechietti, Procacci, Pieralli, Calamandrei, Gerbez, and A. Milano ask--while the Communist group at the Villa Madama is seeking an extraordinary meeting of the Senate Foreign Affairs Commission--for immediate answers on three essential points:

1--"Is there any truth in the reports that the Italian Government was given advance warning by the U.S. Government of the latter's decision to manufacture the neutron bomb?"

2--If so, "what were the Italian assessments and reactions to an initiative which, because of its intrinsic gravity, was likely to seriously damage negotiations between the NATO and Warsaw Pact countries on balanced arms reduction in Europe?"

3--Finally the Communist senators want to know "whether the government intends immediately to declare its absolute unwillingness to agree to neutron weapons being received and deployed in our country."

No clear indication on these three problems is contained in the note issued by the Palazzo Chigi yesterday morning (while some government members like Deputy Defense Minister Scovacricchi, of the Italian Social Democratic Party, thought the U.S. decision completely natural). The main characteristic of the note is embarrassment. It is obvious that the U.S. announcement on the neutron bomb caught the Spadolini government off balance when it was already facing a wave of criticism over its decision to give the go-ahead for the missile base at Comiso. In addition to this, there is some sign of irritation in the passage of the note which states, in contrast to the information given from U.S. sources, that the U.S. decision "was taken autonomously and without previously consulting the allied governments."

Palazzo Chigi also maintains that the "relevant communication" supplied by the U.S. Embassy to the Italian Government preceded "the official White House announcement by only a few hours," and what is the Italian reaction to such a serious "communication" accompanied by a vague assurance that the new weapons will remain stored on U.S. territory?" Its reaction is simply to "note" a decision which--the prime minister's office maintains, and this is certainly the gravest aspect of its attitude--"is exclusively the concern of the United States and as such comes under that country's sovereignty."

That observation is simply an alibi for the lack of an effective reaction. It is universally known that, owing to its characteristics, the neutron bomb is a tactical weapon with a limited range, such that it seems to be designed precisely for use in a nuclear conflict in the European "theater." Faced with this fact, the Italian Government--according to the note--merely "points out" that the U.S. decision "in no way involves, under the terms of the NATO treaty, the transfer or deployment of the neutron warheads outside U.S. territory." And that is all.

The repeated assertions that Italy "in close association" with the other European countries in NATO, "will continue to make every effort to start appropriate action as quickly as possible and in the competent bodies, aimed at concluding balanced agreements which can be monitored for a balance in every type of nuclear weapon at the lowest possible level," are, however, becoming a ritual.

First, it should be remembered that similar and equally vague assurances were given by the Cossiga government when the Euromissiles were accepted without any practical effort following. But, above all, it is impossible to believe that the Italian Government is not aware of the close link which exists between the possibility of real negotiations on the Euromissiles and the U.S. decision to construct the neutron bomb. How can it maintain that this action "concerns" the United States "alone" when it is precisely the United States which should be the protagonist in the negotiations with the USSR on "theater" nuclear weapons in Europe, in other words the Euromissiles?

SECRETARY AT USSR NUCLEAR CENTER DEFECTS IN LISBON

LD161241 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1200 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] A Soviet citizen yesterday asked for political asylum at Lisbon airport. Her name is Anna Mikhaylovna [name indistinct]. She is 26 years old and worked in the USSR as a secretary at the nuclear reserach institute at Dubna. She was traveling in a Aeroflot airliner that stopped over in Lisbon yesterday on a flight from Havana to Moscow. She said she was "on a forced trip" to Moscow.

During the stopover in Lisbon she managed to escape and immediately approached Portuguese authorities and asked for political asylum and protection.

At Portela Airport, Anna Mikhaylovna initially approached an official of TAP-Air Portugal and expressed her intention of not (?continuing her journey). The TAP official took her to the customs office at the airport.

She then said she had joined her husband in Cuba about 2 months ago after prolonged demarches carried out both in the USSR and Cuba designed to secure permission for them to be reunited. It was then that, for no apparent reason, the Cuban authorities withdrew her residence permit and forced her to return to Moscow.

For fear of what might happen to her back in the USSR, and almost certain that the chances of her being allowed to join her husband again were slim, Anna Mikhaylovna decided to stay in Portugal. She plans to leave later for the United States in order to join her mother and relatives of her husband.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS EXPRESS SUPPORT FOR BALSEMAO

LD161018 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] A round of applause, heard outside the room where the meeting was held, marked the end of the session of the National Council of the Social Democratic Party, PSD, early this morning. The ovation underlined the outcome of the secret vote on a consensus motion subscribed by district committees which points to the resolution of the crisis within the PSD with the obvious reflections it will have on formation of a new government. Shortly after the end of the proceedings, the steering committee of the National Council gave a news conference. It was 0555 when Leonardo Ribeiro de Almeida read the following communique:

[Begin recording] Having met in Lisbon on 14 and 15 August and after discussing in depth the matters on the agenda, the National Council of the PSD debated and voted, as the only document, the following motion:

1. Considering that the prime minister tendered his resignation because he considered he did not have the political support and the collaboration required from all party militants;

2. Considering that the National Council should express publicly its appreciation for the loftiness of his gesture;

3. Considering that after the debate was opened in the party's appropriate body, neither the political nor personal alternatives put forward by some members of this National Council nor those put forward in public by party militants and bodies were adopted;

4. Considering that the national political committee cannot be blamed for consensus solutions not having been found in the previous meeting of the National Council;

5. Considering that a party with the responsibilities of the PSD cannot be party to the deterioration of the country's situation and democratic institutions nor allow the creation of internal conditions liable to paralyze the expression and execution of the political decisions of the majority, without prejudice to the respect for the rights of the minorities;

6. Considering that the PSD is the largest Portuguese party and that it cannot, nor must, abdicate this mandate on pain of betraying the expression of the will, hope and confidence of the electorate;

7. Considering that the party's line approved at the eighth national congress must be reaffirmed and that this is the political line of the entire party;

8. Considering that all militants owe, under the party statues and at all levels, their political and personal collaboration for the pursuit and implementation of the party's options;

9. Considering that one cannot accept that the right of opinion and criticism on the part of leading members and militant should be exercised outside the party's appropriate bodies and with harmful consequences to the party, and that the exercise of such right and duty should be circumscribed to the said bodies, the National Council has decided:

(a) To express its confidence in Francisco Pinto Balsemao for the performance of his duties as prime minister and, consequently, to nominate him for this post;

(b) To suggest at the next meeting of the National Council and in keeping with the wishes of both the PSD chairman and the National Political Committee that the party's ordinary congress be brought forward;

(c) Finally the National Council appeals to the unity of all Social Democratic leading members and militants and to their availability for a dialogue at all levels, for the enhancement of the PSD and furtherance of the ideal of social democracy. This motion was approved by 58 votes to 1 with 13 absentions. [end recording]

That was the final communique of the meeting of the PSD National Council. What will happen next? For an assessment of the situation, here is a report by Jorge Cubanco and Miguel Lemos, who have followed the proceedings since 2200 on Friday:

[Begin recording] [Lemos] Pinto Balsemao will naturally now be invited to take up his post as prime minister.

[Cubanco] This in fact seems to have already been decided, because--as a member of the National Council told us--the terms of the motion, the outcome of the vote and the fact that it was subscribed by the members of the National Council, including Helena Roseta and Pedro Santana Lopes, to mention a few of Balsemao's opponents, are believed to have been some of the conditions set by Pinto Balsemao (?to) accept moves for him to take up the post of prime minister. Hence the fact aht the steering committee of the National Council--which was entrusted with the task of contacting him--will only do so sometime today, Sunday, or even tomorrow, since Pinto Balsemao is already fully aware of the outcome of the National Council meeting. [end recording]

MILITARY REPORTS ON STATUS OF IRANIAN BOATS

NC141400 Paris AFP in English 1354 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Algeciras, 14 Aug (AFP)--Two Iranian gunboats were anchored in this Spanish port city under heavy security today following the hijacking of a third vessel by a paramilitary group opposed to the Tehran regime, military sources here said.

Sources said that after yesterday's seizure of the gunboat "Tabarzin," the two other French-built ships, the "Khanjar" and "Neyzem," were escorted into Algeciras by the Spanish military. The hijackers had claimed to seize all three ships.

Navy divers followed the vessels into the port's north basin, where they were still moored today under heavy guard by Spanish marines, the sources here said.

They said the divers will escort the two boats as far as the limit of Spain's territorial waters when they are ready to leave, most likely today.

Details of Capture

NC141627 Paris AFP in English 1600 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] Cadiz, 14 Aug (AFP)--The commandos who hijacked an Iranian gunboat off the Spanish coast had assistance from troops aboard the seized vessel, the skipper of the tugboat used in the operation said today.

Antonio Zajara, commander of the tugboat "Salazon," said that four or five uniformed men on the gunboat "Tabarzin" helped the commando unit to board the French-built vessel yesterday while it was en route for delivery to Iran.

Spanish sources said earlier the hijackers had to have had some inside help in the operation, which pitted about 15 commandos in a tugboat against some 30 crew members of an ultra-fast gunboat equipped with 76-mm and 40-mm cannons.

Zajara said the commando unit was composed of 15 or 16 people, including a man about 50, who appeared to be the leader, a woman and the rest men in their 20's. Other reports put the figure at up to 40 people.

The commandos had taken the tugboat on a cruise in the Bay of Cadiz the day before hijacking one of three gunboats heading from Cherbourg, France, for Iran. They returned yesterday for another go.

"They asked to do the trip again and when we pulled abreast of the gunboat it all happened," the tug skipper said.

He said that the commandos, who brought aboard wine, liquor and food, threatened the crew of the tugboat with guns and broke the vessel's radio before launching their operation to seize the "Tabarzin."

Zajara said that the commandos threw a mooring rope to the gunboat and quickly jumped aboard, forcing the crew of the military ship to lie flat on their stomachs under armed guard. They left behind a bottle of whiskey for the tugboat crew, he said.

The tug captain said that although his radio was smashed, he was able to alert the authorities over the radio of a passing German yacht.

Navy Report

NC141136 Paris AFP in English 1125 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] Algeciras, 14 Aug (AFP)--The commando that captured an Iranian gunboat off southern Spain probably had accomplices on board, sources close to the Spanish navy said today.

A gunboat would be much faster than a tug, and well armed. Without help from on board it would be practically impossible for a tug to capture it, the sources said.

The accomplices apparently kept the speed of the vessel down while holding part of the crew at bay, it was said. Otherwise the gunboat would have been able to easily outrun the tug.

Moreover, it had weapons, including torpedo launching equipment, which would have enabled it to repulse an attack by men armed only with light weapons.

ANDALUSIAN SOCIALISTS OFFER SUPPORT TO PSOE

LD131727 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Alejandro Rojas Marcos has said in a recent statement that the Socialist Party of Andalusia [PSA] would be prepared to enter into a pact with the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] by which the PSA would support the PSOE in forming a government, and specifically would support Felipe Gonzalez as prime minister in exchange for the inclusion of political measures in the government program aimed at achieving equality for Andalusia with the other developed peoples of Spain.

These words by Rojas Marcos have been interpreted in political circles as an initial step toward the PSA's joining the PSOE. The PSA has forestalled this by saying that what is being discussed is merely a strategy agreement between two parties of the same ideological tendency and not a potential integration, which is not considered possible at the moment.

KOIVISTO ON NEUTRON WEAPON, NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD161534 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] In the view of Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, the U.S. decision to produce neutron weapons will further aggravate the international climate. Koivisto, who spoke in Kemioe today, expressed the opinion that as a new weapon the neutron bomb will lead to countermeasures and thus accelerate the arms race. The threat of war seems almost as real as in the days of the cold war, Koivisto said. According to Prime Minister Koivisto, this international development has made public opinion more favorable to a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe. Koivisto said that the Nordic countries at the moment already form an actual nuclear-free zone and this situation should be made permanent.

NORWAY

PRIME MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON MISSILE ISSUE

LD151420 Hamburg DPA in German 1352 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Hamburg, 15 Aug (DPA)--In the opinion of Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe would have to be part of a comprehensive settlement on nuclear arms in Europe. A separate agreement would be unbalanced, Mrs Brundtland said in an interview for the news magazine DER SPIEGEL. Norway's attitude in this question had not changed.

The head of government said short-range missiles deployed in northern Europe's immediate neighborhood should be reduced. This applied also to medium-range missiles, such as the SS-20, which are capable of reaching northern as well as western Europe from deep in the Soviet Union. This is one main reason why the Norwegian Government is forced to regard a possible nuclear-free zone in northern Europe as part of a comprehensive East-West settlement on nuclear arms in Europe.

Mrs Brundtland emphasized that Oslo has no intention of "negotiating bilaterally with the Soviet Union on our security." Bilateral agreements between Norway or the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union are not intended. Obviously agreements could be the outcome of East-West negotiations. Even then Norway's protection through NATO remained decisive. "There is the justified fear that we will lose control of developments should the arms race not be stopped," Mrs Brundtland said.

GREEK CYPRIOT REACTIONS TO TURKS' TALKS PROPOSALS

National Council Discussion

NC142028 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] The National Council met today under the chairmanship of President Kiprianou and, during a session that lasted many hours, studied the recent Turkish proposals. An official statement says that following a detailed and constructive discussion, the meeting reached concrete conclusions concerning the further handling of the issue. The EDEK Party expressed reservations about specific matters of policy.

Participating in the meeting were House President Ladhas, AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou and Assistant Secretary General Fandis, Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis, Democratic Party parliamentary spokesman Galanos as well as EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis and Secretary General Khatzidhimitriou. Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Greek Cypriot representative at the inter-Cypriot talks Ioannidhis and advisers at the talks Triandafillidhis and Mrs Soulioti also took part in the meeting.

Councils' Reactions

NC171010 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 17 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The National and Ministerial Councils held their first meeting last Friday and unanimously decided that the submitted Turkish proposals do not lead toward a Cyprus solution. The two councils will also hold another meeting to study a detailed document of the Cyprus Government which will be submitted at the negotiating table analyzing the Greek side's views about the unacceptable proposals.

At the same time, the Greek side will submit proposals on the constitutional aspect and preserve the dialogue in order to establish if there are any possibilities for Turkish concessions. EDEK was the only party that was against the continuation of negotiations.

In the meantime, intensive diplomatic intervention by Western and nonaligned quarters for the preservation of the dialogue and submission of Greek proposals was developed both before and after the National-Ministerial Council meeting at government level and in the direction of the parties.

According to reports from foreign diplomatic circles, further pressure will be exerted on the Turkish side which is creating the impression that with the "return" of four percent of occupied territory, it wants to buy--at a very low price--the political partition of Cyprus and the abolition of the state.

The legal analysis of the Turkish proposals made at the National Council has shown that the Turkish side is pursuing confederation and not federation by creating from now the prerequisites for the detachment of the Turkish "state" and its possible union with Turkey so that the remainder [of the state] will be compelled to unite with Greece (double enosis).

Diplomatic quarters are trying to dispel the anxiety of various Greek elements by promising that there will be Turkish concessions in the central government with a ratio of six Greek to four or two Turkish ministers. These circles anticipate this concession to be made during some Camp David-type negotiations within the EEC framework of under the umbrella of UN Secretary General Waldheim. At the same time, they also promise further territorial adjustments.

However, the Greek side still unanimously affirms that the Turkish proposals are negative and expresses disappointment over the fruitless intervention by Western quarters. Any possibilities for progress will become apparent from moves instigated after submission of the Greek side's document.

Center Union Rejection

NC131758 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] A statement released by the Center Union says that the party's General Secretariat has studied the Turkish Cypriot proposals and considers them, both with regard to the territorial and the constitutional aspects, unacceptable to serve as basis for the intercommunal dialogue. Nevertheless, the Center Union says that it does not object to the continuation of the dialogue in order to explore and establish in time whether or not there is room for substantive improvement of the Turkish proposals.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS COMMENT FURTHER ON PROPOSALS

Denktas Statement

NC140909 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Faruk Zapci report]

[Text] London--In an exclusive statement to HURRIYET, TFSC President Rauf Denktas, who arrived in London soon after the Turkish Cypriot proposals were handed to the Greek Cypriots, said: "The proposals were given to the Greek Cypriots after we had reached full accord in Ankara."

Saying that it would be wise to drop Britain as a guarantor when a new agreement is reached, Denktas added: "The Greek Cypriots carried out the 1963 attacks by taking shelter under this guarantee, and managed to continue these attacks for 11 consecutive years. Even now, Britain insists on recognizing the Greek Cypriot administration as the legal government of Cyprus, and in doing so it discriminates against the Turkish Cypriot community by depriving it of the rights which law and justice had guaranteed."

Referring to the proposals, Denktas made this statement to our newspaper: "We were asked to put our territorial proposals on the negotiating table for the purpose of resolving the issue. We have maintained constant touch with Ankara and we have sincerely put forward our views in this respect. When I paid an official visit to Ankara soon after the elections, our cause was examined again in all its ramifications and an assessment was made. Identity of views was reached and proposals regarding territory were put down in black and white and submitted to the Greek Cypriot side, together with a map, in accordance with the agreement reached in Ankara. We are now expecting their reply. Some of the areas proposed on this map were also proposed in 1976, areas which the Greek Cypriots rejected. I do not know what their reaction will be. If we wait a little we shall know. I have a few words to say to those living in villages which are likely to be turned over to the Greek Cypriots: They should not worry that their investments in these areas, which since 1976 have been considered areas likely to be surrendered to the Greek Cypriots, will be wasted. If an agreement is reached in this respect with the Greek Cypriots, then the entire Cyprus issue will have to be resolved before such an agreement can be implemented. This takes time. If we eventually arrive at such a happy point a new settlement will be provided for our people in these villages with all the necessary amenities--water supply, electricity, new buildings, gardens, water pumps, and business places for small artisans. The funds necessary for this purpose have been examined and we have been given guarantees. We shall thus have a sector which will be defensible and self-supporting in every respect. Our rights and status will once again be registered through international agreements. No one can dispute the fact that those who have liberated the land and given it to us will always have the right to speak on the territorial issue.

"We believe that our proposals are of an acceptable nature. Their rejection involves serious responsibility which will not rest on us. It will belong to the Greek Cypriot side."

Denktas was told that the peace package suggests the dropping of Britain as a guarantor, and he was asked if the British had shown any reactions. Denktas replied: "I have made no contact with Britain. I am here on a private visit. It will be wise if Britain is droped as a guarantor. Had Britain refused to recognize Makarios' blood-stained and illegal administration, the Cyprus dispute could have been rapidly resolved in accordance with the principles of justice."

Referring to his departure from the island on the day the proposals were handed to the Greek Cypriot side, he said he had not contacted anyone so far and added: "This is the first time in 28 years that I have found an opportunity to be concerned with the life and health of my child. As a matter of fact, since the Greek Cypriot reply will be delivered on 19 August, I felt the need to relax during this period and to make a good assessment of the situation. This is what I have done."

Ankara Reaction

[Text] It has been announced that the press reports about the recent comprehensive and concrete Turkish Cypriot proposals submitted at the intercommunal talks--which aim at finding a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem--are not based on official sources and that the maps printed on the same issue are based on guesswork.

Replying to a question by ANATOLIA on the press reports and maps about the content of the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate issued a statement recalling that the Turkish Cypriot community and Turkey believe that the principle of secrecy of the intercommunal talks must always be upheld. The statement says that at this stage of the intercommunal talks, it is necessary to respect the principle of secrecy for the successful outcome of the talks. That is why, it adds, it is impossible to make any statements about the proposals.

The statement goes on to say that because of all these reasons, the press reports are not based on official sources and the maps about the Turkish Cypriot territorial proposals carry no value beyond guesswork.

[Text] The UN spokesman in Ankara has issued a statement concerning an inaccurate report in the Istanbul daily HURRIYET which alleged that Secretary General Waldheim participated in the preparation of maps accompanying the Turkish proposals. The spokesman said the UN secretary general was not involved in the preparation of the Turkish Cypriot proposals nor did he have any advance knowledge of the maps submitted by the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor. The secretary general's function in the intercommunal talks is to provide his good offices to facilitate the negotiations between the parties directly concerned.

GOVERNMENT ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON NEUTRON BOMB

NC131835 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 13 Aug 81

[13 August government communique]

[Text] Just like the other allied governments, the Greek Government was simply briefed on the U.S. Government decision to proceed with the production of neutron bombs and their stockpiling exclusively on U.S. territory. At least at this stage the decision solely concerns the U.S. Government, since in the event of deployment of this weapon in another country the latter's consent would be needed. Of course, for Greece there has never been, nor is there now, question of deployment of neutron bombs on its territory nor even of Euromissiles, medium-range nuclear weapons. The Greek Government remains firmly devoted to the principle that only through controlled balance of armament--preferably at the lowest possible level--would international peace and stability be secured.

KKE Reaction

NC141535 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 14 Aug 81 p 1

[13 August Statement by KKE Central Committee Press Bureau]

[Text] The government's communique on the neutron bomb tries to mislead the Greek people. The government shifts the huge question of neutron bomb production, which pushes mankind to the edge of nuclear destruction, to a question of territory for stockpiling purposes.

It is well known to all that the inhuman neutron bomb, which the Americans are now producing, cannot be used in the Atlantic Ocean, because of its very operational task [as published], but on continental territories, mainly in Europe. The submissive government policy pushes Greece to the front line of nuclear threat. During these crucial moments, the Greek people will defend, with their struggle and their vote, their children's lives and futures. They will remove the rightwing [from power] and they will open the road toward a Greece that will be free from nuclear arms and foreign bases, toward an independent and peace-loving Greece.

ATTEMPT TO BURN KKE OFFICE IN THESSALONIKI

[Excerpts] Thessaloniki, 12 Aug (from our correspondent)--An attempt to burn the KKE office of the Thessaloniki party organization took place shortly before Tuesday midnight. The culprits are still unknown. The attack was well planned and organized and it took place few minutes after the departure of the building guard at 50 Venizelos Street, where the KKE office is housed. The terrorists threw an incendiary bomb a few meters away from the building's entrance. Fortunately, the bomb crushed and was destroyed before exploding. The damage is insignificant. After this, the culprits ran away and left behind a jerrican full of gas.

At noon on Wednesday, a delegation of the Thessaloniki party organization, comprising Comrade Ilias Stramboulidhis, secretary of the Thessaloniki City Committee, and KKE Deputy Comrade Mitsos Sakhinis, made strong representations to the Ministry of Northern Greece. The delegation reported to Secretary General Papayeoryiou the attempted arson and handed him a memorandum. The Thessaloniki party organization of the KKE has issued a statement addressed to the city's working class and the democratic people denouncing this criminal act, stressing that the same--local and foreign--dark circles who are responsible for the burning of department stores and for the recent huge forest fires are behind the "unknown" culprits. The Thessaloniki party organization calls the workers and all working people, as well as the city's mass organizations, to take the safeguarding of democratic development into their hands; to block the criminal plans of the circles of anomaly and to struggle with all their power for democratic change.

ARAYIS COMMENTS ON NEW SECURITY ORGANIZATION LAW

NC150844 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 8 Aug 81 pp 5,6

[The editorial of the week: "On the Special Security Organization Law"]

[Excerpts] "The Law Regarding the Protection of Certain Establishments and Institutions and Maintaining Their Security." This law, which was accepted by the National Security Council on 22 July, has been implemented quietly.

This law ushers in a radical change in the concept of internal security in Turkey. According to this law, "special security organizations" will be set up; these organizations will be entitled to use the powers of the official state security forces in many ways.

If we have to put it more explicitly, from now on, with the exception of the military and security forces, establishments and institutions will be protected by these special security forces. In other words, with this law, a special force "parallel to the police organization" is being created alongside that of the official state security forces.

It is understood that certain events of the past are still fresh in the minds of the people and have played an effective part in formulating this law. The sight of Turkish soldiers on duty outside the ever-increasing bank branches was disturbing to both our public and our armed forces.

However, despite this apparently justified situation, do all these complaints and views constitute an adequate reason for abandoning security work, which is one of the fundamental responsibilities of the state, to private organizations? Unfortunately, neither law and history nor sociology and psychology and not even the science of politics can possibly provide a positive answer. It is not so much the details of the law as the principle which it adopts that is worth examining. In every age and period the protection of life and property has been accepted as a "fundamental and untransferable duty" of the state. This is the path logic and history shows us. Law No 2495, which in principle can hardly be identified with the concept of the "social state," tends to cause anxiety when it is evaluated in the light of special conditions prevailing in Turkey. In defining the duties and powers of the special security organization, the law says that this organization will be assisting the "police force" and the "civil defense organization," which means state forces. The concept of "assisting the state forces," as stipulated by the new law, is still a bleeding wound in the minds of the Turkish people who had experienced the hardships of recent history. The Turkish people are more aware than any other people about how inhumane crimes and other acts can be committed under the pretence of assisting the state. The same drama is now being experienced by the peoples of Bolivia and El Salvador in Latin America. It is a fact that lawyers have great difficulty in understanding a law that allows the organization of private security forces at a time when certain persons and organizations are undergoing trial in court for assuming duties of "assisting the state," with the prosecution demanding serious punishments for them.

It should not be forgotten that leaving the entire economy in the hands of private enterprise is essentially a matter of political and economic preference. But it should also be remembered that there are duties which the state cnanot assign to anyone else.

MINISTRY NULLIFIES ORDER BANNING ARAYIS ISSUE

NC121040 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 8 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] From the editorial staff: The decision on the confiscation of the seventh issue of ARAYIS has been nullified. As our dear readers will remember, that issue of our magazine was removed from circulation because of the leading article "Torture" written by the Honorable Bulent Ecevit.

In the meantime, the Ankara press prosecutor has sought permission from the Justice Ministry to take legal action against both our publications advisor and chief editor, Honorable Bulent Ecevit, and our publications director, Nahit Duru, in accordance with section 150 of the Turkish penal code.

However, the Justice Ministry decreed that legal action against the Honorable Ecevit and our publications director was unjustified and it rejected the request by the prosecutor's office, adding that there were no grounds on which prosecution could be justified.

Meanwhile, the Ankara press prosecutor resorted to the Court of Justice of the Peace and asked that the seventh issue of ARAYIS be confiscated. The court approved the confiscation of our issue, which contained the leading article "Torture." Our lawyers appealed to a higher court to nullify the decision and to order that the copies of the seventh issue be returned to the proprietors of the magazine. The Court of the First Instance upheld the appeal of our lawyers and nullified the confiscation order of the court of peace.

In the meantime, legal action has been taken against our publication director for violating section 312 of the Turkish penal code in publishing the "editorial of the week" under the headline "The Ordered New Dress" which appeared in the 23rd issue of ARAYIS.

UNION PROTESTS ICFTU SUSPENSION OF MEMBERSHIP

TA141722 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Text] The Administrative Council of the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] has decided that the decision by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU] to suspend Turk-Is membership in the confederation is prejudiced and contrary to procedures, and that activities will continue to rectify the situation. The statement added: Turk-Is, acting from a sense of responsibility, will continue--under the current difficult conditions--to safeguard with sensitivity the high interests of the country in general and the working sector in particular as it has done in the past and is doing at present. The unanimous Turk-Is intention and aim is to continue its relations with the ICFTU within the framework of previously mentioned principles despite the confederation's regrettable decision.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

TA151606 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 15 Aug (A.A.)--Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu announced the 90-day period which may now be applied to detainees before they appear in court would be reduced within a week or two.

Answering a question during his press conference Saturday, Ulusu pointed out the 90-day period of detention had been born out of necessity, to enable law officers to complete investigation of certain cases, but "only a few" detainees were kept the full 90 days in any case.

In his prepared statement, Ulusu had the following to say about the rule of law and the restoration of democracy:

Rule of Law

"While establishing peace and security, the rule of law and order has always been given due attention. Extraordinary courts have not been set up, and trials are carried out by independent judges. This fact must not be ignored. We hope that the politicians of friendly countries will adequately evaluate this important matter."

Law on Constituent Assembly

The law No 2485, 29 June 1981, and the decree No 53 of the National Security Council dated 10 July 1981 on the Constitutent Assembly explicity prove the determination of the present administration to turn over the power to the representatives elected by the people [illegible] restoring the democratic order within a specified program. Despite all of these, certain circles continue their premeditated propaganda activities against Turkey.

However, I once again would like to stress here that, 12 September administration is loyally attached to the rule of natural [word indistinct] and principle of independent court. Arrests and custodies are being carried out totally in accordance with the existing laws."

Trade Unionists

"No leading member of any trade union has been taken under custody or arrested due to union activities. Some trade unionists are taken under custody due to their involvement with anarchic and terrorist activities. At present only 20 trade unionists are under custody and 195 unionists are under arrest and all these have been based on the decision of independent courts. 242 unionists who were under custody have later been released. As I have already underlined, certain circles who do not want a politically and an economically stable and strong Turkey, persist on their unfounded allegations.

Our aim is to achieve rapidly and completely political and economic stability and restore healthy and genuine democracy in our country. To achieve this aim, we rely upon the sound judgement and trust of the Turkish nation."

Reports of Fraud

The prime minister confirmed his government was following up any reports of alleged fraud or other irregularity, but complained that certain reports seemed to be made "merely to obstruct" the functioning of certain institutions by persons of ulterior motives. "We will not be fooled by such intentional false reports," he said. But added genuine irregularities reported would be prosecuted.

Campaign Against Terrorism

Comparing figures about terrorist activity in 20 provinces where martial law was in effect prior to 12 September 1980 with figures for all of Turkey during the 11 months since then, Ulusu noted armed attacks had been reduced from 9,085 to 623, numbers of those injured from 10,417 to 669, and the number of persons killed from 3,710 to 459.

Fifty-five members of the army and the security forces had been killed in line of duty since 12 September 1980, Ulusu announced in the process of protecting peace and safety for citizens.

As for authorized firearms confiscated, the total number for the 20 provinces under martial law for 21 months prior to 12 September 1980 was 29,907 while the number of weapons, including infantry, automatic and hunting rifles, pistols and submachine guns, seized since 12 September had reached 570,404.

To this figure should be added over 160,000 weapons handed in by citizens themselves, plus 21 rocket-launchers, with 77 shells, 5 antiaircraft machine guns, all of which could easily meet the requirements of a field army, the premier noted.

Education

Ulusu believed the draft law on higher education submitted to the National Security Council would prepare Turkish youth to meet the requirements of modern science, and that the law would be enacted in a form suitable to the requirements of Turkey. A draft law on children in need of special training and protection, now on the agenda of the Council of Ministers, would provide better training and employment opportunities for the handicapped.

Courses on Religion

Ulusu said plans to include religion as a required course of instruction in schools would not be put into effect in 1981-82, but only after the curriculum, instructors and other details had been worked out in detail so that school children would have a knowledge of their own faith. Such courses would "not violate the principle of secularism" he believed, which "does not mean agnosticism" in any case.

Ulusu added:

"Religious teaching and education, which is a need for the family and society, will be introduced in schools on a regular basis under the asupices and control of the state.

"Activities of associations originally founded in accordance with the law No 1630 but later channelized towards clandestine religious education, will not be permitted.

The main function of the state is to ensure fully the freedom of religious belief and worship. However, we shall not be mere spectators to the exploitation of our citizen's religious beliefs by some malicious organization and persons through taking advantage of these liberties."

Literacy Campaign

"In the first part of the literacy campaign which started on 23 March 1981 (?55030) literacy courses were introduced and 1,185,310 illiterate citizens attended these courses. Certificates of literacy were given to those who had successfully finished these courses. According to preliminary estimates, 70 percent success rate is expected out of these literacy courses."

Foreign Capital

The prime minister announced his government welcomed foreign capital in all fields, including petroleum or mineral exploration, provided it served the basic goal of increasing production. In this sense, his government did not discriminate between the public or private sector, or domestic and foreign capital, he said.

Return to Collective Bargaining Untimely

He found the proposal by the Turkish Confederation of Labor "Turk-Is" for a return to the collective bargaining process untimely, and believed the Hign Arbitration Council renewing labor contracts was necessary at this time.

The question of convening the labor council was being "studied" the Prime Minister said, but declined to give a specific date. He wanted to assure all concerned that his government was paying continued attention to the question of fair wages according to the principles of "equal pay for equal work."

Price Increases

Ulusu admitted additional price increases for petroleum and petroleum products should be expected in future if the rate for the dollar continues to rise. The important thing was to keep up and increase production, he noted, and experience showed you could not reduce prices through police measures. The government was trying to control increases in prices of food and other essentials, he noted.

Economic Policy

Ulusu made the following statement on the economic situation and his government's economic policy:

It is fact that over the last few years the economic situation in our country had become synonymous with economic crisis. There were domestic and external causes for this situation.

Over the last 20 years, particularly these last 10 years, superficial and unrealistic practices in some policies pursued by developed and industrialized countries and the oil crisis have led to an economic order beset by complicated problems. The Turkish economy has suffered intensively over a long period from these external developments.

However there is another reason why our problems reached such a dimension when compared with other countries. The measures which would have enabled our economy to adjust itself promptly to the changes in the international economic situation were not taken at the proper time. Also, certain inconsistent policies which led to disorders in the economic life were pursued.

Palliative measures instead of lasting solutions have only delayed the problems for a short while. The misleading appearance of prosperity achieved by the injection of inflationary rather than the real income has lasted only momentarily.

The past economic policy of extreme subsidizing and protectionism which was based on suspect economic and social premises disrupted the production and consumption pattern.

It increased even further the balance of payments bottlenecks, created difficulties in financing the (?budgeted) and public enterprises, and prevented the conduct of monetary and credit policy on a sound basis.

Stability Policy Pursued

For this reason we will devotedly follow a comprehensive stability policy in accordance with government program.

The policy of economic stability is not a substitute for the economic development policy. It is not an objective by itself either. The main objective of economic policies is to promote the prosperity of society, namely investment and production.

However if economic development is facing bottlenecks as a result of shortages of some critical factors such as hard currency and financial resources stemming from both internal and external imbalances, stability emerges not as substitute for economic growth but as prerequisite for the establishment of the conditions for a return of economic growth.

As a society we cannot go beyond our capabilities. We are obliged to adapt our consumption to what we produce. This is the essence of our economic policy.

We attach great importance to improve the efficiency in public expenditures and to develop the foreign currency yielding areas in the economy. Our goal is to ensure an economic structure which can maintain its growth relying on its own resources.

Exports

"Today, we are fully mobilized for increasing our exports. The creative capacity and the industrious character of the Turkish nation have started to bear fruit in the area of exports.

Despite the recession observed in the industrialized countries, our exports which have largely increased are now channeled to new markets and are rapidly detaching from their traditional agricultural character. In the first half of 1981 our exports reached 2 billion dollars which corresponds to a 50 (?percent) rise when compared with the same period of last year. The rise in the exports of industrial products is 96 percent. The share of the industrial products in total exports has increased from 35 percent in 1980 to 48 percent in 1981.

Remittances by Turkish Workers Abroad

In the same period according to provisional figures foreign currency earnings from Turkish workers abroad have increased by 27.5 percent on U.S. dollar basis and 55 percent on Deutsche mark basis. Comparing June 1981 with the same month of last year, the foreign currency earnings from the Turkish workers abroad have increased by 33 (?percent) on U.S. dollar basis and 78 on Deutsche mark basis.

The amount of the foreign currency brought to Turkey by the Turkish workers abroad in June 1981 is 206 million dollars. We estimate that this amount will largely increase in July and August.

Contractors Abroad

"A new and rapidly developing source of foreign currency is the construction works undertaken abroad by Turkish contractors. The contracts undertaken in the first half of 1981 amount to 5.7 billion dollars. Together with the contracts of which the official formalities are underway, this figure will rise to approximately 7 billion dollars.

Imports

Despite certain delays observed this year in the utilization of external credit facilities, imports are maintaining throughout a constant increase owing to these extremely favourable developments which are achieved by our own foreign currency resources. By the end of May 1981, the amount of imports is 3.7 billion U.S. dollars. The share of crude oil imports in this figure 1.3 billion U.S. dollars.

National Income

National income, which has decreased for two consecutive years in 1979 and 1980 according to initial estimations, is expected to increase by 3.6 percent this year which surpasses the planned rate of increase. One percent and 5 percent of increase is expected in agriculture and industry respectively.

Inflation Curbed

Inflationary rate was widely curbed, price increases were also decreased from the rates surpassing 100 percent to below 40 percent, although a new trend of price increases beyond the usual one appeared last June. We expect to have moderate trend in the coming days. The real net income secured for the savers has increased the total deposits of the banks by 111 percent at the end of June.

Future Policy

We are committed to maintain the anti-inflationary policy. We also have to keep export activities as a profitable economic field. We are deliberating upon the necessary measures to be taken in order to ensure the rational functioning of the public enterprises. One of our main objectives is to eradicate the causes of injustice among workers, which discourage them while taking into consideration the general equilibrium of the economy.

Energy Policy

The energy issue remains to be a major problem for all the world. Frequent fuel price increases in particular cause bottlenecks in the development efforts of developing countries. In view of this situation it is indeed a must for us to concentrate on thermal generators based on lignite, on one hand, and to rapidly develop our hydropower resources while also installing nuclear generating capacities, on the other. While from a total of 15 billion kw/h of electricity generated in 1975, 17.2 percent was obtained from lignite fuelled generators, 31.5 percent from oil-fuelled generators, 52.7 percent hydropower stations and other generators; in 1980 a total of 232 billion kw/h electricity was generated, 21.5 percent being from lignite fuelled generators, 22.4 percent from oil-fuelled generators and 56.1 percent from hydro and other power stations.

Lignite Resources

Appropriate plans are being drawn up to increase the share of the lignite fueled power stations to 52 percent and to decrease the share of oil fueled power stations to under 7 percent in the total electric consumption in Turkey by (?1990). One of the main principles of our energy policy is to utilize coal instead of oil wherever possible.

Oil Exploration

We are determined to take all the available measures to encourage oil exploration activities in Turkey and to mobilize each and every source both domestic and foreign to that end. In the meantime, all measures to accelerate oil exploration activities of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation are being taken. In fact while in 1980 the oil production of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation was 3.8 million barrels. In the first 7 months of 1981 the same figure reached 3.9 million barrels.

Nuclear Power Station

In order to meet the increasing electricity demand it is necessary to give a major place to nuclear power stations in energy generation. Thus, it is foreseen that by the year 2000, a total of 7,700 mw of nuclear generating capacity would be installed. The Akkuyu nuclear power station which is expected to generate 600 mw from the said amount is to be completed in 1990.

Site selection activities for the second nuclear power station planned to be constructed are also under way.

Tourism

Distinguished members of the press.

Short, medium and long-term measures are being taken in the legislative, administrative and financial fields in order to profit (?and to maximize) the possibilities of foreign currency revenues and employment creation function of tourism, indeed a major potential source for the development of our economy through the establishment of the necessary infrastructure by the government and the superstructure to be constructed and operated by private entrepreneurs with government backing and encouragement.

We are paying special attention to measures aiming at encouraging tourism investments. All necessary facilities will be given to the investments of domestic and foreign capital owners in the tourism sector.

The draft of the law on incentives to tourism, the law on travel agencies and travel agents union, and the law amending the bill on the tourism bank of the Turkish Republic have been adopted by the government and submitted to the National Security Council.

Social Security and Labour Relations

Every effort is being spent to assure a more just remuneration for our workers from the increase in our national income and from our economic development.

To prevent any ill effect on our workers because of the temporary suspension of trade union activities due to social necessities, new responsibilities were given to the high arbitration council through the law enacted on 24th of December 1980 and as you know, since the beginning of the activation of this council until last of August 1981 the collective labour contracts of a total of 403,477 workers employed in 3801 plants were reactivated.

Bilateral Social Security Agreements

Some of the social security agreements signed to preserve and improve the social security of the Turkish workers abroad will be renewed, amended and improved. New rights and advantages were insured for our workers and the members of their families in Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Belgium and the Netherlands. Activities also continue at the technical level to [word indistinct] the social security agreements signed with the Federal Republic of Germany, Austria, France and Libya.

Diplomatic efforts are pursued for the enactment of labor and social security agreements with those countries where a concentration of Turkish workers exist such as in particular the countries of the Middle East.

Similarly, diplomatic contacts continue in Romania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Greece in order to remunerate the periods spent working in these countries and to protect the previous social security rights acquired therein by the Turkish immigrants from these Balkan countries.

Farmers Cooperatives

Inducement of cooperatives are one of the main instruments of our national development. Special care is shown for the support and success of the agriculture-oriented cooperatives according to the realities of the rural areas. Seventy-eight village development cooperatives received 329 million Turkish lira state assistance by the end of July 1981.

Housing

The new law on collective housing envisages the following (?points) in order to encourage house construction: Paying encouragement premiums to the savers, amounting to 25 percent according to the inflation rate in order to stimulate the savings of the citizens for housing.

--Placing credits with a 20 years term of payment and an interest as low as 5 percent at the disposal of citizens who need domiciles, from the public housing fund.

--Allocating medium term investment management and equipment credits to industrial and construction companies which manufacture construction materials.

Price Increases for Petroleum

Since the beginning of 1981 there have been increases in the value of the U.S. dollar resulting in increase of our Turkish lira outlay for oil, price of which is paid by U.S. dollars in the market.

Finally the U.S. dollar has appreciated at 6.56 percent in the period between 26 June-31 July 1981. Consequently, a price increase of 6.56 percent has been introduced to the oil prices on 6th August 1981.

When an increase of 1 Turkish lira on U.S. dollar value is not reflected on the domestic oil prices a financial burden of 4 billion TL would be created for the treasury.

We have witnessed in the past that when reasonable price adjustments are not made in time later increases of about 50 percent were required to be imposed resulting in [word indistinct] consequences.

Therefore we must make necessary price adjustments in time for the successful implementation of the economic measures. Otherwise, it would be necessary to cut down the investments, in other words, to build fewer factories, fewer electric power stations or to finance the gap be resorting the sources of the central bank for deficit financing.

HUNGER STRIKE AT ANKARA MILITARY PRISON ENDS

NC151245 Paris AFP in English 1225 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Ankara, 15 Aug (AFP)--Meanwhile, the hunger strike which has been going on for nearly a month at the Mamak military prison in Ankara was called off during the week, a well-informed source said today.

More than 180 prisoners belonging to left-wing movements had started refusing food to protest against prison conditions, torture and restrictions on legal representation. They gave up the hunger strike of their own free will without their demands being met, an authoritative source said.

KREISKY GETS PERSONAL MESSAGE FROM AS-SADAT

AU170941 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Bad Woerishofen (APA)--In his Bavarian vacation resort of Bad Woerishofen, Chancellor Kreisky has received a personal message from Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat. Through this message, Kreisky, as the only West European politician, has been directly informed about the results of as-Sadat's latest talks with U.S. President Reagan.

The message was brought to Kreisky by Mansur Hasan, Egyptian minister of state for culture and information. Both refused to disclose any details of their talk. Shortly before his meeting with Mansur Hasan in Bad Woerishofen, Kreisky had repeated and confirmed his invitation to as-Sadat to visit Austria in an interview with the Egyptian television service. "I hope to be able to see him soon in Austria; that would give me great pleasure," the chancellor said.

The meeting between Kreisky and Mansur Hasan took place as long ago as last Thursday, but it was kept secret for security reasons until the departure of the Egyptian delegation from the FRG.

PAHR MEETS WITH BRITAIN'S CARRINGTON IN SALZBURG

AU171228 Vienna KURIER in German 17 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Foreign Minister Pahr had a meeting with his British counterpart, Carrington, in Salzburg on Sunday. The main topic of their talk was probably the European Community's attempts to include the Palestinians in a peace dialog in the Middle East. In the past few months the British foreign secretary has provided a few stimuli in this respect--a meeting by Carrington with PLO chief 'Arafat is expected for this fall. This would put Kreisky's talks with the PLO on a broader European basis.

RECORD DEFICIT IN CEMA TRADE EXPECTED FOR '81

AU141040 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 14 Aug 81 p 9

[Summary] Vienna--Austria's trade with CEMA countries, which used to be marked by large favorable balances, has been giving rise to serious concern lately. In the first half of this year Austria incurred a deficit of 4.9 billion schillings in its trade with CEMA countries, more than in the whole of 1980. According to the Austrian Institute for Economic Research, a deficit of about 10 billion schillings is to be expected in trade with CEMA countries this year if the current trend continues and Austria's share in the CEMA market continues to decline.

Although some success has been achieved this year in raising exports to the USSR, imports from this country--mainly fuels--have gone up still more so that Austria's deficit in trade with the USSR in the first half of 1980 was 6 billion schillings. Exports to Poland in this period were 30 percent below the corresponding 1980 figures, while exports to the GDR were 43.5 percent higher. In view of the foreign currency shortage of the small CEMA countries, the only way for Austria to reduce its deficit in trade with CEMA countries is to increase its exports to the USSR.

POLAND'S CZYREK ARRIVES AFTER 1-DAY POSTPONEMENT

LD161026 Hamburg DPA in German 1011 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 16 Aug (DPA)--The meeting between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Polish counterpart, Jozef Czyrek, has been postponed for a day. The Foreign Office in Bonn said today that the Polish foreign minister, who was originally expected on Monday, will not arrive until Tuesday.

Meeting With Genscher

LD180904 Hamburg DPA in German 0851 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] Bad Reichenhall, 18 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today received his Polish opposite number, Josef Czyrek, for a working visit at the Bavarian spa of Bad Reichenhall. The topics of this meeting, which was arranged at short notice, include the economic situation in Poland; the decisions of the Ninth PZPR Congress, questions of international politics and bilateral cooperation.

Genscher will brief Czyrek on the state of German considerations on economic aid for Poland. The Federal Government would approve of this Eastern bloc country joining the IMF. Such a step would facilitate the granting of future credits. Genscher stressed that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko has not indicated any opposition to Poland's joining the fund. So far, Romania is the only Eastern Bloc country to be a member of the IMF.

Czyrek is to return to Bonn this afternoon but no further government talks are planned there.

ALLIED FORCES IN BERLIN PROTEST 'WALL' PARADE

LD131530 Hamburg DPA in German 1508 GMT 13 Aug 81

[Text] Berlin, 13 Aug (DPA)--The allied defense forces in Berlin have protested the parade in East Berlin. In a declaration they said the parade represented a breach of the demilitarized status of the city laid down in treaties and agreements of the Four Powers. The occasion was to be regretted all the more in that it celebrated "the illegal and inhuman building of the Berlin wall, which ignored fundamental human rights."

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT MEETS WITH ENVOY TO GDR

LD161122 Hamburg DPA in German 0946 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 16 Aug (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt received a detailed report Saturday in his holiday home at Brahmsee from State Secretary Klaus Boelling, chief of the Federal Republic's permanent mission in the GDR. A government spokesman in Bonn, announcing the meeting today, said current questions of German policy were discussed.

DPA has learned that Schmidt spoke with Boelling in particular on the assessment of the Honecker-Brezhnev communique, which promised contacts with the Western world. There are, however, still no definite signs, and there is still no reply to the federal chancellor's letter which Boelling personally delivered in East Berlin. The talk at Brahmsee dealt essentially with the principles of inner-German policy, at the forefront of which could be the demonstration once again of willingness to talk.

The chancellor's letter to Honecker mentions no details such as proposed dates for a meeting. Government circles state that the federal chancellor did not want to invite himself, and there is at present no reason to dramatize the development.

BAHR WARNS AGAINST SUBSERVIENCE TO SUPERPOWERS

LD161755 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] Egon Bahr, the SPD deputy and disarmament expert, has stressed the Federal Republic's vital interest in having a voice in the introduction and deployment of new nuclear weapons. At a Berlin SPD ceremony to mark the 20th anniversary of the wall and the 10th anniversary of the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin, Bahr said that the non-nuclear states must not become the hostages of the superpowers. Washington should not degrade the consent of its partners to a mere formality or political cosmetics.

U.S.-USSR MISSILE TALKS EXPECTED IN FALL

LD151056 Hamburg DPA in German 1006 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Stuttgart, 15 Aug (DPA)--With the United States building the neutron weapon, Bonn, in the opinion of government spokesman Lothar Ruehl, expects that U.S.-Soviet negotiations on an agreement on the limitation of medium-range nuclear missiles will "be launched this autumn." Ruehl, in an interview for South German Radio in Stuttgart today, warned against opening a rogues gallery on this subject which contains nothing but American nuclear rogues.

Ruehl also said all reasonable people had to reject the idea that once the public had been frightened, it is being shown the great Russian peace bazaar, where the dulcet sounds of peace are bandied about. It is contrary to historic fact that propaganda should try to give the impression that the Soviet Union demands arms control negotiations and the Americans do not.

The government spokesman again stressed that the deployment of neutron weapons on federal territory is out of the question as far as the Federal Government is concerned. Although in 1978 Bonn in principle declared its willingness to allow introduction "under certain conditions" of the neutron weapon among the allied armed forces in Europe, these preconditions did not and have not materialized. An editorialized version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON REAGAN, BREZHNEV CONTACTS

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Commentary

DW171345 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 15 Aug 81 p 3

[Commentary signed ZER: "Poker and Chess"]

[Text] Alternating baths is an old recipe. It is doubtful, however, that this is as helpful for international politics as for weak circulation. Ronald Reagan, the U.S. President, seems to be of a different opinion. Having shocked some days ago not only the Soviet leadership but also his European allies with the surprising statement that the United States will build the neutron bomb after all--contradicting a decision of his predecessor--he left to relax at his California ranch. There the cold shower was followed by a hot bath.

President Reagan announced--without mentioning a date--that he has written a letter to Soviet party chief Brezhnev, offering a talk on disarmament problems. The aim should be "eliminating the nightmare of the world created by strategic arms." Leonid Brezhnev made a most similar suggestion some time ago. If the leaders of both world powers are serious about it, they could actually meet in the near future.

That much is certain; it cannot be denied that the policy of the U.S. President reminds one of poker. After all, poker is a national game in some parts of the United States. Next to good nerves and the ability to keep one's features under control, quite some luck is necessary to play that game because it does not suffice to just bid on good cards. Sometimes one can win most by bluffing one's partners.

It would be good to know whether Ronald Reagan with his policy of hardness and his passion for more and more new arms just wants to shock the Soviets in order to make them more willing to negotiate. It could then be called a foreign political poker game and one would wish the President good luck. It is just too bad that no poker but chess is a national game in the Soviet Union. The one sitting at the chess board with its 64 squares sees a long-term danger behind every move of his opponent. It has nothing in common with poker.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE View

[Commentary signed G-N.: "Good Understanding"]

[Text] The U.S. President mentioned most casually in Santa Barbara that he has offered a meeting to Soviet state and party chief Brezhnev. The offer was made at some time in past months for an indefinite time in the future. So it was a general statement of preparedness and not a suggestion. Reagan spoke of it not like somebody who thinks very much of "summit diplomacy." It is the first time in a long period of time that a Western government chief does not feel pressured by expectations that peace demands urgently that the leaders of the most important powers of the world must learn to "understand" and appreciate each other.

They understand each other quite well on the basis of their actions. The president indicated that a summit conference needs preparation by the foreign ministers, and that their negotiations need clarity with regard to the aims of disarmament. Obviously, the president does not intend to get the disarmament talks going through a summit conference and to create a promising mood. If at all, he wants to put down with his partner/opponent from Moscow the results of negotiations or preparatory negotiations.

It does not mean, however, that the big powers do not talk to each other. They do it constantly through their diplomats. They will do it next month at the meeting of Secretary of State Haig and Foreign Minister Gromyko. The talking is not limited to the exchange of words. Actions speak for themselves. Reagan wants to see that Brezhnev really wants to disarm. He explained in Santa Barbara that he sees instead Soviet rearmament as never before, further delay and insincere disarmament suggestions of Brezhnev, such as, for example, the production stop for medium-range arms and a ban of neutron arms. It seems that the Moscow leadership does not understand at all that the West wants disarmament for the purpose of a balance. Production stops for medium-range arms are not required but the elimination of these arms; a mere arms ban is not required either, but an exchange deal between tanks on one side and neutron warheads on the other. Reagan understands very well what Brezhnev means by absolutely refusing to understand this.

DIE WELT Speculation

[Enno Von Lowenstern commentary: "On a Pointed Nail"]

[Text] They are wailing, said the President in amusement, as if they were sitting on a pointed nail. This is how Ronald Reagan characterized the sad situation of Soviet policy in view of his decision on the neutron weapon: "Because we are showing the world that we will not allow things to reach a point where they might put the ultimatum to the Free World; surrender or die." And: It is "painful" to the Soviets that their [illegible]l superiority in the field of armor is spoiled by the radiation weapon.

The Soviets, however, have yet another reason to wail, even if these complaints in all probability remain restricted to soundproofed conference rooms. What Reagan has done was offer them a summit meeting with Brezhnev, too.

The Kremlin has always gladly accepted such meetings because they were lucrative. For years, presidents had made concession after concession, in the case of the wall and o SALT, for instance, because they wanted to "bring something home" and suggest to the voters that they know how to handle the Soviets. Khrushchev already bragged to Kennedy in Vienna that he had abetted Kennedy in 1960 by his attitude and driven "the son of a bitch Nixon" into election defeat; Kennedy did not argue.

But now such a meeting has a different business basis. Reagan is not expected to bring back any good marks from the Soviet leaders but good results.

It will be a president who will tell his interloctuers to their faces the facts of Soviet armament, who will call these facts by their proper names and will have experts present accounts on them; a president who will not stay silent in the face of lies or threats for the sake of the "good climate;" a president who may well, in his matchlessly friendly manner, suggest that his statements be verified on the spot whenever and wherever they are not accepted.

They will get down to business; certain alarms sounded by European pacifists will go up in smoke. How do we deal with a statesman of the Free World who will not be bluffed? This is the question which may induce the Moscow leaders to leaf through the works of Lenin in great concentration.

FURTHER REACTIONS TO NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

Politicians' Views

LD161953 Hamburg DPA in German 0908 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] Frankfurt, 16 Aug (DPA)--In the view of DCU Deputy Werner Marx, the neutron weapon is primarily a political instrument. In a Hesse radio broadcast today, he said that he expected the decision to build the weapon to promote Soviet readiness to negotiate. To that extent the neutron weapon would ultimately tend to prevent war He blamed the Federal Government for the "hysterical reactions" and "silly anti-Americanism" among sections of the public. The Federal Government has failed in the past to bring home to citizens the realities of the weapons situation.

In the same program, Egon Bahr, the former SPD manager, expressed the hope that despite Reagan's decision the Soviet Union would remain interested in negotiations to reduce theater nuclear forces. He recalled that, since the beginning of the seventies, Socialist-Liberal coalition had 'enormously increased' the Federal Republic's conventional defense potential.

FDP General Secretary Guenter Verheugen said he respected everybody who had sleepless nights over the course of events. The introduction of the neutron weapon blurred the boundary between conventional and nuclear warfare. DPA received an edited version of the three men's statements on Hesse Radio's "Frankfurt Conversation" program.

Radio Panel Discussion

DW171009 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 0930 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Excerpts from roundtable discussion on the neutron weapon by SPD Disarmament Spokesman Egon Bahr, CDU defense expert and chairman of the Bundestag defense committee Werner Marx and FDP Secretary General Guenter Verheugen, with Raimund Klinkhammer as moderator--recorded]

[Text] [Bahr] Supposing that an attack by the West would be absolutely out of the question, and further supposing--which I must--that the Soviet Union also has the neutron weapon and might produce it now, the question arises whether the Soviet Union could use this weapon for offensive purposes. All I can say is that if we go by the sandtable games of NATO which proceed from the premise that the Soviet Union would attack--as these are the only circumstances under which NATO strategy works--it is absolutely clear that for the Soviet Union the use of neutrons is an ideal weapon for clearing the terrain of defenders and later occupying it by its own task forces as intact as possible, especially since this terrain will not remain polluted for long.

[Klinkhammer] The same would be true for NATO in the event the case of defense occurs. NATO could inactivate the Soviet armored units and occupy the territory.

[Bahr] Yes, this is applicable to both sides. Hence, it is a weapon for both, defense and offensive. And since the potentials will then be balanced I fail to see any particular advantage, least of all for us in the Federal Republic or for Germany as a whole.

[Marx] I do want to point out that as far as I and the CDU/CSU are concerned--and I think the West as a whole--weapons of this nature are above all political weapons. The Soviet Union has so many offensive weapons that it is necessary for this very reason to have the capability of deploying a classical defensive weapon, for example also against the massive conventional threat which we are facing. Preventing war from breaking out is one of the most important contents of military policy and of the use of this weapon.

[Verheugen] I agree with you that the deterrent effect of the neutron weapon against armored units is enormous, to be sure, and I recall from the discussion of 1977/78 that the problem then was assessed in such a way--and there is no way of dodging it--that the borderline between a conventional and a nuclear conflict threatens to be obliterated and that, therefore, the problem of a transition from a conventional to a nuclear clash does exist. I am quite alarmed by what the U.S. secretary of defense has added to the justification of the decision on the production of the weapon when he--in what I consider a somewhat nonchalant way--said that if the Europeans are no longer capable of making a decent defense contribution, we ought to be allowed to do what is necessary to equip our troops stationed in Europe in such a way that they cannot be attacked. What this means in the vernacular is that he proceeds from the premise that the conventional defensive potential of the alliance is not at all sufficient anymore for fending off a conventional attack and that the response then must come in the very first stage by using this weapon, the risk of what the other side would then do being absolutely incalculable. Unfortunately, all that we argue with regard to the strategy and tactics of the alliance suffers from the terrible shortcoming that we do not know exactly what the reaction of the other side would be in case of hostilities. I would have preferred a discussion on ways of enhancing the conventional effectiveness in Europe.

[Bahr] Very clearly, in 1970, and quite purposefully the Social-Liberal coalition enormously enhanced the defensive capability of the Bundeswehr against armored attacks. Actually, we have the most modern small antitank missile capabilities. Many thousand times over we have verified in the Bundeswehr what we have seen in the last Middle East war, namely, that even the small Israeli army, equipped with this type of defense weapons, stopped more than 1,000 tanks--of Soviet make, by the way.

I fully agree with you, Mr Verheugen, in this point by the way; if the Americans say that they intend to equip their 203-mm howitzers with neutron grenades, then we are dealing with a range of an average of 20 kilometers, which means that the decision must be made very quickly lest these weapons fall into the hands of the enemy and conventional warfare cross the nuclear threshold almost imperceptibly. This constitutes a serious danger.

[Klinkhammer] It began with a firm commitment of the Americans that negotiations on medium-range missiles will take place in November.

[Marx] I was content that the Soviets gradually gave up their apodictic refusal to negotiate at all. I believe that the decision in connection with the neutron weapon will activate the wish of both sides to negotiate on existing arms. In this respect I believe that in this field, too, the idea of serious negotiations has been activated, although I do not know exactly with what negotiation methods this weapon will be handled. I say explicitly that it seems most important to me to think all these components through in order to then see in what form this can be negotiated. I am not so certain that we should be happy about a negotiation result that would eliminate some Soviet missiles while definitely confirming Soviet superiority.

[Bahr] Well, the neutron weapon will not reach the Soviet Union while the missiles will reach the Soviet Union. I conclude--and I hope it is not premature--that the Soviet Union will remain interested in negotiations on medium-range missiles. On principle, I take a positive view of including neutron arms and other arms in the new negotiations.

[Verheugen] I believe that negotiations will begin, but we should not have any illusions. It will take a long time and I am not very optimistic that reductions will be achieved very quickly. I would be somewhat more optimistic if the Soviet Union had taken some respective action after its statements, such as, for example, stopping the further production of SS-20 missiles. But they still produce and deploy them. This ought to be pointed out possibly because we like to criticize our own alliance partners.

[Klinkhammer] What about our people? The news about the neutron bomb has caused much disturbance among our people. One has the feeling of almost facing the next world war.

[Marx] I believe that the government neglected in past years to explain to the people the real positions, so that it is being considered as most irritating to be awakened from friendly dreams and illusions. I greatly fear--and Mr Verheugen indicated it in a sentence--that the almost hysterical reaction of some people, while the government still keeps quiet, results indeed in a foolish anti-Americanism. I think it is very bad if our best ally is being more and more exposed to slander. I consider it a most dangerous development because I know that the American populace is more and more irritated by such statements coming from Europe. Some day it will have an effect on political decisions which will not be to our advantage.

[Bahr] As regards America, I must say that a person like Rowny, who headed the disarmament talks, said about the neutron weapon that he would reject it if he were in Europe. If important Americans say that it can be rejected, we Europeans can do that also.

[Verheugen] I believe that people in our country should be understood who cannot sleep because of all this. They see that we are talking for decades about disarmament, that we agree that disarmament is of greatest importance, but that for many, many years there is actually more armament in Europe and in the whole world including, unfortunately, all kinds of weapons.

POLAND'S CZYREK, MAUROY HOLD TALKS IN PARIS

French Aid Pledged

NC171919 Paris AFP in English 1914 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 17 Aug (AFP)--Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy today pledged continued French aid to Poland following a two-hour meeting here with Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek. Speaking to reporters, Mr Mauroy added that Paris would "strive along with its partners in the European Community" for supplementary aid to Poland if it proved necessary and that France was still actively working for the allocation of a 500 million-dollar joint loan to Poland from several Western countries.

Expressing satisfaction at the meeting, Mr Czyrek said it had confirmed "the good relations between the two countries." He said he had renewed an invitation to President Francois Mitterrand to visit Poland next year.

Mr Mauroy said that he too would be visiting Poland shortly at the invitation of Warsaw.

Mauroy Comments

LD171850 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Text] Moscow took advantage of the weekend to take things in hand again. On the banks of the Black Sea, in the Crimea, Leonid Brezhnev announced to the Polish number one, Kania, that the USSR will settle or will try to settle, Warsaw's economic problems, beginning with deliveries of cereals. The chance arrangement of timetables has come into play and France is the first Western country to be informed directly about the results of the Crimea summit. The Polish minister of foreign affairs, Jozef Czyrek, is paying a lightning visit to Paris. He was received a short while ago by Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy at the Hotel Matignon. Mr Mauroy confirmed the seriousness of the situation. He didn't hide it when he spoke to Philippe Legres.

[Begin Mauroy recording] We listened with seriousness to what was said to us about Poland's very difficult situation in the economic field. Very difficult, and not only in the sphere of food but also in the industrial sphere. (?It is said that the whole of) the Polish economy is in difficulty, and it is not a matter of a few weeks or a few months. Poland will need some years to recover its full capacity. Well, I confirmed to him that during that period of French Government intends to help Poland. We have helped Poland in the area of food, you know how and with what speed the cereals, meat, fruit and sugar were transported to Poland, and also pharmaceutical products. [end recording]

GABONESE PRESIDENT CONFERS WITH MITTERRAND

PM171318 Paris LE MONDE in French 2-3 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] Mr Bongo, president of the Republic of Gabon, who is due to return to Libreville on Sunday 2 August at the end of a 3-day visit to France, had talks with Mr Pierre Mauroy on Saturday morning.

The Gabonese head of state, who had been Mr Mitterrand's guest at lunch on Friday, stated: "I can assure you that Franco-Gabonese cooperation is in a good state and President Mitterrand gave me every assurance on it....our main concern is to extend and strengthen this cooperation in friendship, sincerity and fidelity, beyond our personal relationship."

For his part, Mr Mitterrand said: "Gabon and France have maintained good and sound relations for a long time. Everything we said can only help to maintain and extend them.... We have many plans. We will have the opportunity to meet each other soon at the Franco-African summit which will probably be held in France in October. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate the importance I attached to discussing our common interests with President Bongo."

During his talks with the French head of state, Mr Bongo mentioned Franco-Gabonese relations (France is Gabon's leading trade partner) and problems of security in central Africa. Indeed the president thinks that there is a serious risk of destabilization in this region, and especially in Gabon "owing to the threat from the Soviet Union, using other countries as intermediaries."

The Quai d'Orsay stated that it still did not know if the four exiles, who are in Mendoza (Argentina), would accept the French offer, which was publicized by the French Embassy in Buenos Aires. Other countries had also stated their willingness to accept them.

Those concerned are the president of the Chilean Human Rights Commission, a former leader of the Christian Democratic Party and minister of justice during the presidency of Eduardo Frei, Jaime Castillo Velasco; two ministers in the deposed government of Salvador Allende, Orlando Cantuarias and Carlos Briones; and a former senator and leader of the Christian left before Pinochet rose to power, Alberto Jerez.

For his part, Castillo Velasco expressed his intention to go to Venezuela.

'FIRST 100-DAYS POLL' EVALUATES MITTERRAND JOB

NC151819 Paris AFP in English 1806 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 15 Aug (AFP)--One hundred days into the term of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, 44 percent of French people polled in a recent survey said they felt his presidency had been "positive" so far.

Another 35 percent of 1,000 people questioned in the poll, published in the weekly JOURNAL DU DIMANCHE, said they felt his term had been mainly negative.

The most positive innovations of the Mitterrand presidency, according to those polled, were the higher minimum wage and increased family and old age benefits. Government decentralization, nationalization of key industries, and appointment of communist cabinet ministers also scored well.

However, the survey found that other measures were less popular, including the release of minor offenders from prison and elimination of the death penalty. Plans to allow immigrants to vote in local elections were particularly unpopular, according to the poll.

Comrade Rubbi confirmed the commitment of the Italian Communists, together with all the country other democratic forces, to carry out actions displaying solidarity in support of the Polisario Front's struggle for a prompt and peaceful solution whereby the west Saharan people's national rights would be recognized.

PCI'S BUFALINI INTERVIEWED ON DISARMAMENT

PM141504 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 9 Aug 81 pp 1, 14

[Renzo Foa interview with PCI secretariat member Paolo Bufalini: "Bufalini: Arms Race Must Be Stopped Now"--date and place not given]

[Text] What can be done to speed up negotiations capable of breaking this dangerous arms race? This question was put to Paolo Bufalini the day after the Italian Government's decision to choose Comiso as the base for the cruise missiles.

[Answer] The Italian Government's decision to choose Comiso as a site for the NATO missiles is a serious matter. I would like to make myself very clear on this. It is in fact true that the moratorium proposed by Brezhnev in his talks with Brandt makes provision only for the suspension of the deployment on European territory of the missile by both sides and not of the manufacture of these weapons; but this moratorium would take place on the hypothesis that the negotiations which the USSR has repeatedly proposed between NATO and the Warsaw Pact begin and, obviously, that they are serious negotiations. However, the Italian Government's decision goes much further because it initiates construction work on the base for the cruise missiles and constitutes a grave political act in that it once again replies with a fait accompli to the USSR's avowed readiness for negotiations and agreements.

But it is also a grave matter for another reason: The same government communique says that there is no hurry, that it will take years and so forth. So what need was there to take this action so hurriedly on the eve of the August vacation period, with parliament in recess and while efforts are being made to remove the strong resistance to the start of negotiations? The intention was obviously to give a political sign which goes in the opposite direction from the one which is necessary and which the government itself swears it wishes to take.

As regards the choice of Comiso, this is a challenge to the Sicilian people's desire for peace, shown so many times in the most unitary and combative ways, and it is an attack on its autonomy which is chiefly the autonomous region's right to take part in decisions which affect the island's fundamental vital interests. Back in May we Communists--and I took part in it personally--staged a great people's demonstration for peace in Comiso; we will continue and step up the protest and the struggle.
[answer ends]

Thus the decision to base the cruise missile in Comiso was the starting point of the conversation with Bufalini who, together with Gianni Cervetti, was in Moscow recently at the invitation of the CPSU Central Committee to attend the opening of the avenue which the Soviet capital has named for Luigi Longo and to exchange views at this very delicate--and possible crucial--time in international relations.

[Question] With what impression did you return after your talks with Ponomarev and Zimyanin, two of the most important CPSU leaders?

[Answer] The meeting produced a generally positive result. This was chiefly for one precise reason: Our Soviet comrades fully confirmed the proposals on the start of negotiations on missiles in Europe and on the moratorium on the deployment of the missiles themselves. This confirmation was accompanied by a request for negotiations to start as soon as possible.

[Question] In short, you found a positive climate?

[Answer] I have no doubt about the sincerity of the Soviet proposals and desire to negotiate not only to limit but also to consistently reduce nuclear and conventional armaments in Europe.

[Question] That is a very binding assertion. But you are not the only one to have returned from Moscow and to stress the opportunities now open. There have already been Brandt, Palme and Lord Carrington, and the results of their missions inspired trust.

[Answer] Yes, I would like to stress this result because in Italy there is controversy based on misinformation and distortion precisely of these Soviet proposals. During the senate debate on confidence in the government, Spadolini said that the idea of a moratoruim could not be accepted because it would freeze a situation of military imbalance. The DC newspaper went so far as to write not only that the assurances given by Brezhnev to Brandt could not be given serious consideration but even that Brandt had been taken for a ride.

[Question] Before leaving for Moscow you wrote an article in L'UNITA in which you controversially asked why the West does not take account of the new proposals from the East, specifically the moratorium, but also the article in which Defense Minister Ustinov put forward specific proposals on the possibility of nogotiations to guarantee security in Eruope.

[Answer] There is a tendency to cling to the false idea that the moratorium freezes a situation of Soviet superiority. The USSR's proposal--I explained this in my article and am reiterating it--is the following: As soon as negotiations are opened, the deployment of missiles should stop. In my article I openly stated that it is, therefore, a unilateral moratorium since the Pershing II and cruise missiles are still under construction, while the SS 20 missiles have been deployed for some time already. Therefore, as soon as negotiations open, the Soviets will be the only ones to suspend deployment, while production of the American missiles will continue. The fact that this is the correct interpretation is proved by the fact that PRAVDA for 1 August gave prominence to my article.

[Question] This action by PRAVDA made your meetings even more useful.

[Answer] This latest clarification is another positive result of general interest to all those who are convinced that negotiations must be started immediately if this new and terrifying race for new arms is to be stopped. There are possibilities of doing so.

[Question] You say: Immediately. The note in which the Defense Ministry explained the choice of Comiso for the cruise missiles on Friday was also--paradoxically--the first official Italian document which gave a partly positive assessment of the Brezhnev's proposals to Brandt and of Ustinov's Proposals.

However, it centered on the argument that there is time, because the American missiles will not be deployed in Europe for another 2 years. But is time now on the side of negotiations or the arms race?

[Answer] It is obvious that time is on the side of the arms race. So far, the Reagan administration has shown its desire to play for time precisely to increase the arms competition. The very speed with which the Italian Government chose the cruise missiles base shows how serious and threatening the delay in negotiations is per se.

[Question] Did you gather other elements of information in Moscow which are prompting you to emphasize the urgency of negotiations?

[Answer] I read Ustinov's article very carefully. It contains a series of interesting proposals, ranging from extending confidence-building measures (mutual monitoring of military manuevers) to questions of missile balance. On the one hand Ustinov said that the USSR is prepared to negotiate the reduction of its own medium-range missiles in Europe and also, as he states, a considerable reduction, provided, of course, NATO pledges not to deploy the Pershing II and cruise missiles. In other words, he is proposing to establish a balance in the European theater in the medium-range missile sphere, reducing them to the lowest possible level and even removing from their ramps the Sovies missiles whose strength alters the balance of forces. On the other hand, however, Ustinov asserts, with arguments worthy of consideration, that the deployment of the Pershing II missiles in Western Europe would alter the intercontinental strategic balance since these devices can strike the USSR's strategic bases in 5 to 6 minutes, whereas a Soviet response would reach the bases on the American continent in a much longer time. The conclusion which Ustinov draws is this: Unless agreement is re hed through negotiations on reducing these armaments in Europe, the Soviet Union will have to equip itself with more missiles and new weapons, with the result that the two sides would follow each other in seeking a balance at a higher not a lower level.

[Question] This is precisely what we call the arms race.

[Answer] As you know, we have never denied that the balance in the European theater might have been altered in the USSR's favor, nor have we been able to assert the opposite with certainty, as others have done with, I would say, prejudiced and simplistic confidence. Instead we have always maintained that the question was very complex since it was necessary to also take account of the U.S. forward bases around the USSR, of the connection between the balance on the various theaters and the overall strategic balance and also of many other military and political factors. For this very reason we immediately called for negotiations as the only way of avoiding the new surge in the arms race and of attaining a controlled balance at the lowest possible level.

[Question] What can be done to encourage negotiations?

[Answer] I am convinced that it would not only be serious and dangerous but would also demonstrate a blind and narrow factionalism not to pay attention and take notice of the USSR's clear readiness for negotiation. There have been many good-will gestures aimed at instigating negotiations. There was the meeting between Brezhnev and Schmidt 1 year ago, then Brezhnev's proposals at the 26th CPSU Congress, then a meeting between Brezhnev and Brandt, and now Ustinov's proposals. Of course, let it be clearly understood that we do not want there to be missiles on either side, neither SS-20s nor "Euromissiles," because, among other things, we are not so naive as to think that it is possible to request and secure unilateral arms limitations or reductions from either bloc. However, I must emphasize that this is a crucial and dramatic time. Tensions, conflicts and threats are increasing with particular acuteness in some areas, from the Middle East to the Gulf and also in Europe. Today it is even clearer that the alternative to nego iation is a quantitative and qualitative increase in arms.

[Question] Is it enough to call attention to the urgent need for negotiation? In your article in L'UNITA, which we mentioned previously, you launched an appeal for mobilization. Our party grew in the struggle for peace. Today we hear criticism of passivity and reluctance. Is that fair criticism?

[Answer] We msut make ourselves clear on this point. There has been no shortage of demonstrations in Italy by our party as well as united demonstrations (some of them very big demonstrations like the one in Florence last year). It is also important to bear in mind that our party is such a big force in Italy that even from opposition ranks it exerts pressure on the government and has a major influence in the debate with other political forces. Nonetheless I would like to add that the party Directorate is repeating its appeal to all organizations to overcome the tendency to underestimate the great international problems and the safeguarding of peace. Orientation defects must also be corrected. But above all the action must be organized energetically.

There is one question I would like to emphasize in conclusion: Recently action for peace and on international problems has been carried out sectorially in the party through the efforts of comrades who devote their attention especially to these questions and do so more in terms of study and theoretical work than in mobilization. This is not enough. Today peace is a dilemma which must directly concern the party's leadership bodies, at central level, in the regions, provinces and sections.

I think there has been confusion over the idea expressed so strongly by Togliatti, who said that the advent of nuclear weapons has changed the world and hence the fundamental conditions governing the strategy of the class struggle, peoples' emancipation and socialism. Therefore we must regain full awareness that the struggle for peace is the supreme task for mankind's salvation and hence the fundamental basis for our struggle.

BALSEMAO ASKS DELAY ON RESIGNATION DECISION

NC161608 Paris AFP in English 1547 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] Lisbon, 16 Aug (AFP)--Social Democratic chief Francisco Pinto Balsemao, who resigned last week as prime minister, has asked to be given until Wednesday to decide whether or not to reserve his decision, a Social Democratic spokesman announced here today.

The announcement came after Pinto Balsemao met this morning with a party delegation which told him that the party's National Council, meeting this weekend, was virtually unanimous in wanting him to continue as prime minister.

Pinto Balsemao, according to the spokesman, said this represented a "significant change" in relation to the previous meeting of the National Council, whose lukewarm support had led him to submit his resignation as prime minister.

Details of Speech

[Teresa de Sousa report]

[Text] We have a few details of the speech delivered a short while ago by resigning Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao. The four main points of the speech were that his resignation was the only way to put an end to the well-known strategy pursued by the minority opposed to him; that the situation in the Social Democratic Party [PSD] is one of confrontation; that it is necessary to rethink the Democratic Alliance's blueprint, which should be viewed as a dynamic blueprint; and finally, Pinto Balsemao reaffirmed that he will not agree to be the prime minister of the next constitutional government when it is formed, although he remains at the party's dispos[illegible] find a solution to the crisis [passage indistinct].

A last-minute report indicates that Vasco Pulido Valente has resigned as member of the National Council of the PSD. In a letter presented to the council, Pulido Valente defended the Democratic Alliance and reiterated his disagreement with Pinto Balsemao.

MULTIPARTY DEFENSE ADVISORY GROUP ESTABLISHED

PM171041 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 30 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] Members of the Liberal, Conservative, Center Democrat and Christian People's parties have formed a "multiparty defense group" with Folketing Member Bent Honore (Christian People's Party) as chairman. The majority of members of the group are either former or current members of their respective parties' defense committees.

An announcement from the defense group said the group is striving for close contact with, and offers its support to, the four parties' members on the Folketing Defense Committee, defense policy negotiators and the parties' own defense committees.

The group will work to reintroduce conscription and said that the armed forces, like all other public sectors, must be guided by the politicians. The group suggests an annual defense debate to check on the progress made on political decisions about the development of the defense forces.

The group has been formed just as the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party, together with the Radical Liberals, are about to start decisive negotiations with the Social Democrats for a new defense settlement. The meeting for these talks will take place on 7 August.

WEST'S ROLE IN HELPING POLAND EXAMINED

PM171445 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 3 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Poland Needs Help"]

[Text] The weekend's clear warning from the Politburo in Warsaw about the dangers of a major Polish conflict comes as new confirmation that Poland is now teetering on the brink of economic--and subsequent political--catastrophe. The special party congress that ended less than 2 weeks ago probably did clear up a number of questions, but it has not solved any of the urgent problems in Polish society. These are first and foremost economic. A terrible atmosphere is created within and beyond a country's borders when "hunger marches" pass through large cities in the heart of Europe. This is exactly what happened in Poland, and even in the country's second largest city, Lodz, last week.

ne Politburo is probably right when it declares in its warning that no one is threatened wit[illegible]vation in Poland today, but this is cold comfort for Poles who must spend nearly all their free time in food lines in order to ensure that they get enough food--and end up with a menu just enough to fill them without providing what is considered a minimum balance between various nutritional elements.

Nevertheless Poland is not alone with its problems in Eastern Europe. Today the Americans and Russians begin negotiations in Vienna for large new Soviet grain purchases, now that it is already clear that this year's production in the Soviet Union is once again far below the planned targets. Other Eastern European countries are expecting a below-average harvest. But at the same time it is obvious that these countries have had to make hefty contributions to keeping Poland's economic head above water. In the first 6 months of this year the Soviet Union has lost so much of its foreign currency reserves that the only explanation can be that Moscow has given more support to the Polish economy than has hitherto been supposed. The Eastern Europeans are receiving far less Polish coal than their plans envisage--Poland's exports to its CEMA partners sank by 14 percent, while imports from them rose by 5.4 percent in the first 6 months of this year. The whole of the Eastern bloc economic system is creaking at the seams, and the key question today is whether the Kremlin will--or CAN--attempt to reestablish former conditions through the use of military force, or whether the Eastern bloc will adapt itself to the Western world's economic rules.

This is where the Western nations' credits totaling 160 billion kroner come into the picture. Western governments have delayed capital and interest repayments on over 14 billion kroner, and private banks in the West have agreed to a postponement of repayments--but do not want to abandon their interest. Private financial institutions have different considerations to take into account here than governments which carry supreme political responsibility. And this responsibility says that Western governments should be actively involved in ensuring the refinancing of Polish debts, to help the country's economy to get moving again, avert a catastrophe and--above all--prevent the Polish liberalization experiment from dying an economic death. Norway also has a role to play here. The Polish authorities must in their turn help by giving all the necessary information for, and about, credits. As a matter of urgency they should seek membership in the IMF and put all their efforts into the work for thorough economic reforms in Poland.

MINISTRY TO INVESTIGATE WALLENBERG INFORMATION

PM171117 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 11 Aug 81 p 6

[Text] The Foreign Ministry views the new reports which have come to light in Israel in the Raoul Wallenberg case with great skepticism. However, the Foreign Ministry intends to seek out the new witness, Yaakov Menaker, in Tel Aviv.

Permanent Under Secretary Leif Leifland has personally instructed the Swedish Embassy in Tel Aviv to look for Menaker and to request that specialists from the Foreign Ministry be allowed to come to Israel to hear his views. Leifland stressed that the new reports are considerably different from earlier testimony and documentation. He said this contributes to the skepticism.

However, the Wallenberg affair is so well known internationally that all new reports are checked carefully by the Foreign Ministry.

As soon as the embassy give the go-ahead, the Foreign Ministry will send an official to Tel Aviv.

Menaker's testimony is briefly that as a lieutenant in the Russian army during the war, he was in contact with the officers who arrested Wallenberg. According to the report, Brezhnev was the chief responsible for the unit in Budapest. He has dscribed how one by one these officers were rendered harmless or lost their posts, all so that the Wallenberg affair should be hushed up. He does not explain why he has waited till now to publicize his knowledge.

New Facts Noted

PM140838 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Wallenberg Affair"]

[Text] "AFTONBLADET'S revelations that Leonid Brezhnev organized and led the unit the Red Army that arrested Raoul Wallenberg in 1945 will inevitably give the whole affair a major political perspective...."

This was how AFTONBLADET began its editorial on Monday in which it demanded definite information about Wallenberg's fate.

For many long years Sweden tried to keep its efforts to clarify Wallenberg's fate as a separate Swedish-Russian affair. Many consider this a great mistake. With a tougher attitude from the very start and with the support of a large body of public opinion, the prospects of having Raoul Wallenberg set free would have been much much greater The policy of patience has had no results.

In a couple of interesting, not to say sensational, articles AFTONBLADET now publishes new facts on the Wallenberg case.

One of them claims that Brezhnev was head of the 18th Army political section when Wallenberg was arrested and taken away by Soviet troops. One of Brezhnev's duties was to decide which people should be arrested and which not. The Wallenberg Committee has also had the same verbal reports from independent sources in Moscow. However, these reports have been kept confidential in order not to make the committee's work more difficult.

The second report comes from a new witness, Yaakov Menaker, who tells how friends of his in the 18th Army arrested Wallenberg.

Over the years the Foreign Ministry has collected an impressive body of material concerning the Wallenberg case. Nevertheless these two reports are new to the Foreign Ministry.

In one important respect the reports do not create any new clarity. The Soviet Union has admitted that Wallenberg was arrested by Russian troops and taken to the Soviet Union to die later in the notorious Lubyanka jail.

Thus the arrest is beyond all doubt. It is what happened to Wallenberg after this which has been impossible to clarify in any way. Sweden has not received any reports here that clearly confirm that Wallenberg could still be alive.

TURKISH CYPRIOT BAYRAM PROTESTS AIRCRAFT INCIDENT

TA161539 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] Greek Cypriot air traffic controllers at Larnaca Greek Cypriot airport failed yesterday to prevent a Swiss airplane from making a landing at Ercan state airport. The plane had been dispatched to pick up a seriously ill French woman from the Turkish sector of Nicosia. Greek Cypriot air traffic officers tried, by various lies, to make the plane's pilot land at their airport. However, a British pilot and a Cyprus Turkish Airways pilot intervened and the Swiss airplane landed at Ercan state airport and picked up the patient. After refueling, the plane departed for France.

The minister of communications, works and tourism, Mr Mehment Bayram, is understood to have protested the Greek Cypriot action. Mr Bayram said that Ercan state airport is fully equipped according to international standards.

PAPER DESCRIBES ATHENS' APPRAISAL OF PROPOSALS

NC171035 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 17 Aug 81 p 8

[Telephone dispatch by Dh. Zannidhis]

[Text] Athens, 16 Aug--The Greek Government does not share the optimism of Turkish officials in Ankara that soon there will by no Cyprus issue. (Editorial note: A relevant statement has been made by Mr Turkmen.) This is so, because the submitted Turkish proposals are not seen as auguring an early settlement. Besides, it is believed that the Turkish proposals, submitted under Western pressures, aim at preserving the dialogue so as to give the impression to the West that Turkey has made concessions and any stalemate should be attributed to the Greek side's intransigence.

The Athens position, which has been conveyed to Nicosia, is that the Turkish proposals on the territorial issue actually constitute a political partition unless they are dissociated from the constitutional aspect of the problem and should be rejected in their entirety.

According to available information, the Turkish Government has sounded out the Greek Government on whether the latter would be prepared to exercise its influence for the consideration of the Turkish proposals in a spirit of understanding. At the same time, Ankara let it be understood that it would gladly accept consultations with Athens which would be of assistance to the Greek Cypriot [as published] dialogue.

The Rallis government has rejected this idea, stressing at the same time that it is not prepared now to discuss and undertake any commitment related to the Cyprus issue. It has also stressed that the entire issue should concern the new Greek Government, which will result from the forthcoming parliamentary elections, and which would have the people's most recent mandate and increased authority to discuss the Cyprus developments. Nevertheless, certain Western circles have attempted to persuade the Rallis government that a sensational manifestation in the Cyprus issue would help the New Democracy party in the forthcoming elections.

According to these Western circles, Turkey is prepared to assist in such a manifestation because it is concerned over the election results and fears Papandreou's assuming power because "he has declared nationalistic and intransigent positions on the Cyprus issue."

PASOK circles have said that in the even the party assumes power, Papandreou's policy on the Cyprus issue would be summed up as follows:

1. Opening of the Cyprus dossier.
2. Interruption of any Greek-Turkish dialogue referring to the Cyprus issue so long as the Turkish troops do not withdraw from Cyprus.
3. Internationalization of the Cyprus issue.

In the meantime, it is reported that certain ideas concerning Greek-Turkish relations, including the Cyprus issue, will be conveyed from Washington by the new U.S. ambassador in Athens, Mr Stearns, who has earlier served in Athens and was deeply involved in Greek-Turkish affairs.

MILLIYET SAYS WALDHEIM INVOLVED IN NEW PROPOSALS

NC180916 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 11 Aug 81 p 1 & 13

[Text] Nicosia (HURRIYET)--While the Greek Cypriot side is continuing to study the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the first official statement on them has been made by the Greek Cypriot minister of justice. Speaking at a memorial service of an EOKA man, Justice Minister Dhimitriadhis stated that the Greek Cypriot administration is carefully studying the Turkish Cypriot proposals. He added that "the Greek Cypriots will not make any concessions on the essence of the issue and that they will never accept faits accomplis."

The Greek Cypriot newspaper I DHIMOKRATIKI, on the other hand, has published a report based on British Foreign Office's sources to the effect that U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has promised that a "give-and-take" method will be implemented and that "the Cyprus question will be resolved through mutual flexibility."

On the other hand, the new Turkish Cypriot proposals, which are accompanied by a map and which have been submitted on condition that "the entire issue will be settled simultaneously in all its aspects", have caused a silent struggle between Greece and the Greek Cypriot administration. Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has pointed out the "method used in preparing the Turkish Cypriot proposals" and exerted great efforts in Nicosia to avert their "hasty rejection."

Since the divergence of views between the Greek Cypriot administration and himself deepened, Mitsotakis was compelled to "extend" his stay in Cyprus by 2 days.

Kiprianou, who continues to be in power with the support of the communist party, AKEL, which advocates "the settlement of the Cyprus issue at an international conference," informed Mitsotakis that the Turkish Cypriot proposals are unacceptable. Upon being told this, Mitsotakis responded by pointing out that by rejecting the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the Greek Cypriot side would be placing itself "in an indefensible position" in the eyes of the pro-Greek Cypriot Western states and some Islamic and nonaligned countries.

The Greek foreign minister drew attention to the way "the territorial map"--which has led the Greek Cypriot side into an impasse--was prepared. According to information we have obtained, the outline of "territorial map" was prepared by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim upon the "recommendations" of President Carter, Britain, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and other members of the EEC.

At a secret meeting at which TFSC constitutional adviser Professor Mumtaz Soysal was present, Kurt Waldheim worked on the map with his own hand and, since the Turkish Cypriot authorities "showed no reaction" to this preparatory work, he signed the map and filed it "as a UN document."

Since UN Secretary General Waldheim "consulted the Governments of the United States, Britain, the FRG and Canada as well as Greece and obtained their "approval," the Turkish Cypriot proposals thus also carry the approval of these states. Diplomatic circles say that the proposals are a great victory for the foreign policies of Turkey and the TFSC and that for the first time since the peace operation they have created the impression of being "the side which sincerely hopes for peace."

The new Turkish Cypriot package of proposals provides "a territorial map" and "an expanded map of Varosha" as well as approaches to constitutional matters, practical measures and security issues. The new territorial adjustments, which include Varosha, will enable about 50,000 Greek Cypriots to return to their old homes. The map that had been submitted earlier, and the principles of "provisional administration" have been dropped. The southern border of Varosha has been moved from "Ayios Memnon" Avenue as far as the "buffer zone" near Dherinia village. The area that is defined as "the buffer zone" which stretches from east to west and which has a width of 1.5 to 2 kilometers is being ceded to the Greek Cypriots.

Also ceded to the Greek Cypriots are Kokkina and Louroujina as well as the part of Xerovounos that is 3 kilometers west of Limnitis, overlooking the Pyrgos Bay. In return for these "territorial concessions," which are in the form of "territorial adjustments" in the Turkish Cypriot proposals and which reduce the land in the hands of the Turkish Cypriots to about 29 percent, the Greek Cypriot side is expected to display "an approach based on good will" in matters concerning the "constitution," practical measures and "security."

The Greek Government has given "assurances" to the Western countries, to the United Nations and to Turkey that the necessary flexibility will be displayed in these matters.

In matters concerning the constitution and the Turkish Cypriot demand for "equality," the "right of veto" is being suggested in all federal decisions, including the appointment of officials. In the Federal Republic of Cyprus, which will consist of "two zones," the independent Turkish and Greek Cypriot administrations will enjoy "extensive powers" and all federal organs will be rearranged.

Regarding "the state presidency," the Swiss model is being adopted, as provided in the structure of the federal system. According to this model, the state presidency is to be based on a rotational system, that is, a Greek Cypriot and a Turkish Cypriot each year will alternate as president.

On the question of security, importance is attached to guarantees in addition to territorial adjustments. As far as the Turkish Cypriots are concerned, "it is guarantees by Turkey," and they are not prepared even to discuss it.

The procedure to be adopted for the intercommunal negotiations will be determined at the intercommunal talks to be held on 19 August. It is reported that it will take at least a year for decisive results to be obtained from the negotiations after the procedure is determined.

KIPRIANOU GIVES 16 AUG SPEECH ON DIALOGUE

NC162042 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1640 GMT 16 Aug 81

["Text" of 16 August address by Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou at Astromeritis gathering of Morphou refugees--read by announcer]

[Text] I participate at this gathering today with particular emotion, and I extend to all of you warm, struggling greetings. Simultaneously, I would like to express my admiration because our uprooted people, who are the vanguards of the struggle for survival and vindication, have shown, beyond any doubt, the excellent virtues of our people--the stamina, dignity, patience, courage, militancy and the insistence on their rights.

The Turkish troops entered Morphou and the other villages in the area 7 years ago today. This is a day to remember this tragic event. The conspiracy of the treacherous coup and the barbarous invasion resulted in the uprooting of thousands of persons from their homes and the land where they were born. Today is a day we must all pay respect to those who fell and to recall all the difficulties through which our people have passed and are passing and, particularly. those of our uprooted brothers.

Today's gathering is symbolic, because it is not only a gathering of the inhabitants of the Morphou area, but, simultaneously, it also expresses the demands of the refugees and, to a wider extent, all of our people. Today's gathering falls during a critical period for the Cyprus problem. This is why our people, particularly the refugees, must be familiar with the developments, to follow closely the situation and to support its leadership whose only aim and goal is the vindication of our struggle.

We are going through a very delicate phase, and various voices are being heard. The country's leadership, however, is determined to handle the issues with all the responsibility that is needed. Various voices are being heard, for example, that supposedly the Cypriot leadership and the politicians are willing to accept the faits accomplis, or that supposedly they are led toward discussing the acceptance of the faits accomplis. This is an insult. As we have repeatedly declared, we will never accept the faits accomplis. The national cause and our people's interests are not served by rhetoric and irresponsible demagogy, but with responsible handling and firm goals. The handling depends on the developments, and the leadership must responsibly take into consideration the developments, both domestic and the international, and to determine accordingly its position in promoting its aims that constitute the goals and aims of all the people.

This is the easiest period for demagogy. But, simultaneously, it is also the period when all must undertake their responsibilities. At this point I must stress that the country's leadership is completely aware of its responsibilities toward our people who have passed through an unprecedented drama in world history.

A dialogue is being held and within this dialogue's framework, after a very long time, the Turkish side recently submitted certain proposals. I do not hesitate in speaking freely and saying that the proposals which were submitted cannot constitute the basis for a solution of the Cyprus problem. At the same time, however, the responsible handling of the national issue dictates the continuation of the dialogue so that the possibilities for the achievement of progress can be fully made. This is something that the national interest dictates from whatever side one looks at it, either from the domestic or the international aspect.

In continuing the dialogue, of course, we strive for an honorable solution that will be based on the summit agreements and the UN resolutions. We strive for a solution that will secure total independence and safeguard the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and the nonalignment of the Cypriot state. We strive for a solution of the Cyprus problem that will secure the inalienable rights of all citizens and definitely the right of the refugees to return to their paternal homes.

We do not undermine the international factor. On the contrary, we give tremendous importance to it, as we do not also undermine the need of continuous internationalization of our problem so that Turkey may feel the international pressure even stronger. Many efforts are being exerted toward this direction in a planned and responsible way, but without fanfare. These efforts will be continued, but the dialogue itself will contribute in the greatest possible degree in the internationalization, because the dialogue will soon show if there are margins of progress, something that we hope, or if there are no such margins, then of course the voice and our argumentation will be better heard in the world and the results will be much more significant. This is why I repeat that it is not the right time for uttering rhetoric but for responsible handlings.

I call all the refugees to have absolute confidence in the country's leadership, because it will never sell our fatherland and our people's rights. The country's leadership will responsibly proceed to the appropriate measures imposed by events.

As I have already said, our goals are immutable. We want a solution based on the summit conference and the UN resolutions which provides all the guarantees and the necessary elements for an honorable and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem. As has been correctly said many times, the system of a true federation can very well secure all the citizens' rights. We accept a federation but not a confederation or two separate countries. This will mean partition, something that we will never accept. As always, with good will and in a constructive way, we will exert every effort to closely and responsibly explore all the possibilities of achieving progress in the dialogue. If there is no progress in the dialogue, the responsibility will not fall on our side but entirely on the Turkish side.

In parallel with our efforts in the intercommunal dialogue, we will also continue every effort in the internationalization sector by putting forth, more categorically than in the past, the demand for an international conference. Simultaneously, we will prepare the climate, as events necessitate, for our future actions in the international arena. We are ready for a quick solution of our problem as long as it is honorable and acceptable, but simultaneously we are also ready, in the same way, for continuing the struggle regardless of the time that will be needed to achieve our goals for a Cyprus which is truly independent, without foreign troops and intervention, a place where happiness and serenity will reign for all its citizens, a Cyprus that will constitute a bridge of peace in this very delicate region of the Mediterranean.

Unity of goals and aims is necessary. I believe that nearly all have realized the need for responsible handling regardless of some having reservations on certain issues of procedure and tactics. At this moment the right struggling atmosphere exists, as well as the responsible atmosphere among our people that strengthens the leadership in its multifacted and very difficult task.

Regardless of what position we hold, we must, during this period, be prudent in what we say and declare. Of course, everyone is free to express his views. But the various views must be expressed responsibly. I believe that speeches like the one delivered yesterday [referring to Archbishop Khrisostomos' speech] can only cause confusion to the people, because they suggest nothing and they are nothing but rhetoric and negative statements. Responsibility is not something bad and it must not be the object of ridicule. On the contrary, responsibility is the quality that most characterized Ethnarch Makarios. No one has the right to doubt the patriotism of the country's leaders, because this does not serve any foreign or local interests. The leaders work and struggle with the people for their survival and vindication.

What I can promise you is that we will exert every effort by handling the events according to developments and always in accordance with the national interest until we secure a solution that will safeguard in Cyprus serenity, calm, peace and, particularly, freedom, democracy and justice.

ARCHBISHOP'S ADDRESS AT KYKKO MONASTERY SERVICE

NC151129 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0640 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Speech by Archbishop Khrisostomos at Kykko Monastery at service on the Virgin Mary's Assumption Day--live]

[Excerpt] We are gathered here both to honor the Virgin Mary and to appeal for her favor and help. At this time we need this favor and help. We need this strength that is given through religious faith especially now because, on the one hand, materialistic and godless theories are seeking to destroy inside of us the edifice of spiritual values, of moral and religious principles, in order to create chaos and destruction. On the other hand, the continuing Turkish invasion of our fatherland constitutes a mortal danger for the survival of Hellenism, of our people on this island.

When people are in danger they pore over their history and tradition to draw from them teachings and examples that will help them find the road that leads to salvation. And our history and tradition teach us that although foreign aggressors may have enslaved us many times, inside of us we never accepted subjugation, we never accepted signing the renunciation of our ancestral homes, we never accepted legalizing predatoriness and injustice with our signature. Currently many people, foreigners and our own people, are asking us--allegadly in the name of logic and prudence and in view of our inability to deal with the invader--to sign the renunciation of our ancestral lands--that is, to sign our fatherland's betrayal and the uprooting of our people from their ancestral homes. This is, they say, a demand and a request by the logic of prudence.

However, let us not forget that cowardice, defeatism and not infrequently, treason hide behind the shield of prudence and cite and exploit this prudence. With sacred indignation we reject the invitation for the ignominious act of renouncing our lands; we decline to become the accomplices and followers of this logic of prudence. We ask those people who, perhaps out of good will cite this prudence, to be wary and reponder the problems. They should learn to distinguish between the logic of prudence, which is needed in economic activities and commercial transactions, and the logic of prudence which is recommended in the struggle for the liberation of our ancestral lands and for our people's national survival. Our ancestral lands and survival are not commodities to be haggled over and sold to justify the give and take valid in commerce. No; all those people who view national issues the same way they view their commercial transactions; all those people who view national issues through the lenses used by foreigners or even more through the lenses of commercial, partisan and political interests and aims; all those people who have not felt inside them the flame and the majesty of the struggle for the fatherland's freedom to burn and guide them--these people cannot understand this kind of logic and truth. These people should understand that they cannot hold a responsible position on the bastions of such a struggle because they carry on their foreheads the seal of failure and will irreparably destroy the struggle.

For this reason, we invite the president of the republic, who served long under always-remembered ethnarch and fighter Makarios, to turn a deaf ear to the specious arguments of defeatism, to reject any pressure, whether from abroad or from the domestic front, and to do that which is dictated by national dignity, that which is dictated by the duty to the enslaved land of our fathers, that which is dictated by the duty to our uprooted brothers, to this island's Hellenism and to all Cypriot people.

We know we are not strong but we must not become traitors because of this. We have been implicated in barren and detrimental procedures. We must attempt to extricate ourselves as soon as possible. The attempt will not be easy. We shall pass through dangerous moments until we achieve this, until we again find the right road. But we must not hesitate. It is better to temporarily pass through difficult moments, rather than completely destroy and lose our people's rights.

Many times we, along with other people, have spoken about unity, a rally and a common drafting of the people's forces; but we are not achieving either unity or a rally or a common drafting, because everyone views this unity through different lenses and pursues it for different purposes. The church has no partisan aims or political aspirations. The church's only aim and aspiration is to save its flock, the people that is, and free our country. For this reason the church calls the people to unite for this goal; the liberation of our enslaved land and the restoration of our people's rights which are being violated by the Turkish invasion. The church is ready to work with all its forces and with all means at its disposal to achieve the required unity for such a goal and such a struggle.

However, if the unity we are seeking is in order to support other goals or to impose the logic of prudence, which aims at the renunciation of our ancestral homes, then the church will reject such a unity because it constitutes collusion for the abandonment of our people's rights and for Hellenism's uprooting from this island.

So that no margins for the exploitation of the logic of prudence are left, we again declare that which we have said many times: When we speak of a struggle for the liberation of our enslaved land it does not always and necessarily mean an armed clash with the invader. We are aware of our strength and weaknesses in comparison with those of the invader. However, if our enemy has superior forces, it does not mean that we must surrender. There are huge margins and many possibilities for a struggle outside an armed clash which we have either not used before they are rendered useless by the lack of planned action, by inactivity, passivity, barren, endless and unproductive intercommunal talks.

My Greek brothers: Both our political leadership and the press say that the current days are exceptionally useful for the development of our national issue because the Turks have at last submitted proposals. We do not know the proposals and perhaps we should not influence those people who profoundly ponder them. However, if the proposals are those that have been published in Greek and Turkish newspapers, then we too understand the criticality of these days, not because the Turks have submitted proposals but because, despite all the respect we have for our political leadership, both it and our press have unfortunately through their stance cultivated illusions among our people and have strengthened and supported the rampant Turkish propaganda that it has allegedly submitted constructive proposals for the solution of the Cyprus problem. They say that we must study the proposals in depth. However, we are afraid that this slow, indepth study will ultimately leave us in the even deeper and more obscure waters of Turkish propaganda and will make it very difficult for us to again emerge to the surface.

If the proposals the Turks have submitted are essentially those that have been published--and nobody has denied this--then these proposals are not new, they are the very same proposals Turkey submitted when it started the second stage of Cyprus' invasion. They are the same proposals which on 15 August 1974 the then acting president and current chairman of the Democratic Rally, Kliridhis, placed before us at that renowned conference in Nicosia, during which we were faced with the dilemma either of signing the Atilla line in order to save ourselves, or otherwise have Turkey occupy all of Cyprus. Then both we and others, and the majority of our people, including those who cite patriotic forces, reacted in the same manner that official Greece reacted.

Perhaps at the time we were immature and unable to penetrate the impenetrable present day prudence and understand its messages. Greek brothers: Pay attention. That which they are currently asking from us is that we make permanent and legalize the Attila line. The things they are ready to return to us were at the time outside the Atilla line, but the Turks took them, both because we abandoned them, and for negotiating purposes.

This is what they are asking from us. Therefore, if at that time surrounded by tragic conditions, bombings, slaughter, desolation, the panic that was created, we stood unbowed and had the courage to reject outright and describe the acceptance of the Atilla line as treason, then why should we currently accept or even discuss these proposals which envisage the same things? Has the acceptance of the Atilla line ceased to constitute treason? We shall let our political leadership and our people and the votaries of the logic of prudence give the reply. What we currently want to draw our people's attention to and to ask them to think seriously about is the fact that the goal of the 15 July 1974 coup is heading to its completion in 1981 because of our own toleration and our own acceptance.

As you know, the coup's target was not Makarios. It was Cyprus' partition by the Atilla line. Makarios was the obstacle to the partition and for this reason he had to be removed in order to give the opportunity and the reason to Turkey to invade and achieve its work.

Greek brothers: This is what we had to tell you today and we invite you to ponder it. Ponder it, using not the logic that is used for commercial transactions, but the logic that is dictated by the national struggle for our country's and people's salvation, the logic dictated by the struggle for freedom and Hellenism's survival on this island. And even more, we invite you to ponder not only the present but also the future of this country and people. We know that many people will not like what we have said and many others will criticize us. We shall regret this but the church will not stop struggling for our people's salvation and for our fatherland's freedom, even though it may be constantly abused and despised. Throughout its history, the church has known many persecutions but it has not shirked its principles and the execution of its duty. Therefore, it will continue to struggle under the most terrible of thunders without expecting approval.

Many prelates have climbed the scaffold or have been killed for the freedom of their people and country. Taking an example from them, we assure you, Greek brothers, we shall never, never, become collaborators for the implementation and completion of the coup's plan. [applause]

Those of you who share our thoughts, who do not want to cooperate in the legalization of the coup's plan, who do not want to see our fatherland Cyprus become Turkish--you Greeks, join us in a common struggle for our fatherland's freedon [applause] and the God of justice and most holy Virgin Mary will be our helpers and supreme generals in this just struggle.

ULUSU ON FOREIGN POLICY; REJECTS NEUTRON BOMB

TA151702 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Explaining his views on foreign policy at a news conference today, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said that Turkey attaches importance to its cooperation within NATO and that activities by the United States and other NATO countries aimed at contributing to Turkey's defense power and its economic development have been observed with satisfaction. Noting that Turkey takes care to develop its political and economic relations with the Soviet Union, other socialist countries and its neighbors, based on the principles of mutual respect and interest, Ulusu recalled that close relations are continuing with Middle East and Muslim countries. Ulusu added that Turkey has been completely impartial regarding the war between Iraq and Iran and that it is out of the question for Turkey to extend aid to either country on the issue of war.

Referring to the Cyprus problem, Ulusu expressed the wish that the intercommunal talks enter a process that will bring a final solution to the problem. He expressed the belief that the proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side constitute a very important step toward achieving that final solution. He added that Turkey sincerely wishes to maintain friendly relations with Greece. In reply to a question, Ulusu said that the U.S. decision on the production of the neutron bomb concerns that country and that any move to deploy the neutron bomb to Turkey as well is out of the question.

TERCUMAN INTERVIEWS TURKMEN ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC171100 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 14 Aug 81 pp 1 & 13

[Interview granted by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to TERCUMAN correspondent Ertugrul Aytac in Marmaris--date not given]

[Text] Question: It is reported that the Turkish Cypriot proposals contain important concessions both on the territorial as well as on constitutional issues. Will you kindly comment?

Answer: The Turkish Cypriot community has submitted extremely substantive proposals both on the territorial and constitutional issues. These proposals have been welcomed by world opinion as being quite positive. The Turkish Cypriot community's proposals both on the territorial and constitutional issues. These proposals have been welcomed by world opinion as being quite positive. The Turkish Cypriot community's proposals are considered as an important contribution to the settlement of the Cyprus dispute. If the Greek Cypriot side respond in the same spirit ot the constructive attitude of the Turkish Cypriot community, important ground may be covered toward a comprehensive solution.

Question: What kind of trump cards has the Turkish Cypriot side in their hands with a view to probable developments?

Answer: As you know, to reach an agreement we need two sides. It is also quite natural that the Greek Cypriot side may come up with some counterproposals. But the Turkish Cypriot side does not have to accept them. Weighing and considering a specific negotiating position is useful. What is important is that the essence of the duly weighed and considered negotiating position should not be altered during the period of negotiations. The side that conducts negotiations in this manner always wins. The Turkish Cypriot community is on this path now.

Question: What do you think of the dispute echoed in the press between the Greek Cypriot aide and Greece after submission of the Turkish Cypriot proposals?

Answer: Naturally I do not know anything about the dispute you are referring to. I do not know what has happened between them. Only, according to what we have seen and heard, the Greek Government allegedly urged the Greek Cypriot administration to examine the Turkish Cypriot proposals fully as they were worth weighing and considering carefully. If the Greek Government is acting in this manner, we can say that it is behaving constructively.

Question: How do you assess the first reactions of world opinion to the Turkish Cypriot proposals?

Answer: Extremely positive. According to information I have been receiving, it is believed that the Turkish Cypriot proposals will greatly contribute to peace in Cyprus. This is how the Turkish Cypriot proposals are being evaluated.

Question: Denktas says 'Britain must be dropped as a guarantor.' What is your view?

Answer: As you know, when we talk of a comprehensive solution to the Cyprus problem, we are thinking of three factors: the territorial issue, the constitutional issue, and the security measures. Current subjects under discussion within the framework of the negotiations are the territorial and the constitutional issues. Matters concerning security will be taken up later. I do not wish to make any comment on this matter now.

Question: What is your view regarding Reagan's decision on the production of the neutron bomb?

Answer: The limitation or banning of arms either individually or collectively will not upset the balance of power or impair security [as published]. It is possible to resolve issues between countries through international meetings. There is therefore no sense in concentrating all attention on one single weapon. Naturally, the production of a certain type of weapon depends on the discretion of that country. As far as we know, there are no plans to use the neutron bomb on other countries.

Question: Would you kindly sum up Turkish foreign policy regarding Polish events?

Answer: We hope that Poland will eventually find ways of resolving its own problems. If peace and stability are to be established in Europe, countries should settle their own problems. This is what we hope to see.

MINISTRY PROTESTS GREEK TELEVISION SHOW ON CYPRUS

NC180810 Instanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 15 Aug 81 pp 1 7 12

[Ozgen Acar report from Athens]

[Text] It has been learned that the Turkish Embassy in Athens has delivered a note to the Greek Foreign Ministry protesting a program televised on 12 August by the Greek State Television Network (ERT), on the occasion of the anniversary of the second peace operation in Cyprus.

On the evening of 12 August, the Greek television network carried a program entitled "The Front Page" which depicted the story of Papadhakis, a Greek Cypriot who is alleged to have escaped from a Turkish prison camp and to have taken shelter in a cave for about a year where he was found and freed through Denktas' mediation after the Denktas-Kiprianou talks. The Greek state television is reported to have uttered various words and to have televised certain scenes.

Televising such a program at a time when the intercommunal talks in Cyprus have reached a critical stage and when a positive dialogue is being conducted, provoked this representation by the Turkish Embassy in Athens in the form of a note delivered to the Greek Foreign Ministry.

While Turkish Embassy officials have refused to disclose the contents of the note, certain Greek newspapers have brought the matter to public attention, stating that the Turks criticized this film which cast a shadow on the positive atmosphere prevailing in Turkish-Greek relations. These papers stated that "the Turks are afraid of the truth," adding that "this matter is not within the Foreign Ministry's sphere of responsibility."

RIGHTIST LEADER TURKES SUFFERS HEART ATTACK

NC171925 Paris AFP in English 1917 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Text] Ankara, 17 Aug (AFP)--Alparslan Turkes, an extreme rightist leader in Turkey who was to go on trial tomorrow, was hospitalized today after suffering a heart attack, informed sources here said. Mr Turkes, 64, risked a possible death sentence along with 219 other directors and militants of the National Action Party (NAP). He is a former president of NAP, and also former Turkish deputy premier and a retired colonel. Sixty-seven others faced prison terms from two to 30 years in the trial.

Authorities have blamed NAP for much of the political violence that killed some 20 people per day before the military coup on September 12. The indictment against Mr Turkes charged him with personally ordering the execution of a police chief and a leftist union director.

He has been confined to a strictly guarded military hospital in the Ankara suburbs. Observers here doubted he would be able to attend the trial opening tomorrow.

NEWSPAPERS' REACTIONS TO NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

NC141500 [Editorial Report] Istanbul Turkish dailies on 11 and 12 August carry commentaries on President Ronald Reagan's decision to manufacture the neutron bomb, as follows:

On 11 August, MILLIYET carries an editorial by Mehmet Barlas on President Reagan's decision that the United States should go ahead and manufacture the neutron bomb. The writer wonders whether this bomb will ever be used. He says: "But this decision is bound to provoke political demonstrations and militant protests in the capitals of the Western countries." The writer recalls that president Carter had to suspend production of the neutron bomb in 1978 following reactions from the Western powers, which were almost as strong as the Soviet Union's. He adds that in those days French President Giscard d'Estaing announced that also France was experimenting with a similar bomb.

The writer stresses the destructive power of the neutron bomb. He continues: "This brilliant achievement of the U.S. and French scientists makes us shudder with horror. These 20th century scientists, who are unable to find a cure for influenza let alone for cancer, have managed to invent this effective weapon against mankind and thus proved their superior capabilities. But how and where will radiation stop when the neutron bomb is used? There is no answer to this question. Unlike President Carter, President Reagan--who takes decisions without consulting his allies--has once again confirmed the general impression about him. We wish he had continued to make cowboy and gangster films and never entered politics."

On 11 August, CUMHURIYET carries an article by Ugur Mumcu on the neutron bomb. Mumcu says: "President Reagan, who has attached great importance to the arms race ever since his election as President, has now ushered in great worldwide tension by ordering the production and stockpiling of the neutron bomb missiles." The writer expresses fear that this decision will lead to a "cold war," which can adversely affect the future of almost all countries and regimes in the world. The writer continues: "To put it briefly, the world is drafting toward a new and dangerous tension, the consequences of which are unpredictable."

The writer then tries to explain the reasons which lead big powers to develop such devastating weapons as deterrents and concludes: "Will the United States use this bomb or will it not? If it does, none of us will be around to discuss its advantages or disadvantages. But before it is too late we can assert ourselves against the arms race and the neutron bomb which is capable of annihilating all of mankind. 'This is a humane duty.' For those who are loyal to Ataturk's principle of 'peace at home, peace abroad,' this decision is seen as an extremely erroneous and perilous adventure for free mankind. Former actor Reagan is playing the worst and probably the bloodiest role of his life!"

On 11 August, GUNAYDIN carries a dispatch from Ankara which quotes Turkish Foreign Ministry authorities' comment: "Turkey's attitude in this matter is clear. It will not allow this bomb to be installed on Turkish territory. All other matters concern the United States more than any other country."

GUNAYDIN then quotes reactions from other countries including the Soviet Union which is quoted as describing the neutron bomb as: "Cannibalistic, barbaric, and inhumane," saying that "this is a very dangerous step toward the third world war."

On 11 August, HURRIYET carries an editorial by Oktay Eksi: "The Clean Bomb." Eksi deplores the attitude of certain "progressive" and peace-loving" circles in Europe and in Turkey toward the neutron bomb and ridicules their idea that the neutron bomb--which only kills--is worse than the bomb which both kills and destroys. Eksi says: "When the Soviet Union or the Warsaw Pact countries implement a program to enhance their military strength, these circles consider this harmless. Afghanistan has been occupied but all these circles do is express a superficial denunciation. Hasn't Czechoslovakia been utterly crushed by the Soviet troops? Yes, but they argue that this was necessitated by the 'Brezhnev doctrine.'"

The writer then strongly criticizes those "progressive and peace-loving" circles in Europe and in Turkey for not objecting to the installation of SS-20 missiles on Soviet territory in Europe, whereas they raise hell when it becomes necessary to install "Pershing-2" and "cruise" missiles on Western European territory for the purpose of maintaining a balance of power.

Oktay Eksi concludes: "This is a strange tableau. When one hears such voices, one feels the need to ask: 'on whose side are these people?' Yes, we consider that Reagan's decision to have the neutron bomb manufactured is reasonable. We say the decision is reasonable on these grounds: At present, peace in the world can be protected not through a feeling of mutual confidence but through a mutual strength of threat. For this reason, whichever country invents a more effective weapon, it immediately manufactures it and tries to enhance its ability to threaten. This is in fact what the Soviet Union is doing. So, the real issue at stake is not whether the neutron bomb will or will not be produced, but how a stop can be put to the 'nuclear arms race' which threatens the entire world."

On 12 August, TERCUMAN carries an editorial by Nazli Ilicak "The Neutron Weapon." Nazli Ilicak says: "The most accurate evaluation of the neutron bomb has been made by Red China which said: 'The neutron bomb is being manufactured in order to counter a tank attack on Europe.' The writer also quotes France's Socialist defense minister sa saying 'that the United States is an advanced country, that it can manufacture the neutron bomb, and that the Russians too are making similar preparations.'"

Referring to Turkish press comments of 11 August, Ilicak says: "Oktay Eksi is the only writer in the Turkish press who factually evaluated the question of the neutron bomb and in a knowledgeable manner." The writer refers to Eksi's editorial in HURRIYET of 11 August: "The Clean Bomb," referring to those who, influenced by the ruthless Soviet propaganda, argue knowingly or unknowingly that the neutron bomb is "savagery, that mankind would perish while the buildings stay intact, and that through his crazy acts, Reagan has proved once again his cowboy capabilities." Nazli Ilicak says that neutron is radiation, not a bomb, and that because of its short range, it can be used on the battlefield without doing great harm to the civilian population.

Rejecting arguments that the neutron bomb will turn the world into a powderkeg, Nazli Ilicak contends: "Let us also look at the other side of the coin: The presence of the neutron bomb in Europe is the most effective assurance and the greatest deterrent against an attack by armored units." Ilicak continues: "Those who say 'it is better to be Red than dead,' should not forget this simple truth.

Nazli Ilicak concludes: "Before we oppose the neutron bomb or the Pershing and cruise missiles, we must remember the conditions that necessitated the establishment of NATO. Free countries got together after World War II in order to check Soviet expansionism. They had agreed to participate in the defense pact. Upon request of the European countries, the United States agreed to take part in the defense system. Those who appreciate the fact that NATO is a military alliance established for defensive purposes, consider neither the neutron bomb nor the Pershing and cruise missiles as sources of danger, because these weapons will be used only for defensive purposes. The West sincerely believes in peace."

YOUNG COMMUNISTS DEMONSTRATE AGAINST N-WEAPONS

AU181355 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 18 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Two members of the Austrian Communist Youth chained themselves to lampposts in front of the Amerika-Haus in Friedrich-Schmidt Square Monday opposite the Vienna city hall. According to a press release, the Young Communists wanted to protest the "irresponsible course of the U.S. Government, which in effect amounts to preparation for a nuclear war." The release states that the demonstrators are ready to use all means at their disposal to ward off this threat to life and to the future.

KREISKY CALLS PAHR N-BOMB COMMENT 'OPINION'

AU181108 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 18 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Text] Bad Woerishofen/Vienna--In a talk with DIE PRESSE, Chancellor Kreisky declared that the present time was "extremely unsuitable" to comment on President Reagan's decision to produce the neutron bomb. Asked whether he too shared Foreign Minister Pahr's opinion that this decision was a "blow against the policy of detente" and whether Pahr had expressed the opinion of the Austrian Government or just his own personal opinion, Kreisky replied: "That was the foreign minister's opinion, and I feel he is entitled to express this opinion." He, Kreisky, did not want to say anything about this publicly.

Kreisky added that the crux of the matter was that the United States' allies were of the opinion that the question of the neutron weapon should have been discussed with them. "However, we are not an allied state and it is not for us--nor is it for me--to make any comment here," Kreisky declared. The foreign minister can say something, Kreisky said, defending Pahr, because he has much more to do with disarmament problems. At any rate, Kreisky added, he did "not want to criticize Pahr on that account; he is certainly judging these things very well and correctly."

Pahr's statement, which had been played up by the Communist Party organ VOLKSSTIMME and had drawn favorable comment from that paper, has been criticized by the Austrian People's Party foreign policy spokesman, Ludwig Steiner. He said Pahr's statement "regrettably was quite in the style of communist propaganda slogans." It was not that the decision endangered the policy of detente, but it was the decline of detente which accelerated the armament spiral, he said, adding that one-sided accusations of the United States were not in neutral Austria's interest. From an Austrian foreign minister it should be expected that he is aware of how much the balance of conventional weapons in Europe has been distributed to the detriment of one side. Austria must take an interest in preserving an equilibrium of forces which is of primary importance for Europe.

Genuine disarmament measures require political decisions, Steiner said, and added: "Unfortunately it is a fact that the decision adopted years ago by U.S. President Carter to renounce production of the neutron weapon has neither improved detente nor led to genuine disarmament measures."

GENSCHER ON NEUTRON BOMBS, DISARMAMENT TALKS

DW171308 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0905 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Excerpt from Karl Donat interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, date and place of interview not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What actually is the feeling of the foreign minister and FDP chairman when he now, during his well-deserved vacation, following the heated discussion in the country on the neutron bomb as well as the dogged tug-of-war between the coalition parties with regard to the stabilization of the federal finances?

[Answer] Well, there is no such vacation in the sense that one can bid farewell to problems. I want to say quite frankly that I consider it a very special task of the government's policy to find a solution to the budgetary issue and to the economic issues we are faced with.

And as far as the other discussion is concerned, meaning that on the American decision to produce the neutron weapon, I would like to see an objectivization of the discussion. This involves objective information about the effects of the weapon. It includes objective information about the East-West ratio of strength, that is to say also about the strength of Soviet tanks and Soviet chemical weapons in Europe. And it also involves the effects of this U.S. production decision on possible arms control negotiations. I believe that what is important to know is that the production of the weapon indeed is--as noted by the government spokesman--solely a U.S. decision, that the introduction of the weapon into the alliance is a decision of the alliance, in which we must participate along with the other alliance partners, and that finally the stationing of the weapon in certain member countries of the alliance is a decision of these countries proper. This means that nothing regarding any further possible stages is going to happen without the Federal Government's approval. It likewise must be noted that for the time being neither the U.S. Government nor the Federal Government have the intention of introducing the weapon into the alliance or of even stationing it.

I believe that it will be important that this discussion is held in an objective manner in our country and also back and forth across the Atlantic. It must by no means be something that could be termed anti-Americanism. One must be able also among partners and friends to express one's views on decisions and political consequences, without any anti-American feeling resulting from it. And in this respect I would have wished that some of the tones I have heard in the last few days--particularly from the SPD quarter--had been more objective.

[Question] Mr Minister, in 1978 the Federal Government had advocated the development of the neutron weapons above all in the face of the enormous Soviet superiority in the field of tanks, and it had also approved of their stationing on the territory of the Federal Republic later on. Now the spokesman of the Federal Government has stated on behalf of the government--and you repeated it--that their stationing on the Federal territory is out of the question for the time being. The argument now is that the general situation in the alliance and in Europe does not necessitate such a stationing for the time being. Has the situation actually changed since 1978? Or does the sole change exist merely in the fact that the Soviet Union has stepped up its armament even further?

[Answer] It is correct that the Soviet Union did not respond to the signal set by President Carter in 1978--that is to say A) through renunciation of the B-1 bomber and B) through renunciation of the production and stationing of the neutron weapon. I should have said that it had not responded positively. Carter at the time actually had expressed the expectation that the Soviet Union exercise a certain restraint. This has not happened. It is, above all, the Soviet Union's armament in the field of medium-range missiles that has assumed a threatening magnitude for Europe since then.

What has changed, to be sure, since then--and this is new--is that there is the decision on counterarming and the offer for negotiations made by the Western Alliance in 1979. This is why I believe that it is absolutely correct that the U.S. Government does not intend any stationing of the weapon in Europe for the time being.

[Question] Mr Minister, you wouldn't like to define the term "for the time being" more exactly?

[Answer] No, this would be absolutely wrong, for I am proceeding from the premise that all these issues and problems naturally will become matters to be discussed at the East-West talks. It is well known that the Federal Government attaches great importance--and this is in conformity with our alliance partners, not only in Europe, but also in the United States--to achieving an equalibrium. But we want this balance to be at the lowest possible level of armament. What we do not want at any rate is to start an arms race on our part. Perhaps some people in our country ought to pay more attention to the fact that the U.S. President only recently once again has expressed the determination of the United States to arrive at a realistic disarmament policy. And this applies not only to medium-range missiles and to the talks which Secretary of State Haig and Foreign Minister Groymyko will be holding this fall in New York, but it also holds true for the entire spread of the armament spectrum on the Western and on the Eastern side.

I think one must realize that the willingness expressed by President Reagan to meet with General Secretary Brezhnev makes it clear that the Americans are looking for a dialogue with the Soviet Union. This certainly was not merely a statement made out of vacationist's mood, but what actually has been announced had already been subject to an exchange of view between President Reagan and General Secretary Brezhnev. I consider this very significant. It, by the way, also shows that some of the boasting we have witnessed in our country--where the view was expressed that one had to overcome what was termed the "speechlessness" of the two big powers--was actually rather unfounded. I always held the view that the dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union is more intensive than some people over here want to admit or are able to realize. I believe that what matters now is that the East-West dialogue is held very objectively and that all problems which distress people in the world and in Europe become topics of these talks.

There can be no doubt at all that people over here in Europe, in the United States, in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe do not desire anything more than arms control and disarmament. It is now the task of those politically responsible to give emphasis to this desire. But this also requires that the Soviet Union, too, makes its contribution to this end. And I believe that the Soviet Union is absolutely in a position of making constructive contributions in the weeks and months ahead, which really would entail an immediate and positive change in the political climate of the world.

The Soviet Union could show signs of its good will, for many of our concerns at the moment are concerns emanating from the Soviet policy of power expansion--like in Afghanistan--and from Soviet armament policy. What then could be such signs of good will? The Soviet Union could help to improve the international political situation, over night, so to speak, if it were to respond objectively to the initiative of the European Community which provides for a political solution to the Afghanistan issue, for the occupation of Afghanistan and the war against the Afghan people--and it is a bloody war that is being waged there--simply burden the international situation and international relations.

A second step of good will could be that the Soviet Union at long last agrees without any ifs and buts to a European disarmament conference with confidence-building measures for the whole of Europe--that is to say from the Atlantic to the Urals--because confidence-building actually is the inalienable prerequisite for any improvement of the East-West climate. Confidence-building naturally also is a very important element for the preparation of comprehensive disarmament negotiations.

Third, the Soviet Union could respond positively to the comprehensive disarmament program submitted by the Federal Government and the other allied states in Geneva, which could make a great aspiration of the people in the world come true, if it would be continued realistically. As a matter of fact, this disarmament program of the Federal Government has met with a very broad echo. It would be a good thing, however, if the Soviet Union were to respond positively to this program.

Then--fourth--we would welcome it very much if the Soviet Union were to facilitate, through a stop to its armament in the field of medium-range missiles, the negotiations on medium-range missiles which are to be started after the Gromyko-Haig meeting in New York.

And, finally, Moscow should think it over once again--and this is another proposal for improving the international climate--whether it would not be right, after all, that the Soviet Union participates in the North-South conference this October in Cancun, Mexico, where problems of the Third World are to be discussed. This certainly is not a West-South task only but also an East-South task. This is why it was not surprising at all that the states of the Third World reacted to the Soviet Union's refusal to partake with great disappointment, for its participation would offer a great opportunity for cooperation. And this, too, would build confidence.

I think that the points I mentio here should b pondered very thoroughly in Moscow, so that steps will be possible whic ould serve an improvement of the East-South relationship and thereby also the overal international situation.

[Question] Mr Minister, you yourself have directly linked the neutron weapon with disarmament negotiations, as a return service and a barter object--if I am permitted to say so--in the face of the immense superiority of the Soviet Union in the field of chemical weapons and tanks. Now the deputy chairman of the SPD on behalf of his party has said no, very harshly and--as I feel--in a rather unlimited way. At the ame time, he has called upon the federal government to also induce the European allies to say no to the stationing of the neutron weapon. Do you feel that you are taken to task by the SPD?

[Answer] I believe that the government will have to decide in full responsibility only then when such a decision would be commanded. This is not the case for the time being for the aforementioned reasons. But I think that one ought to pick up one of the ideas of what you have said, Mr Donat. I believe that on the part of those who do not agree with the U.S. Government many false reactions exist which do not become expressive in objective discussion, but rather in very emotional statements. I am of the firm conviction that in an alliance like NATO--meaning an alliance of free, sovereign and independent states, which are allied with one another on the basis of equality--it must not only be allowed but it must be also necessary for the internal cohesion of the alliance, that issues are discussed on which there are different opini s. This is needed. It forms part of the self-confident safeguarding of the national and European interests. Nonetheless, the European states will also have to take into account the fact that Europe today does not wield the weight which it actually deserves, owing to its historic development, its dimension, its resources and owing to what its people are able to do and to effect, but that this is not the mistake of the Americans--it also is not the mistake of the East--but the problems are lying in Europe proper, in the European Community. I am firmly convinced that the great expectations placed in the European Community by the people throughout the world--Europe after all is suffering from being inwardly underrated and outwardly overrated--and also the safeguarding of European interests seem to require that we use the current world situation for an hour of self-consideration. European unity has been stimulated always then when we found ourselves in a serious international situation. We are in such serious international situation now, and I am convinced that this is the hour in which we must take serious steps toward political union, toward European union, in which we will also arrive at closer cooperation in the field of security issues and closer cooperation in the cultural field, so as to give stronger utterance to European identity.

This free and democratic Europe has its place not in between the United States and the Soviet Union but as part of the West--this must be said quite clearly. It could become a self-confident and equal partner of the United States also for looking after the European interests. And in so doing it quite certainly would not contribute to weakening the West but rather to strengthening it. Such a stronger Europe, more capable of acting and deciding, will be much more in a position to safeguarding its functions in the North-South relationship, in improving cooperation with the East and within the Western alliance.

[Question] Mr Minister, this is a new initiative you developed, a new impulse. In this initiative you are speaking of the aim of letting Europe act as an equal ally of the United States. Equal--what does this mean? This surely means: Equal rights and equal duties. Wouldn't the Americans be right then to ask as to whether we are ready, too, to assume equal duties?

[Answer] I am undoubtedly of the view that Europe must assume the same duties, for our security interests naturally are our very own. European security cannot be safeguarded without U.S. security. Both belong closely together. I believe that a united Europe can play a very important part in the constructive shaping of East-West relations. And there cannot be any doubt that we in the Federal Republic of Germany actually have the central goal of pursuing an active policy for securing peace. The policy of the Federal Republic, the essential basic elements of which are also supported by the opposition, is aimed at improving East-West relations because it proceeds from the realization that the German people, who live in two states, would suffer most from a relapse into cold war. This is why it is also quite self-evident that we as the Federal Republic of Germany will always play an active role in European unity, in the safeguarding of Western security but also in improving the East-West relations. For this reason, Moscow ought to take everything quite seriously, everything we address to the Soviet side with the demand that also the Soviet Union make its contribution to improving East-West relations.

BAHR, USSR'S ARBATOV COMMENT ON NEUTRON WEAPON

LD181105 Hamburg DPA in German 0922 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 18 Aug (DPA)--The U.S. technological ability to transport nuclear weapons to Europe within hours only if the worst came to worst could gain important significance, SPD disarmament expert Egon Bahr writes in the Social-Democratic weekly VORWAERTS. In the latest edition of the weekly Bahr expresses the view that if this were the case, there would be greater chances for the so-called zero solution, desired by the SPD, in the announced talks on reducing medium-range missiles.

In his calculations, Bahr is going by the announcement by U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger to the effect that the neutron weapon could be flown to Europe within a few hours. "This, of course, also applies to the cruise missiles and Pershing II missiles--provided for in the counterarming part of the NATO's twin decision," the SPD deputy writes. We should be grateful to Weinberger for opening up this dimension "which ought to be used constructively in preparing the talks." The U.S. announcement of the decision to produce the neutron bomb, however, has shown "unscrupulousness and a lack of consideration," a source of increasing concern "on the part of our people toward America."

In another article, VORWAERTS publishes a warning by Georgiy A. Arbatov, member of the Supreme Soviet, of Moscow's countermeasures to U.S. neutron weapon production. The foreign policy adviser to Soviet party leader Brezhnev writes that his country "will possibly deem it necessary to adopt additional defense measures in the European arena." The U.S. decision resulted from the "clear intention of making nuclear war more conceivable and more probable." After all, West Europe already possesses approximately 200,000-300,000 highly modern antitank weapons.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS ASYLUM TO IRANIAN GUNBOAT CREW

LD182320 Paris Domestic Service in French 2300 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] France has proposed granting political asylum to the members of the commando who seized the Iranian patrol boat Taberzin. The government wants to avoid any violence and hopes, through dialogue to secure the departure from Marseille of the Iranian patrol boat. The members of the commando made it known during the day that they were unable to leave due to a shortage of fuel. It has just been heard, less than an hour ago, that the patrol boat Taberzin is heading out to sea pulled by the oceangoing tug (L'Alsacien). The patrol boat is reported to be on its way to Toulon.

CHEYSSON REPORTEDLY TO MEET 'ARAFAT IN BEIRUT

NC181248 Paris AFP in English 1244 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 18 Aug (AFP)--French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson will meet Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat during an official visit to Beirut next week, a highly reliable source said here today. The Foreign Ministry declined to comment on the report, but the Palestinian question is known to rank alongside the Lebanese conflict on Mr Cheysson's agenda.

A ministry spokesman said that Mr Cheysson would be in Amman on Aug 28 and 29, flying to Beirut on the 29th, and on to Damascus for two days on Aug 30. Last month, Mr Cheysson met senior PLO official Faruq Qaddumi on a trip through Paris.

IRAQ'S AZIZ IN PARIS FOR TAMMUZ NUCLEAR STATION

NC181250 Paris AFP in English 1241 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Aug (AFP)--Iraqi Vice-Premier Tariq Aziz, who arrives in Paris today, is expected to formally approach France to reconstruct the Tammuz nuclear research station, bombed by Israel on June 7. Iraqi Embassy sources here said yesterday that President Saddam Husayn was anxious to obtain new French assistance in the project.

Mr Aziz will meet both President Francois Mitterrand and Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy, in the new Socialist administration's first top-level contact with Iraq. The visit is expected to prompt a detained explanation of French policy in the Middle East.

Iraq has clearly hinted that the French decision on Tammuz will have a far-reaching effect on future relations and cooperation with France, which until the Iraqi-Iranian war cut production, bought a large share of its oil supplies from Iraq. Mr Aziz will also meet External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson and, singificanctly, Research and Technology Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement and External Trade Minister Michel Jobert.

Last month, President Husayn expressed concern that French statements on nuclear cooperation with France were vague, and anger at what was seen in Iraq as an over-tolerant reaction to the Israeli raid. The French side has vigorously rejected these charges, reiterating that France's position is unequivocal and based on two points: the right of developing nations to nuclear technology, and maximum guarantees that this is not used to military ends.

After the Tammuz bombing, Mr Cheysson said that France was prepared to reconstruct, but called for guarantees in the first 1973 contract to be boosted. This is where the two sides might well differ. Before construction got underway at Tammuz, Iraq rejected a French plan to replace the highly enriched uranium to be used in the reactor with a less sophisticated type. President Husayn has hinted that if France backs down now, Iraq will turn elsewhere to continue its project, with predictable consequences on trade with France.

COLOMBO RESPONDS TO HAIG MESSAGE ON ARMS TALKS

AU181603 Rome ANSA in English 1500 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 18 Aug (ANSA)--Italy thinks it is indispensable to achieve a "quick start" to East-West negiations on the limitation of nuclear arms in Europe and also wants "further talks" between the NATO allies before the negotiations start, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said today in a message to American Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

The message, which was released by the Foreign Ministry later, repeated the Italian position that the negotiations should achieve "re-equilibrium" of the nuclear forces in Europe "at the lowest level."

Colombo was replying to a message from Haig which gave assurances that the Reagan administration remains equally committed to both modernizing theater nuclear arms in Europe and starting talks with the Soviet Union on controlling them before the year is out.

In view of these conversations, Haig added, Washington is currently finalizing its strategy, "on which it will hold prior consultations with Italy and the other allies."

SENATE TO DEBATE NEUTRON BOMB, CRUISE MISSILES

AU190857 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 19 Aug (ANSA)--There is a great deal of expectation in the Italian political world for tomorrow's joint session of the Senate Defense and Foreign Affairs Committees to debate the Reagan administration's decision to build the N-bomb and plans to deploy cruise missiles in Sicily. Questions, statements made by members of the various political parties presage a heated debate.

The deputy whip of the Radical Party in the lower house Roberto Ciciomessere said that the decision to begin building a base in Sicily to store cruise medium-range missiles "falls under a policy which places European nations before a fait accompli." According to the Radical Party leader, the decision obstructs the possibility of holding talks with the Soviet Union on nuclear arms limitation.

Alfredo Biondi, the deputy secretary of the right-of-center Liberal Party, which is one of the government coalition partners, said that the Italian Parliament "must strengthen the requirement, which everyone feels, to not favor the arms race on either the real or notional level." According to Biondi, "The road to negotiations must be responsibly chosen."

Within the ranks of the Socialist Party, also a government partner, several senators presented a question to Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio asking "on the basis of what logistical, strategic and military criteria was the Comiso (Sicily) base chosen for the cruise missiles and how will the costs to equip the base be divided between Italy and the United States."

The senators also asked the ministers if "there is truth to the claim made by N-bomb inventor Samuel Cohen that the United States could send the weapon to its European bases without consulting and without the consent of its allies."

On Friday, the debate on the N-bomb and cruise missiles will shift to a joint session of the lower house Defense and Foreign Affairs Committees with Colombo and Lagorio on hand to reply to questions.

UK'S CARRINGTON, PEREZ LLORCA, DISCUSS GIBRALTER

LA VANGUARDIA EDITORIAL ON NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

PM190830 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 11 Aug 81 p 5

[Editorial: "If You Wish Peace..."]

[Text] According to the most recent studies, the Soviet Union has considerably overtaken the United States in its military means--both in personnel and in weapons--over the last 5 years. The Americans still have a small superiority in strategic nuclear warheads--7,192 against 6,302--but have been greatly overtaken in all the other arsenals; the Russians have 753 more nuclear missiles, 250 more submarines, 45 more large warships, 37,000 more tanks, 13,000 more artillery pieces, almost 1,000 more aircraft and personnel exceeding those of the United States by 2.5 million.

President Reagan's decision to order the assembly of the neutron--its manufacture was already ordered by Carter--was therefore the consequence of a policy of rearmament to restore the balance of deterrence, to whose maintenance--it should not be forgotten, however bitter it may be--the existence of world peace since 1945 is probably due. Nobody moderately well educated was surprised by the decision, just as the reaction provoked internationally--restrained in the West and more fiery and manipulated in the Soviet sphere of influence, including the democratic countries where no protest is made when Moscow acts as it pleases without giving explanations to anybody--was expected.

Of course, Moscow does so in defense of peace while capitalism, as is well known, only acts in accordance with the basest class interests....

The neutron bomb, which was already studied by the Russians 30 years ago and tested by the Americans in 1963, has a prime application in stopping mass offensives by armored vehicles as a result of the ease with which the neutron radiation penetrates steel. The consequent result that it is capable of destroying living organisms and not gravely affecting objects appears to be its most vulnerable aspect for any supposedly humanitarian polemic, although so far none of its opponents has taken the trouble to explain what "beneficial" difference there could be between dying as a victim of the neutrons and dying as a victim of what have come to be termed "conventional" nuclear explosions.

At any event, the fact is the world is sailing the highly dangerous seas of an intense militarism and we are skirting the most terrible of abysses. The USSR is practicing a very clear policy of military supremacy, and the Americans do not wish to lag behind. In the middle is our alarmed and frightened world. The implacable struggle should be stopped, but what the moral authority could be which would impose a reasonable understanding which would rule out violence and death as a solution cannot be discerned. The people of the 20th century refuse to accept that the only way to secure peace is to prepare for war, and yet....

CARRILLO SPEECH CONCLUDES 10TH PCE CONGRESS DEBATE

PM181550 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 7-13 Aug 81 pp 19-23

[Speech by PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo at 30 July 10th PCE Congress: "A Party Regenerated and United After Congress"]

[Text] I believe that we can say, not without pride, that at this congress a free and open debate is proceeding, that this debate is being conducted with complete openness toward the press and society and that at this congress and in this party there is no dark corner and no shadowy area which is not illuminated by publicity and by the most complete openness. I believe that it has also been possible to see that--as Comrade Pinedo was saying yesterday--in this party everybody thinks with his own brains.

There have been many criticisms of the report which I submitted, and I wish to emphasize something that was said yesterday, namely that that report is not a personal report of my own; it is a report which was debated, approved and corrected in part at the party Central Committee plenum, and that although my fallible hand participated in its drafting, the ideas expressed in it are not ideas which I invented in a vacuum, isolated from the party as a whole; they are ideas which we formulated in comparisons and exchanges of ideas and in debates, and which, in short, are the product of a collective formulation.

The report has been criticized for not being apparently oriented toward society and its problems. I believe that a careful reading of the report, outside the rather emotional atmosphere of the congress, would make it possible to see that even the internal criticism and self-criticism have a very direct bearing on the requirements posed by the need to conduct politics and to do so effectively within this society. Of course, there is the examination of internal problems, and these could not fail to exist, because for some time criticism has been occurring in the party of its leadership and internal functioning, and if we had not raised these issues, doing so with a self-critical approach, the congress would have been right to say that we were avoiding problems with which we had been confronted and that we were attempting to evade our responsibilities by raising only the problems of a general political, social and economic nature which Spanish society has today.

Those internal problems must be resolved, and they must be resolved precisely in order to be able to tackle current political issues more effectively and vigorously.

Question of MUNDO OBRERO Daily

The report has even been criticized because I did not refer in it to what happend to MUNDO OBRERO daily. I must say that nobody in the Central Committee--nobody--intervened to say that it was necessary to pay attention to the question of MUNDO OBRERO daily here. But since it has been raised here, I wish to say that MUNDO OBRERO daily was a long-standing project. While a section of the leadership was still in exile, we launched the 200 million pesetas campaign for MUNDO OBRERO daily. There was already a desire to equip the party with a daily newspaper when we regained legality. And it must be said that those 200 million pesetas were collected to that end, but it should also be said that most of the sums collected domestically, in Spain, during that period were spent here on the party organizations' work and never reached the MUNDO OBRERO fund. This MUNDO OBRERO fund was in fact composed mainly of the emigrant comrades' aid.

I believe that when we decided in the Central Committee to undertake publication of MUNDO OBRERO, we were too subjective, and I for my part accept the principal share of responsibility for that subjectivism, both when the 200 million pesetas campaign was proposed in Paris and when I supported and maintained here the need for MUNDO OBRERO to be published daily. The fact is that we did not yet possess at the time when we launched it the material basis necessary for maintaining a daily newspaper and that in that we were mistaken. And on that we spent money which had been collected for MUNDO OBRERO daily.

I accept my responsibility and that of the entire Central Committee in this matter, but I at least do not relinquish the idea of the party's having again a MUNDO OBRERO daily some day. The conditions must be created without impatience for this to happen.

It is true that the party press is very difficult to maintain, but the communist parties in general have demonstrated that they are capable, with great sacrifice, of maintaining communist daily newspapers, and they need them, because this is the only way to have a voice which objectively and directly expresses their opinions and judgments about the problems of the country's life.

Eurocommunist Strategy

Entering now into what is the essence of the report, I believe that the Central Committee report propounds and defends the party's Eurocommunist strategy, and that there are no doubts or uncertainties about this strategic line which is advocated in the report: A strategic line which asserts our independent stance, our democratic and pluralist attitude and our stance in favor of what has been termed the revolution of the majority, supported, I would add, by the majority and corrected by the majority when the revolution does not proceed along the path desired by the majority.

And hence the issues of alternation in power, the issue of political support in society and the possibility of dismissing a government through the ballot box.

Obviously that is the essential issue in the report, and many issues are missing; in fact the issue of emigration is missing, the specific issue of women or of young people is missing, an enormous number of issues are missing, but when we drafted it we believed that it was necessary to concentrate on the essential issues posed today in this party and this country. And the essential thing was and is to assert the party's Eurocommunist strategy, and in this respect it can already be asserted that the party congress will not disappoint. The Eurocommunist line will be confirmed with many nuances, comrades, which should shock or alarm nobody, because they reflect a reality of our party.

Military Pacts

During the debate on the report it was asked why in international policy we approach the socialist countries, asking them for a specific initiative concerning the military pacts. And I ask: Whom could we approach, asking for that, except the socialist countries?

Could we approach the United States? We already know that the United States would pay no attention, of course, to a request which we made to it. But we are also approaching the Socialist International, requesting solidarity, so that if it is planned to take Spain into NATO without consulting the people, that solidarity will be exercised with Spain and with the Spanish people. Of course, we are launching that initiative, but we hope that the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] comrades will join in it, since it is they who may have greater influence among the Socialist International parties.

The problem of NATO and of the bases has also been raised. The fact is that we did not embarck upon a campaign against entry into NATO previously because we attempted to prevent that problem coming before parliament and being raised, and to ensure that that problem was frozen, and because we did not wish to ideologize with an exclusively communist initiative an issue which, as I explained in the Central Committee's report, is a national issue which would have been ideologized and turned into an issue no longer of the left but of the extreme left if we had embarked upon an individual campaign concerning this issue.

Although I must say, because this is the truth, that there has been no party rally, no round table and no opportunity--for instance, even when discussing other issues on television--when we have not introduced the issue of our oppositon to entry into NATO, and what is involved now is to conduct this campaign of collecting signatures.

We were hoping that during this congress we would already have the signatures heading an appeal for a referendum. I hope that we will still have it, because we want that appeal to be headed by personalities who as far as possible will reflect a spectrum of Spanish public opinion which is not especially leftwing. And as far as the bases are concerned, as we have said, we will oppose the bases as long as the bases are an element in the government's strategy of beginning participation within NATO.

As regards the issues of Eurocommunist policy and of Eurocommunist strategy, I will not refer to other aspects. I do wish to say that I deem it totally unjust to say at this congress that we have endorsed the policy of no changes in the state apparatus and that we have not defended human rights. I regard this as totally unjust, and I believe that it reflects a viewpoint which is so biased, so specific and so particular that it does not require my entering once again just now into the exposition of the viewpoints, the facts and the details which demonstrate that we have defended human rights and that if the laws approved in parliament are no worse and have been improved in those respects, that is due to the communist parliamentary group's activity.

The Conception of the Party

It seems to me that, with the vast majority of us being in agreement on the Eurocommunist strategy, I repeat, with nuances which exist in the reality of the party and which nobody could propose to delete with one stroke of the pen, the issue concerning which the debate at this congress has essentially been polarized is, rather, the issue of the conception of the party. This involves what party we wish to build, what party is the right party today for implementing the Eurocommunist policy and what party we will reach agreement on now; and we will debate this issue, I am convinced--as Comrade Lertxundi was saying here yesterday--with the intention on everybody's part to heed the resolutions adopted by this congress on this and on all other issues.

It has been said here that we need another party, that we are maintaining the party model of the Third International, that we are maintaining the traditional model. In contrast with this it has been argued, and not incorrectly, that certain contributions and certain innovations reflect the model of the former Second International, but to the comrades who maintain that we are reproducing the model of the Third International and that we are maintaining the traditional party model I would say: "It is obvious, comrades, that you have not known the traditional party model.

Or, if you have known it, you have forgotten it, because who could imagine a debate such as this in the traditional model, and, I would say, moreover, who could imagine today in many communist parties--and I do not say this rhetorically--a debate such as this?" Who could imagine in the traditional party model a precongress preparation such as we have had?

This party no longer has anything to do with the traditional model of the days of the Third International, and only those who have not known this model could assert such a thing. In our party there is broad debate and a comparison of different stances, and at this congress we are not only maintaining different stances in the debate, we are maintaining them in statements to the mass media. At this congress there is a freedom and a clarity which I believe must be maintained and preserved and which is what is characteristic of the party of a new kind which is inspired neither by the model of the Third International nor by that of the Second International.

Return to Associations

That is what must be preserved and developed, but together with that, comrades--and I emphasize what was advocated in the Central Committee's report--party democracy, in order to be full, requires that we communists return to the associations to revitalize them, that we communists ensure that this debate takes place throughout the party, and that our associations penetrate, work on, create and develop mass movements. I am convinced that if we do this, the doors of our party will indeed not open for anybody to leave, although we cannot deny anybody the right, either, to leave if he disagrees with the party.

The doors of our party will open so that those who have left can return and to admit many people who are still in a position to join the party and who will join it when our party's internal life revives and develops with that policy of strengthening the grassroots organization.

What is hampering a more general agreement at this congress, in my opinion, is a certain conception concerning the party which is wanted. No sooner is there talk of currents and tendencies than there is talk--and, for my part, this is the first time that I have heard this expression--of "pluralism within the party." Comrades, it may be that this business about pluralism in the party means nothing unusual or alarming, but in any event, if we take what pluralism means literally, I frankly do not see a monolithic party, but neither do I see a pluralist communist party, and let those who speak of pluralism not accuse me of Manichaeism when I said that there were those who advocated a party which would be a reflection of present-day society, because in fact that conception of pluralism is identified with a party which is a reflection of present-day society.

The Minorities and Unity of Action

There is also talk of the right of the minorities, and I believe that terrible confusion is being created in which we will end up by not knowing very clearly what we are discussing, although in fact and at bottom there are those who know very well what they are discussing and what they want.

I believe that the rights of the minorities are fully guaranteed at this congress, and that the minorities are being able to express and defend their stances. The minorities are acting with complete freedom, and nobody could say that the right of the minorities is being denied here; but, comrades [it is a question of the] right of the minorities until the debate ends and until the debate results in specific decisions, but after the debate results in specific decisions, can the minorities continue to defend their minority stances publicly against those of the majority?

Seemingly, a formal democratic viewpoint would appear to say "yes", and it would be "yes" if this party and this party's decisions were for the purpose of constructing canals, roads, bridges, buildings, and, in general, conducting politics, and politics are conducted by writing and speaking, in addition to organizing and working, and if after the congress the minority continue to defend their stances in the press and verbally outside the party, what is clear is that the minority will be conducting a policy which is not that on which the congress decided, and that, comrades, is not democracy [sentence as published].

What is democratic is for the minority to give way to the majority, and when they raise again in another precongress process or at a party congress or Central Committee meeting issues which are contentious, fine; everybody reassumes his stances in that debate, defends them, and again, when the debate ends and resolutions are adopted, everybody implements the policy determined by the majority.

Otherwise, comrades, this would not be one party; it would be two or three parties, and this is what we said in the Central Committee's report; three different parties can never coexist within a single party. Does that mean that there are no permanent free forums and that on matters of theory, of theoretical formulation, there is no freedom and a permanent debate without bounds, without limits, within the party? No, we are not in favor of such a permanent debate without bounds and without limits within the party.

However, I believe that the great problem of our theoretical formulation is not only whether we will be a party with tendencies or factions; I believe that Eurocommunism, Spain's multifaceted situation, social and economic problems and the prospect for progress toward socialism require many theoretical formulations which unfortunately do not have today the place which they should have within the framework of our party's theoretical activity.

I believe, comrades, that we must say clearly that this is the majority opinion of the outgoing Central Committee which I am expressing and defending here; we must say clearly that if we do not stop the steps which have been taken toward the organized formation of tendencies--and I am not threatening anybody here; I am saying this to everybody, to all those who in one way or another have taken part, consciously or otherwise--if we do not stop this, if all of us are not determined to end this, so that there will be freedom of debate, so that there will be debate, but not factions, this party could destroy itself within a very brief space of time.

Process of Disintegration of Democratic Forces

I am not attempting to impress anybody, but I tell you that in the democratic forces of this Spanish society we are witnessing a process of disintegration which coincides with a process of recomposition of the extreme rightwing forces, which are venturing to make public statements such as those which we heard a very few days ago from the lips of a current military authority, and we are not countering the processes of disintegration which are taking place in Spanish society, and if we communists do not set an example against those processes of disintegration, we will be objectively contributing to our country's turning back, and to the possibilities of a coup, of a regression, being confirmed. We must be aware of this, and I am not using it as a means of pressure but as a fact which exists and which we must bear in mind if we do not wish democracy in this country to go to hell.

After this congress we must all strive to ensure that with a conscious attitude on the part of each of us--and I am speaking of those who are on one side and those who are on another--we end factions, currents and groups in this party.

Autonomy Initiatives

It has been stated in a criticism of the report that a specific treatment of the issue of the state of the autonomies is necessary.

Concerning this issue, I wish to say that we are in favor of the parties of the nationalities and regions having the fullest autonomy in formulating and implementing their policy in the regions and nationalities in which they operate, and what is at issue more really is not that there has been a centralist pressure from Madrid to determine the policy of this or that party in this or that nation or region; but, rather, that the parties of the nationalities and regions--although not all of them--have not yet thoroughly used that real autonomy which they have had, which they have, from the party. In some instances we have encouraged political initiatives which had nothing exactly to do with party policy at the state level and which took into account the peculiarities of a nationality or region. I believe that that capacity for initiative for political decisionmaking and for adjusting communist or Eurocommunist policy is the same; nobody will call its nationalities or regions into question in the PCE. But at the same time, we want a PCE which will have a personality as such and a capacity for decisionmaking as such, and not a federation of parties which would place us in a position of inferiority in this country's political life and would achieve nothing.

The tone of my speech has been criticized. It has been said that it was a rally-type speech, and this has been said in a rally-type manner, likewise. Comrades, I know my own shortcomings; at least, some of them. I am not a kind of paternalist chairman in this party who spends his time flattering everybody, applying balm to everybody's wounds, reassuring everybody and attempting to agree with everybody.

I am not like that; I am a man who makes decisions; I am a man who has ideas and who defends them. That I have done and that I will do throughout my life, and in defending them I express the passion which I am bound to express. And here we are conducting a debate of ideas--at least, as far as I am concerned, what is being conducted is a debate of ideas--but afterward I am capable of working jointly, without any bitterness and resentment, with those who have opposed me, provided that we both accept the decisions and cooperate sincerely in that work.

I am not a man for bitterness; I am not a man who consigns to a ghetto or to Hell somebody because he has disagreed with me at some point; but at the same time I am not a man for pacts within the party. On behalf of the party I may make pacts with the union of the Democratic Center, with Democratic Coalition or with the PSCE; I may make pacts with other parties, but I do not make pacts within the party, because I believe that the debate here is a debate of ideas and the only pact possible is respect for the decisions of the majority and cooperation afterward to implement the decisions of the majority.

There has been a great deal of talk about respect for the minorities, comrades. It sometimes happens that under the pretext of respecting the minorities, the minorities are flattered and buttered up, and that is what is happening in the party today. When some people hold a majority somewhere, they flatter the others and allow them a small say, but they keep, and remove, them from any party representation.

I would appeal to all those who adopt one stance or another and those who agree with the stances which the Central Committee is upholding also; I would appeal to them all that the minorities should really be respected and those who talk most about respect for the minorities should not be those who are paving the way for a split in the party through a sectarian stance which is in fact the most flagrant violation of the minorities' rights.

A Regenerated and United Party

We will emerge from this congress with a regenerated party, with a party which will really advance along the path of its democratization, but if the outgoing Central Committee's stance has a majority, with a party which will not experience factions, tendencies or groups of any kind. We will emerge with a party in which we have passionately, vehemently and vigorously argued, and polemicized, sometimes even having gut reactions, but I believe that nobody among our opponents should build up false hopes.

We will emerge with a united party and we will emerge with a party which will open its doors so that former members can return and new members can enter, and which will not close them if somebody does not feel at ease, treating him with the utmost respect. A party which will become stronger and a party in which, I hope, those who have seen us polemicizing here, sometimes passionately, will see us again, at least in most instances, working together and cooperating to implement this congress, decisions and to make a Communist party which will remain a factor of consolidation, which is greatly needed, of democracy in our country. A Communist Party which will remain a guarantee of progress and of advance in this society toward the resolution of the people's masses; grave and acute problems; a party which will create hope of a socialist and communist society in Spain.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE REPORT TO 10TH PCE CONGRESS

PM140826 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 28 Jul 81 pp 13-40

["PCE Central Committee report to 10th PCE Congress" to be delivered by PCE Central Committee Secretary General Santiago Carrillo on 28 July 1981]

[Excerpt] Mistakes in the Work of the Party and of its Leadership

Does this mean that we have had in our conduct no grave mistakes, inadequacies and shortcomings to subject to severe criticism and self-criticism?

We have indeed had them. But we must define and identify them clearly, because in this way the criticism will result in a strengthening of the party and in progress which must be made. And we believe in fact that our fundamental weakness--on which the self-criticism, which we ourselves conduct, and many of the criticisms leveled against us agree--has been a pronounced inclination to conduct politics at the top and upward.

That mistake has been made by a party whose traditions of clandestinity were precisely the contrary; to conduct politics at the grassroots, in the mass movements, downward and not upward, and to have thus achieved a social penetration which no other opposition force achieved under Francoism.

This mistake did not stem from any change of conception about the party's mass nature; the idea of territorialization was aimed precisely at developing that nature. The mistake stemmed from a practice which has been gaining acceptance and against which we have not known how, or been able, to react in time. The origin of that practice--its objective cause--lies in the change of tasks from clandestinity to legality and in the persistence of certain leadership methods of the clandetine era.

On becoming legalized, in a relatively brief period, the party needed to move hundreds, thousands, of cadres hitherto involved in the mass movements to parliamentary, autonomy and municipal tasks, either directly or to provide help and assistance.

At the same time, the trend toward large leadership bodies at all levels has continued, if not intensified, encouraging by this means also the cadres' upward flight.

The only mass movement which has not suffered this flight is the trade union, which had very important active functions and a personality and tradition of its own. But other movements, without the direct presence of the people who had encouraged them, have languished, lost strength and, in some instances, almost disappeared.

This has also been influenced by the change in the nature of the mass movements' work when democratic legality came about. It is clear that in the period of clandestinity, many associations performed, together with their specific functions, functions characteristic of the party organization; there were no very pronounced boundaries in the anti-Francoist struggle.

I believe that one of the shortcomings of our formulation has been a failure to foresee the change which was bound to occur in the activity of those organizations, to the effect of making them genuinely independent of the party, broadening their composition and centering them on the formulation of their specific demands and mass mobilization to achieve them, as centers of democratic participation in social life. The failure to define the mass movements' new tasks and styles, except in those which were most deeply rooted, probably also caused the withdrawal of not a few activists.

Nevertheless, the gravest aspect was the abandonment of the associations caused by this upward flight. The party's grassroots organization thus lost vitality, dynamism and political influence. The principal instrument through which the party is linked with the masses--the grassroots organization--failed. Such a practice modified de facto, although not de jure, the party's communist conception, which is different from that of the bourgeois, and even social democratic, parties. By this I mean that communications between the party and the masses have been taking place principally through parliamentary, autonomy or municipal representation; in a nonorganizational manner in which we will always be outdone by other forces which have more extensive use of the mass media. And I do not underestimate the importance of this level of relationship; what I am saying is that in our conception the essential thing is the more organizational and deeper level of contact through the party organizations with the mass movements, which, I would add, is crucial for our influence and our deep penetration in the social fabric.

We have heard so many complaints about the associations' defective functioning, but how few of those who complained have used their intelligence and ability in the associations' work, striving to turn them into a political and cultural center for the local workers and working population, thus helping to build the party--and at the same time, the mass movements--by training new members and cadres politically and even culturally.

The view which we had at the Rome Central Committee plenum [presumably dating from the clandestine period] concerning the associations' prospects is correct, provided that we change the practice of this period. We said at that time that:

"...The association meetings will make possible a richer political exchange than that of the cells.... The party line will be able to reach them more directly, through comrades holding responsible posts. A more lively dialogue will be able to develop between leaders and members which will have repercussions on the quality of political life.... At the meetings dozens of propagandists, capable of clearly explaining the party's policy to the masses, will be trained."

But we cadres have largely deserted the associations; we have concentrated in the high representative political spheres and in the higher committees, and in fact there are very few cadres who spontaneously decide to work in the associations.

Either this 10th congress will be the congress of the cadres' return to the grassroots and of the strengthening of their presence in the associations, or else the continuation of the current practice will lead us toward a kind of party which will have very little to do in its structure--and indeed, in its substance--with what a communist party is.

A bourgeois or social democratic party has, above all, voters, not members. A communist party has members and voters. If communist parties preserve their membership, it is because of the existence of a kind of relationship between cadres and members which occurs at the level of their organizations and which enables members not to be mere followers and mere voters but coparticipants in the activity of the party as a whole--political protagonists. This is the real meaning of democracy in the party and of participation, far more than political duels among very small groups of cadres whose faces are sometimes not seen in the associations, except at the meetings on the eve of a congress.

And until we surmount this, there will be a loss of membership, even if we win new voters; the party will grow weaker, becasue our members do not with to be spectators; they wish to take part.

There has been a great deal of talk in the party about the issue of loss of membership. But no serious inquiry has as yet been conducted to discover the real causes of the loss of membership--an inquiry among those concerned. And one will have to be conducted after this congress. And we will have to see where this phenomenon has occurred to a greater or lesser extent and why, since there are considerable differences between some places and others. It has been very easy in some circles to attribute it to rejection of the leadership and of its policy, even when loss of membership coincided with an increase in our voters.

I am not convinced that, if there had been a different practice, a greater concentration of our cadres' efforts on the associations and direct attention to their work, the party, despite a certain democratic ebb, would virtually not have lost members [sentence as as published]. Moreover, I believe that if there is a change in the style of work, it can win them back, secure the return of those who left and swell its ranks.

The situation in the associations, the crisis in other mass movements for the reasons which have been set out--and, I would add, the trade union's organizational weakensses which the confederation's second congress has set out to surmount--have decisively influenced our ability to mobilize the masses. It is not that there has been a conception opposed to mass mobilization in the party; it is that mass mobilization has also been conceived as something which is resolved from above, with decisions and appeals. The Asturian comrades have a valuable experience; the demonstration in defense of the Asturian economy, which they began by calling alone, as regards the other organizations and parties, and for which they prepared meticulously for many months at meetings of associations and local meetings, with the participation of all the party's leading cadres, creating a mass atmosphere which led to the biggest demonstration there has even been in Asturias, supported ultimately by the groups which were initially opposed to it.

The ability to mobilize has also been affected by this inclination to conduct politics at the top.

This practice which we are criticizing--and which is directly a self-criticism of our shortcomings as a leadership--entails other dangers which are no less grave; that with the activities of the leadership bodies and elected representatives as our almost essential link with the masses, with the weakening of the organizational ties between the elected representatives and the party and with the dwindling of the latter's political life and organization, our party will end up by becoming an exclusively electioneering and administrative party, and cease to be a revolutionary party; a party in which the struggle for leadership at this or that level supplants the debating of ideas, and in which the aim is power in its less noble sense, and not the triumph of the emancipating ideal of communism.

The fact that the party pays great attention to parliamentary, autonomy, provincial or municipal work, or that it mobilizes itself actively with respect to elections, regarding them as essential political battles, does not mean falling into electioneering, but attaching to elections all the importance they have in a democratic path toward socialism.

But the danger of electioneering arises when the deputy or councillor, once elected, virtually severs the direct link with the membership; regards himself as the party's spokesman without taking the membership into account, and end up by feeling that he is invested with an authority which is to some extent independent of the party bodies which proposed him for the posts which he holds.

Real power could thus shift from the party's members and bodies to the elected people, and at the end of a practice of this kind, we could be confronted with a situation like that which the leftwing is attempting to correct in the British Labor Party. That is, with the parliamentarians and elected people leading the party, we would then have a kind of party with the characteristics of the Second International.

In this connection, I believe that although we are in time to correct it, our current practice is leading to a distancing between elected people and the party. Allow me to generalize, although there may be exceptions. It seems to me that we deputies do not inform the party sufficiently about our work. And if this is true of the deputies, whose work becomes known in one way or another, it is even more true of the councillors. We have not been able to institutionalize a method whereby the councillors in each place will regularly inform the party aktiv, receive its suggestions and criticisms and discuss their conduct with that aktiv. It is not merely a matter of being honest and efficient administrators; it is a matter of acting in contact with the people, and the first link for that purpose is contact with the party members.

Concerning the Party's Leadership Bodies

But the trend toward an upward flight is manifested not only with respect to the state bodies, but in the numerical composition--excessively large--of the leadership bodies at very different levels which makes them ponderous and lacking in agility and which, moreover, contrasts with the lack of cadres for the grassroots organization.

This is to some extent a legacy of the clandestine era, when the size of the leadership bodies to some extent offset the objective obstacles to the party organizations' democratic functioning. But when legality came, that practice continued, and participation in the leadership bodies, instead of following a criterion of efficiency and internal democracy, has become akind of distinction or status within the party, if not a dividing up of influence.

It is sometimes said that there are veteran comrades who may find it distressing to leave leadership posts at this or that level, but that very thing is the case with very many nonveteran comrades, full of strength and vigor, who would give the party much more and enrich their own experience by asserting themselves as leaders heading an association rather than as titular members of this or that higher committee.

This also encourages the accumulation of posts which led us to raise the problem of incompatibilities in Cordoba, albeit with scant effects (of course, the Cordoba proposals remain unimplemented). It also impedes the necessary homogenization of the party which, in order to be real, needs to pass through the sieve not only of a debate but also of actual work in the depths of the party.

The leadership bodies which we have at various levels are today also an obstacle to the party's proper functioning because of their size and because of the accumulation of responsibilities by their members. We have complained, from various angles, of grave shortcomings in the Central Committee's work. But, irrespective of this or that shortcoming, the basic problem is that we do not have a real PCE Central Committee.

How is the PCE Central Committee's role to be understood? I believe that it can be understood in two ways. One of them would be how it functions now; that is, as a body which meets from time to time, discusses these or those issues well or not so well and then disperses, with everybody devoting himself to his duties as an elected person, leader in a nationality, region or province or as a trade union leader, without any responsibility or direct obligation as a PCE Central Committee member at the level of the country as a whole, attending or not attending the plenums as the case may be, depending on what his own duties at other levels allow.

Another way would be a necessarily smaller Central Committee in which, apart from a number of members in their own right, apart from the secretaries of the nationalities or regions and some other comrades whose participation in mass movements at the national level or whose political authority justified it, the remainder, even though living in the outskirts, would devote 30 percent of their time to the Central Committee's own work, not only attending the plenums but working on its specific tasks with the organizations in this or that part of the country, irrespective of their origin.

I believe that this second way, which is that which the current blueprint for the statutes seems to define, would make possible more frequent meetings and more direct and lively contact between the Central Committee and the party as a whole; direct knowledge of the latter's reality--and not merely that of one sector or area--and hence fuller information and more fluid communications and movement of ideas between grassroots and leadership.

I believe that this means that the post of Central Committee member should cease to be an honorific distinction and become merely a working post, and that removal from it should cease to appear to be a defenestration and take on the nature of a redistribution of the party's strength, taking into account its needs and application of the criterion of incompatibilities.

This conception should be extended to the party's leadership bodies at various levels as a whole, with which I believe we would also have taken a step toward a genuine democratization of our functioning.

In so doing, it would be necessary to make an effort to change something which today is very frequently a negative fact. People outside our ranks have the idea that the communist party functions with a strong centralism, guaranteed by acceptance of the rule of democratic centralism.

The fact is that the centrifugal tendencies in our midst--and perhaps, together with them, the remnants of the compartmentalization which was necessary during the clandestine era--are so strong that frequently the intermediate leadership bodies act as a barrier instead as a link between the central leadership and those below, and in certain areas as a barrier between the higher leaderships in that area and those of the associations. In this connection there is sometimes an exasperating bureaucratism which impoverishes collective political life and which turns some sections of the party into contons. This must be ended by means of political work and, when necessary, through antibureaucratic administrative measures.

These tendencies are an obstacle to organizations such as the Communist Party of Andalusia or the Communist Party of the Basque country becoming really established, and to there being a more fluid relationship between the Central Committee bodies and the organizations; with the result that frequently in this supposedly centralized party, everybody goes his own way and lack of communication rather than autonomy occurs.

I will mention an extreme instance, in a field to which sufficient importance is not yet attached--that of finances. Every time there is an election campaign, a referendum or some other political campaign, we encounter the same obstacle--the party's poverty. And yet, in fact, the party is not so poor. Many associations or local sections have their own nest egg; that is, their savings bank account, which is sometimes large and for which they receive a tiny amount of interest. If the amounts in these nest eggs were put together, it would total hundreds of millions of pesetas. The Central Committee could deposit it in a bank account with a far higher interest rate. The nest eggs would grow and the associations and sections would be richer and could withdraw in case of need the sums theyrequired through the Central Committee. But that capital which today is underutilized would also enable the Central Committee to conduct broader political campaigns and give financial assistance to the organizations which needed it.

Thus as a result of that dispersal the party is far poorer than it would be in fact if there were less localism than there is today.

Of course, in all this situation there is a responsibility on the part of the party's central leadership. At the Cordoba plenum we raised and formally resolved very important issues, but we did not have the ability to put them into practice.

Concerning the Party Apparatus

In this connection, it is inevitably necessary to refer to the party apparatus. There is a good deal of talk about the apparatus and there is even the black legend about the party apparatus.

I believe that in a political party today the apparatus is made up of the party's full-time officials in its leadership bodies, in the bodies representing the people (parliament, the municipalities and so forth), in the mass movements, in its press or in its enterprises, if it has any. The full-time officials as a whole comprise the apparatus. There is no bourgeois or workers' party which has no apparatus. Strong parties usually have strong apparatuses; moreover, they need strong apparatuses. The demagogic criticisms of the apparatuses and "bureaucracy" deliberately disregard the complexity of a political party's functioning nowadays.

Sometimes parties which are in power use the state apparatus to enlarge and develop their own; in other countries the state apparatus and that of the ruling party merge and form a single apparatus.

Under these conditions, the apparatus can constitute a factor restricting internal democracy, an instrument for the leading group's remaining in power. And that can also occur in communist parties.

But is it possible to speak in those terms of the PCE's apparatus and bureaucracy as certain comrades demagogically do who sometimes form part--and even a privileged part--of that apparatus without apparently realizing it?

One of the consequences of what is still the PCE's weakness and at the same time a factor which intensifies that weakness is that its apparatus, the core of full-time officials in one form or another, is still very small.

The fact is, we do not possess the financial resources to have the apparatus which would be necessary to guarantee for the party as a whole extensive and open information and, vice versa, for conveying information, opinions and initiatives from the party's grass-roots to the leadership. There are entire provinces which lack a single full-time official. And in those in which there are full-time officials in elected posts, it has not proved possible in many instances, for probably justified reasons, for them to take part in the work of extending the party's organization and propaganda.

The leadership elected at the 10th congress will have to tackle as one of its tasks the organizing a genuine party apparatus. Today the problem is not that there is an apparatus which is crushing party democracy; it is that there is no apparatus.

And the confrontation and the polemics in the party lie, rather than in the party as a whole, within the apparatus, among the elected people, the trade union cadres, the full-time officials and leadership aides and councillors. The political debate in the party is largely a debate within the apparatus, the comrades in the apparatus, full-time party officials and councillors. The sectarian and dogmatic stances in Catalonia are headed primarily by a group of full-time officials, either in the party or in the trade union movement--that is, pure apparatus.

On the other hand, many members do not understand very clearly the real significance of these battles among those whom they regard as their leaders, and are even indifferent toward them. I say all this in order to assert two truths: first, that we need a stronger and better apparatus; second, that today the apparatus does not represent unconditional support for the leadership which stifles internal democracy; in many instances it represents opposition to the leadership, and this is not a party apparatus' function, either.

The Trade Union Front and the Cultural Front

On the trade union front, the party leadership has made mistakes connected mainly with the working method in it.

Before the legalization of the party and of the workers commissions, we concerned ourselves seriously with the issue and helped formulate a clear line of transformation of what was a movement into a trade union. There the party leadership played the role which rested with it.

The mistake lay in the fact that in seeking to guarantee the trade union's independence, we agreed that, in view of the number and quality of the communist cadres working in it, a permanent body attached to the leadership to deal with trade union policy was not necessary. We wished to shun traditional methods connected with the conception of the trade union as a driving belt.

And the result was not satisfactory. In not developing methods which would provide the communist trade union cadres with a party forum for discussing their problems, there was ultimately no trade union policy consistently accepted by everybody, and we passed on our confrontations to the trade union.

These confrontations intensified when the crisis and its consequences worsened. At that point, the party leadership did intervene--effectively, I believe--organizing a broad debate which culminated in a Central Committee meeting whose decisions have had a positive influence.

It is possible that more systematic attention, effected by a general committee body, would have made it possible to foresee and avert conflicts which have arisen, although not, I believe, completely.

At the Central Committee meeting to which I refer, it was decided to set up that body--a decision which we have not yet implemented, with the intention that the new Central Committee should do so, and because there were not the people necessary for this task in the Central Committee which is now resigning--not because of a shortage of comrades with trade union experience but because they are all engaged in tasks difficult to abandon. Of course, I wish to state that the party is identified with the trade union line approved by the confederation's second congress and that it will fully support it.

Another front on which we have demonstrated serious weaknesses is the cultural front.

One of the tragedies of the political change that has occurred in our country is that in the cultural field, in the broadest sense, there has been no real change, there has been a continuing lack of official concern for and interest in culture, and the basic aim of the cultural policy that has been pursued has been to adapt to the new forms what existed in Spain in previous years.

Do we have a responsibility for this situation? My answer is: Yes. And what is our responsibility? Of course, I will only provide a general answer to this question. I believe that we have drawn up good platforms for each sector. I believe that we have taken initiatives in parliament and expressed just criticisms of the government, but I also believe that we have committed two serious errors in the work of the party and its leadership.

First, we have failed to encourage the formulation of an updated joint program designed to be discussed by the various forces of culture, in the broadest sense, so as to encourage these forces' independent action in the democratic process. In other words, we have failed to take up this matter as a party as a whole.

Second, we have not devoted ourselves seriously to forming a strategy for the cultural forces, and more specifically to discussing it with the cultural forces with a view to reaching an autonomous solution on the part of these same forces that would dispel the inertia of our stance during the Francoist period.

Thus our initiatives in the various sectors and our short-term initiatives on matters of culture, in the broadest sense, have not been followed up by general, far-reaching action by the party as a whole so as to revitalize and, I would say, to restructure and convert the front of cultural forces. This seems to me to be the party leadership's main responsibility in this process of change in which, as far as culture is concerned, little has changed and sometimes certain things have changed for the worse.

I believe that this is one of the reasons, the main reason, for the intellectuals' disenchantment not only with change, but with our party itself.

Apart from this, some influence might have been exerted by the effects of the territorialization, in which connection we have failed to bear in mind the need to maintain certain sectional organizational activities on that front. But I believe that this has been a secondary factor compared to the previous one, because the decline in membership has occurred even in the associations that remained sectional.

I also believe that our position among professional people has been influenced negatively by the fact that hitherto it has not been possible to form in some of their sectors unitary trade unions independent of the confederations and capable of rallying support for their own demands from both politicized and nonpoliticized members.

Development of Party Democracy

The development of internal democracy is a vital necessity for the party's growth within society. An active democratic life means that there can be more and more communist party members capable of actively spreading communism. It means the free expression in the party of varying opinions influenced by social or cultural origin ; differing viewpoints on the issues that now split the international communist movement; differing viewpoints on theoretical issues under debate; and differing opinions on short-term stances in connection with day-to-day political matters.

We are entirely in favor of the broadest freedom of debate in the party.

At present, this diversity is freely expressed in our party, in its own and other press organs, in the precongress debate and before this debate. I remember reading in the daily MUNDO OBRERO articles accusing party leaders of being "Stalinists," and nobody issued any indignant rejoinders or took any measures. Frankly, I know of very few communist parties that have gone as far as this. I cannot imagine a L'UNITA article calling Berlinguer, Pajetta or Bufalini Stalinists--outside of the precongress debate, and, moreover--remaining unanswered.

But party democracy is something more and also different from what some comrades are demanding. The prime task of party democratization demands the return to the associations--and not only when conferences and congresses occur, but in a permanent manner, by taking part in political tasks and also current work--the unfamiliar and unselfish work which is often carried out only by modest comrades whom some people in fact regard as the party's infantry.

Party democracy demands that well-educated comrades carry out training and encouragement work in the associations, that they strive to improve the party's political standard, broader involvement in debates and a simple and specific form of debate that will provide scope for the involvement of those who are not at present involved and who limit themselves to internal debates. I consider serious and significant the low attendance of party members of preparatory meetings for the 10th congress and sincerely wonder whether we chose the right kind of theses drawn up by the Central Committee; whether we are not straying dangerously from the party's general cultural standard, which is a reflection of the standard that exists among the working class and broad strata of the people. Because this could be a road to an estrangement between the leadership and the grassroots and between the party and the masses and therefore to a reduction of internal democracy and the party's democratic capacity.

In our party, leaders are now elected by secret ballot--at all levels, I believe--and, moreover, with an opportunity to amend lists sumbitted by the electoral committees by including candidates rejected by them. I do not believe that any political party elects its leaders more democratically.

At our conferences and congresses the positions not only of the marjorities but also of qualified minorities are defended and voted on.

In view of these points that have already been achieved, a real democratization must be aimed at increasing the involvement of the party as a whole in its internal political life and in mass political activity.

The Central Committee rejected by a large majority the idea of organizing currents, tendencies, factions or whatever you wish to call them. Lenin is often invoked to justify the authorization of these forms, but Lenin himself proposed their prohibition at the Bolshevik Party's 10th Congress. And let us not forget that he had to proceed from an existing situation.

Starting in 1917, the Bolshevik Party was a conglomeration of several parties and factions of various origins and histories--Trotskiyist, social [as published] revolutionary, Menshevik, Bogdanovist, and so forth--who united on the eve of or during the October revolution, though maintaining ties and points of agreement within each of them continued to distinguish them. It was impossible to surmount this real diversity, which stemmed from what had been a recent merger, by means of formal measures.

Our party's formation was different. It was not a merger of several different political groups. We could create this if we authorize the formation of currents, and I refuse to accept that this is any kind of democratic progress. We have developed the idea of a new kind of political group in which parties with socialist aims, class trade unions and mass movements can converge while maintaining their own organization, recognizing the philosophical and political pluralism that exists among those struggling for socialism, and that must be respected in a socialist society as we see it. But within this new kind of group the PCE must maintain its own philosophy, its revolutionary Marxist character and its own organization. The PCE msut not be a caricatural microcosm of this new political group.

Some comrades who support the authorization of currents claim that the PCE must be a mirror of society. Clearly this is another view of the party that is not Eurocommunist, inasmuch as we believe that Eurocommunism is simply the way to be a revolutionary Marxist communist at the end of the 20th century in industrialized European society. It is something different from Eurocommunism. The party is above all an instrument of the working class, of Marxist intellectuals and the working people's masses for transforming society; if anything it is a reflection of the shared interests and ideas of the exploited class and sectors--not accidentally or automatically, but by rallying its members around its ideology and policy. In other words, by transforming their spontaneous currents into revolutionary awareness.

In our view, the authorization of currents would in effect mean introducing the parliamentary interplay that exists in society--and that is fully understandable because of society's composition--into a party that has been and intends to continue to be a vanguard of society, in other words, a highly active and collectively active part within it.

We would have several authorized currents seeking the support of a passive mass of members, virtually mere voters, and competing with each other for this support. But this conception is radically different from the concept of a vanguard party, a collective vanguard party.

Also we would recreate in the party organization the procedures which, in their criticism of the leadership, some members condemn as one of the defects of parliamentary politics--the policy of consensus, pacts, compromises and underhand arrangements. If we took the authorization of currents to its logical conclusion, namely electoral proportionality, we might bring into the party another phenomenon that sometimes occurs in society--the latter's ungovernability because of the distribution of power among opposing currents.

I can understand why members of ruling communist parties in countries where other parties do not function and where consequently, since the single party is identified with the state, it should indeed be the reflection of society, advocate the authorization; it is the only way of offsetting the absence of pluralism. In our country, however, there are several parties and groups from which to choose.

I would add that those who advocate the creation of precongress platforms within the party are, consciously or otherwise, opening the way to the creation of currents, tendencies or factions. How can a congress platform be created unless prior horizontal contacts and political relations outside the regular party bodies exist? Like it or not, a platform is the foundation and program of a faction. And if it needs prior contacts before the precongress period to take shape, why should it disband after the congress?

I believe we must be clear about this: Let whoever wants to authorize currents within the party propose it openly. It is no crime. We would all then know what we were voting for.

Some say that "the party must authorize what already exists." Indeed, it cannot be denied that within the party there are groups linked in one way or another on a local or even widespread level and that there are "clandestine" horizontal contacts about which everyone has now heard.

But this is in fact polluting the atmosphere within the party, creating tensions and dangers of splits and, in fact, instead of increasing democracy, it is reducing it. It was thus that in Catalonia the situation was gradually reached whereby a dogmatic and sectarian group was acting more and more as a separate party opposed to the PSUC, mobilizing its followers against the meetings of the party's leadership bodies and insulting, threatening and even attacking its leaders. When such an extreme situation is reached, any provocation is possible, and any provocateur can infiltrate. And a choice presents itself: either those elements leave, or it becomes an inevitable necessity to expel them. The regrettable thing is that in these crisis one also loses sincerely revolutionary members blinded by the frictions of a splittist trend. If possible, we must separate them from the splittists; if we do not manage to do so, in time they will realize that this is their party and will return. [sentence as published] But by cleansing itself of factions the party can surmount internal disputes and at last pursue a policy in defense of the working people's interests, binding itself to their broad masses and mobilizing them. BRUNDTLAND INTERVIEWED ON NUCLEAR ZONE ISSUE

[Interview by editors Wolfgang Mallmann, Wulf Kuester and Herman Orth with Premier Gro Harlem Brundtland in Oslo]

[Excerpt] SPIEGEL: Do you support the deployment of neutron weapons in Europe?

Brundtland: Our position is absolutely clear in this respect. We are against the production and deployment of these weapons.

SPIEGEL: But you are for a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe, as suggested by Brezhnev?

Brundtland: The initiative for a nuclear-free zone in this region did not come from Brezhnev but from the Norwegian Social Democratic Party. The suggestion is part of the party program for the next 4 years.

SPIEGEL: For more than 20 years Norwegian governments have rejected all Soviet suggestions in this respect.

Brundtland: In all these years we have maintained the view that a nuclear-free zone in the north should be part of a comprehensive settlement on nuclear arms in Europe. A separate agreement would be unbalanced. Our approach to this problem has not changed.

SPIEGEL: But the Soviet position seems to have changed.

Brundtland: President Brezhnev indicated for the first time--I repeat indicated--that one could also discuss certain measures affecting the Soviet side. He did not explain these measures in detail, but in principle this is new in that it did not exist in this form previously.

SPIEGEL: Shortly thereafter the Soviet press agency NOVOSTI stated the opposite: Soviet territory is not under discussion because the Kola Peninsula is "part of the global strategic balance of power between the United States and the USSR..."

Brundtland: Which is correct. I have pointed out repeatedly that one cannot just take a compass, draw a circle around the Soviet Union on a map, and then say, "We will now create a nuclear-free zone which will include this part of Soviet territory." This does not mean, however, that we should not work toward agreements to reduce certain arms systems on Soviet territory as part of a comprehensive agreement between the East and the West.

SPIEGEL: What should the concrete aim of negotiations be?

Brundtland: We must reduce the number of short-range weapons deployed in the immediate neighborhood of northern Europe, including medium-range weapons such as the SS-20, which can reach northern and western europe from within the Soviet Union. This is the main reason why we must consider a possible nuclear-free zone in northern Europe as part of a comprehensive East-West agreement on the limitation of nuclear arms in Europe.

SPIEGEL: The idea that one can incorporate Soviet territory and Soviet arms into such agreements was termed as "dangerously naive" by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger. Last months in Washington your foreign minister found "not the slightest understanding" for Norway's approach. How does that fit into your concept?

Brundtland: Without referring to alleged remarks, I would like to say the following: We will seriously and responsibly examine the serious reactions and opinions of our allies. We could not expect a new and rather complicated concept to be approved immediately. All negotiations and agreements on arms limitation presuppose the possibility of actual reductions or limitations on both sides. This concept cannot be termed naive.

SPIEGEL: Do you feel misunderstood by the United States?

Brundtland: No, I would not say that. We had consultations with our allies and they have voiced their opinions and initial criticisms. I am not at all certain, however, whether the fears are really directed against the concept developed by us or much rather against the earlier suggestions of separate agreements, which we continue to reject.

SPIEGEL: The Soviet Government paper IZVESTIYA has stated that Moscow will not make any further statements on the nuclear-free zone which would belong to the actual negotiations. When will you begin to negotiate?

Brundtland: We do not intend to negotiate bilaterally with the Soviet Union on our security. We expect explanations from them--gradually and when the time is ripe within the general context of East-West negotiations.

SPIEGEL: But you have already held bilateral talks with the Soviets.

Brundtland: If Leonid Brezhnev, who is the president of a neighboring country, comments officially or indirectly or makes suggestions, or if general opinions are being voiced by the Soviet side, these are political facts. We cannot pretend to have heard nothing. When Minister Forde was in Moscow--not to discuss this issue, but as minister of culture within the framework of an official visit--this point was brought up by the Soviets.

They said they were interested in examining measures that could include Soviet arms and Soviet territory. It does not mean we have taken up bilateral negotiations. It simply means that an opinion was voiced to a Norwegian Cabinet member.

SPIEGEL: Did the Soviets tell Mr Forde about their opinion regarding the incorporation of Soviet territory?

Brundtland: They made some indications. As I said, these signals must be explained in due time.

SPIEGEL: If this zone really should be created, your country as a NATO member would be in an extraordinary situation: Important elements of your security would not be guaranteed by the Western alliance but by the Soviet Union. Does that worry you?

Brundtland: We are not searching for guarantees involving just our country or those countries which could form a possible nuclear free zone. Bilateral agreements between Norway or the Nordic countries and the Soviet Union are not intended. We work on the strengthening of the general system of guarantees existing for nonnuclear states within the framework of the nonproliferation treaty. Agreements naturally can be also the result of negotiations between the East and West. Even then Norway's protection by NATO would remain decisive.

EDEK PARTY REJECTS TURKISH CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

NC182124 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] The socialist EDEK party's political bureau, in a statement released after its meeting on the developments following the submission of the Turkish proposals, rejects these proposals because, as it stresses, they violate international principles, democracy, human rights and the summit agreements. The EDEK statement adds that a detailed reply to the proposals must be given which will indicate their unacceptability along with a statement that continuation of the dialogue will only be possible if the Turkish side abandons its racist philosophy and submits proposals that will accept as a basis the equality of the citizens' rights and democracy.

The EDEK statement further says: At the same time, the immediate preparation for turning to the United Nations must begin and should be achieved under any prerequisites. The sending of delegations to as many countries as possible should begin now in order to explain both our line and the untenable Turkish proposals, the need for a new form of activity from the international organization, and to present the issue as one of occupation and usurpation.

Last, the EDEK statement says the Turkish proposals must be denounced immediately and calls for a turn toward international forums with a comparison of the two proposals, while the people must be made aware of all proposals and play a substantive role in handling their cause.

Meetings Continue

NC190930 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] This morning, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis concluded their talks. Following their meeting, Mr Rolandhis stated that the recent Turkish Cypriot proposals are not satisfactory, and that they cannot serve as a basis for the solution of the Cyprus problem. However, in any case, he said, despite the unacceptability of the Turkish Cypriot proposals, the exploration and the dialogue will continue at the present stage in an effort to promote a solution.

Mr Mitsotakis stated that the Greek Government's views coincide with the decisions of the Cyprus National and Ministerial Councils. He added that the proposals submitted by the Turkish side are not the ones that were expected. He continued: I think it was wrong on the part of the Turks to proceed so timorously, particularly since they had given the impression that they were to proceed at a much more decisive pace.

Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis then met with Greek official opposition leader and PASOK Chairman Papandreou, whom he briefed on the latest Cyprus developments.

OPPOSITION SEEN TO NEUTRON BOMB DEPLOYMENT PLANS

NC181010 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 15 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Report by Muammer Elveren]

[Text] Brussels--It has been learned that as a priority, the United States intends to install the neutron bomb in two countries, Germany and Turkey. As is known, U.S. President Reagan announced to the world at the beginning of this week that his country would begin producing the neutron bomb and communicated this officially to all allied countries, including Turkey.

The United States has announced that, for the time being, it intends to stockpile the neutron bomb on its own territory. However, it is reported that at the next NATO session the U.S. authorities will try to secure a decision which will make it possible to install the neutron bomb in European countries as well. If this decision is reached at the NATO meetings, it will be determined in which countries the bomb will be installed. NATO's strategy experts and the well-known British Strategic Sciences Institute have announced that the two most suitable countries for the installation of the neutron bomb are Germany and Turkey. It is reported that this view is still valid and that the United States intends to install the neutron bomb in Germany and Turkey as a priority. Experts, who state that the neutron bomb is being produced to counteract the Soviet threat, feel that Germany and Turkey are first in line to be used as depots for the neutron bomb.

The Turkish Government has already announced its opposition to the installation of the neutron bomb on its territory. Although no such request has been received from the United States, Turkey has thus implied its opposition to the likely request. In the past, when the Carter administration planned to manufacture the neutron bomb, it communicated the situation to all its allies, including Turkey, and asked for their views. When in 1977 Turkey communicated its views on the matter, it expressed its opposition to the arms race and also implied its opposition to the neutron bomb. Meanwhile, the Greek Government issued a statement yesterday saying that it will not permit the installation of the neutron bomb on its territory.

TERCUMAN EDITORIAL POINTS UP AMBIGUITY IN NEW LAW

NC181134 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 16 Aug 81 pp 1, 14

[Editorial by Nazli Ilicak: "Decision No 52"]

[Text] We believe that decision No 52 taken by the National Security Council on 3 June should be reviewed. This decision bans the following:

1. Making an oral or written statement about any political party, workers' organization, professional institutions or associations under investigation or under trial.
2. Discussing the practices of the martial law command.
3. Furthering political party skirmishes, and
4. Expressing an opinion about the past and future political structure of Turkey. (This ban refers only to members of the political parties.)

Making written or oral comment on a case being tried in court in a manner likely to influence the judicial authorities has always been prohibited. Therefore, we can say that the first section does not add any new restrictions but merely clarifies the situation.

On the other hand, although current conditions may require us to refrain from discussing the practices of the martial law command, it is difficult to determine the limits of the ban. For instance, our fellow journalist Gungor Yerdes was kept in custody for 44 days without appearing before a judge. Now, does criticizing this fact come within the scope of decision No 52 or doesn't it? In view of the fact that it is not against the law to criticize the provision which allows a person to be kept in custody for 90 days without trial--providing concrete examples for the criticism should not be considered as an offence either. As a matter of fact, as far as we are concerned, decisions regarding the period under detention are linked directly with the judicial function and not with the actions of the martial law command.

"The ban on the continuation of political party skirmishes" is based on some sound justification. It is necessary to wipe clean the slate of the past and put bandages on the wounds of Turkey, where the people want peace. And yet, in practice certain difficulties crop up. Let us cite a recent example: Faruk Sukan [deputy prime minister in the Ecevit government for some time] leveled some charges against [former Prime Minister] Bulent Ecevit. All papers reported Sukan's allegations quite extensively. Doesn't Ecevit wishes to reply to those charges? Surely he does...probably he has already expressed such a wish. But decision No 52 deprives Ecevit of the right to vindicate himself, whereas Sukan is left free to carry on with his slander and impudence. When the consultative assembly begins to function, we are going to witness similar situations.

It is not possible to prepare a constitution without screening the past and without criticizing the activities and functions, political parties and their members. Since talks will be carried out publicly, criticisms will be reflected in the press but those being criticized will be deprived of the right to reply. True, decision No 52 prohibits both praise and criticism of politicians, but in the long run it is bound to become lopsided. But then the limits of eulogies are not defined either. For example, at a gathering, [singer] Gonul Yazar looked [former Prime Minister] Demirel in the eyes and sang the song called "Who Knows, Will This Journey Have a Return?" Is this song within or outside the scope of decision No 52?

The most important point we criticize in decision No 52 is the fact that politicians are being kept out of political and legal discussions concerning Turkey. A text prepared, without the participation of the politicians or even by opposing them, will most certainly be a subject for discussion when Turkey enters a normal period. Another fact is that blackening the politician in this manner will adversely affect the coming generations and this will create great timidity and even disgust with politics. If decision No 52 is not repealed before a referendum is held, it will even cast a shadow on the legality of the new constitution. The inability of the political parties and their leaders, as those who will determine the direction of the electorate, to express an opinion, will continue to remain as a point weakening the legality of the constitution.

During this period, when efforts are being exerted to take the best and most correct action to rapidly correct mistakes, decision No 52 should be reviewed, revoked or at least mitigated.

PAHR, CARRINGTON QUESTIONED ON N-WEAPONS

AU191030 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1950 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Ursula Stenzel interview with Foreign Minister Pahr and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington in Salzburg 18 August--recorded; Carrington's answers in English with German translation superimposed]

[Text] [Question] Mr Minister Pahr, your position on the neutron bomb has been criticized by the opposition. Even if one does not agree with this criticism, many people are wondering whether Austria is maintaining the necessary distance between the superpowers. We have not heard shrill tones like those you used about the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union lately, although that country has also stepped up armament massively.

[Pahr] It would seem that you have not heard what I have said with regard to Afghanistan, with regard to Vietnam and Kampuchea. As far as the question of the neutron bomb is concerned, what I said was by no means an official Austrian statement on this subject. We have always maintained that we do not issue statements on such subjects. I expressed my own opinion in reply to a journalist's question, and I pointed out that my objections were primarily caused by the fact that I see here the danger of a new escalation of the arms race. For today the danger lies not so much in the quantative as in the qualitative aspects of of armament.

[Question][to Carrington] Your Excellency, President Reagan's neutron bomb decision has been criticized by many allies, but not by Great Britain--why?

[Carrington] Well, I think you've got to consider the problem of Western defense in two ways. The object of Western defense is to prevent an outbreak of war. If you allow a potential enemy to acquire military preponderance, you run a risk of getting a war by mistake, through unfortunate accident or through blackmail. That is why the West should never allow the Soviet Union to have too much of a preponderance.

[Question] How long can the West Europeans afford to criticize the Americans, at the same time cut their defense spendings, and nevertheless expect the Americans to defend them?

[Carrington] We have said that we are going to increase our defense expenditure by 3 percent in real terms because of the Soviet prepondance. We are doing that although it is extremely difficult for us. We are trying to cut government spending, to balance our budget, and we are in the middle of a worldwide recession. Great Britain is one of the few countries which cannot be criticized for not spending enough on defense. Certainly Britain is not one of them.

[Question] But how about the FRG? Does it not feel left alone?

[Carrington] It is not for me to criticize other countries as regards cutting their defense expenditures. But if you take a look at the defense expenditures of the FRG over the past 5 or 6 years, they have gone up in terms of real value. The FRG Army is probably the best equipped in the West. That is why I think it should be difficult to criticize the Germans in this respect.

[Question] Now there also seems to be a paradoxical situation within the East bloc, within the Moscow hierarchy. On one hand all endeavors to promote detente as far as concrete issues are concerned--for example in Afghanistan and in Kampuchea--have been rejected by the Soviet Union. On the other hand the Soviets seem anxious to negotiate with President Reagan about disarmament, although he is showing muscle. What conclusions can be drawn from that?

[Carrington] I believe you are never going to get any kind of detente unless a mutual arms limitation can be achieved and trust can be built up on both sides. And of course one must say that the Soviet attitude in Afghanistan has shaken that trust in a way which must make detente very much more difficult.

EGYPT'S AS-SADAT SENDS MESSAGE TO GOVERNMENT

LD192008 Hamburg DPA in German 1234 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Munich, 19 Aug (DPA)--Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, through his information minister, has sent a message to the Federal Government on his recent, initial meeting with U.S. President Reagan. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Munich today received Mansur Muhammad Hasan. Delegation circles afterwards said that as-Sadat attaches special importance to informing Federal Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher about his meeting because the Federal Government had made special contributions to the European efforts for a comprehensive Middle East settlement.

A Foreign Office spokesman said that as-Sadat's statements in the United States showed that a rapprochement between Egypt and the other Arab states might become possible. The spokesman refused to elaborate on the contents of as-Sadat's message.

SPD'S WISCHNEWSKI INTERVIEWED ON CZYREK VISIT

DW191437 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0535 GMT 19 Aug 81

["Excerpts" from reporters Hansen and Krabbenhoeft interview with Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Could you give us any details about the nature of the stopgap loan for Poland?

[Answer] We said that we would support the Federal Government if it were prepared to help Poland further, particularly with regard to stopgap credits. That is of most decisive significance, particularly now after the Polish talks with the Soviet Union and the Soviet Union's readiness to help Poland's development.

[Question] What were the main points of your talk with Polish Foreign Minister Czyrek?

[Answer] We talked about the nature of developments in Poland. We talked about relations between the People's Republic of Poland and the FRG. But naturally we also discussed the current international situation. These were the three most important issues.

[Question] I assume that you discussed the announcement by President Reagan to build the neutron weapon. Did Minister Czyrek comment on it?

[Answer] Yes, Minister Czyrek commented on it. He expressed a very critical judgment of this matter. No wonder, since the People's Republic of Poland is part of the Warsaw Pact, and Mr Czyrek's assessment was made accordingly. The Poles are particularly interested in beginning East-West or West-East talks, that is talks between the United States and the Soviet Union, as soon as possible. The Poles take a critical view of everything that could disturb such talks.

[Question] How does the Polish foreign minister assess the danger of a military intervention by the Soviet Union in Poland?

[Answer] Well, first there were the Crimea talks. I don't believe I heard any concern regarding the issue you have touched on. On the contrary, I believe that the Polish side is most content with the course of the Crimea talks.

[Question] Couldn't the mere plan of admission to the IMF be considered by Moscow as an attempt to secede from the Eastern economic community and thus as a cause for conflict?

[Answer] It goes without saying that this is a highly important problem for Poland. Poland has definitely made no decision yet on that issue. The Poles have every reason to consider the matter with great care. Nobody can predict what the decision will be. Poland is perfectly aware what it means for future economic cooperation. But this is an important political factor as well. Poland will not make the decision on this issue easy for itself.

[Question] You say other east bloc countries are members as well. [sentence as heard] Only it is Poland that has been going through a special situation for several months now.

[Answer] Yes. It is absolutely undeniable that this must also be viewed in this connection. Poland is interested in achieving long-term economic cooperation with partners in the West as well.

[Question] In conclusion, could you sum up the results of your talks with the Polish foreign minister?

[Answer] To begin with, these talks took place in an excellent atmosphere. Mr Czyrek is positive in analyzing Polish developments. We see the development of our relations in a favorable way. However, both sides are aware indeed that very difficult problems still need to be overcome. Objective and good cooperation between our two countries and between West Europe and Poland after the Crimea talks--and I stress this--is of immense importance for developments in Poland.

Comments on Neutron Issue

LD191116 Hamburg DPA in German 1044 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 19 Aug (DPA)--Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski has stressed the need to defend German interests vis-a-vis the United States. But Wischnewski emphatically rejected on Wednesday the accusation of the CDU/CSU to the effect that anti-Americanism is spreading in the SPD.

The SPD politician expressed concern, saying that the decision of the U.S. administration on building the neutron weapon "rather complicates" the opening of negotiations between Moscow and Washington on limiting medium-range weapons in Europe. Referring to the question of the deployment of the neutron weapon on German territory, Wischnewski stressed that this could only be done in "complete agreement" between the Federal Republic and the United States. He strongly insisted on German codecision and not only consultations on this issue.

The SPD deputy chairman said that his party is interested in good relations with the United States, and that it is making a strong effort in this direction. The SPD knows that the security of the Federal Republic depends on the United States.

ARREST WARRANT ISSUED FOR LEADER OF BANNED GROUP

LD192124 Hamburg DPA in German 1424 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Nueremberg/Erlangen, 19 Aug (DPA)--The Erlangen local court has issued arrest warrants for Karl-Heinz Hoffmann, the leader of the banned Wehrsportgruppe Hoffmann, and his girlfriend Franziska Birkmann in connection with the murders of Shlomo Levin and Frida Poeschke. Hoffmann and Birkmann are already in custody on other charges.

On 19 December 1980, Shlomo Levin, a 69-year old Jewish publisher and teacher, and 57-year old Frida Poeschke, the widow of a former mayor of Erlangen, were shot dead in Levin's home in Erlangen.

The federal prosecutor's office in Karlsruhe has taken over the investigations in connection with Hoffmann. It said that it was taking charge in view of the return of right extremist suspects from Lebanon.

Hoffmann is alleged to have recruited and trained them in Lebanon from May 1980 for their return to the Federal Republic. According to the Bavarian Ministry of Justice, Hoffmann is suspected of other offenses as well.

The paramilitary Hoffmann group, formed in 1974, at one time had reportedly up to 600 members. It was banned throughout the Federal Republic in January 1980. Investigations in connection with the bombing of the Munich October beer festival in 1980 showed that contacts between group members had not completely stopped even after the ban. The Bavarian Ministry of the Interior found that Hoffmann had shifted his activities mainly to the Near East. During a search in June of his base, Schloss Ermreuth, which belonged to Birkmann, a hidden explosive device, 1,500 grams of TNT and counterfeit U.S. dollars were found.

FURTHER REACTIONS TO NEUTRON BOMB DECISION

Union Chairman Criticism

LD161942 Hamburg DPA in German 1607 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Text] Osnabrueck, 16 Aug (DPA)--Metal Union Chairman Eugen Loderer has called for a worldwide ban of the neutron bomb under international law. In an interview with NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG (17 Aug issue) he said that the struggle for world peace and against frenzied arming had always been a trade union aim and that was why the unions supported to the best of their ability the Federal Government and the parties sustaining it in their pursuit of peace and detente.

Loderer sharply criticized U.S. President Reagan's decision to build the neutron bomb. Loderer thought that it would complicate successful U.S.-Soviet negotiations to reduce theater nuclear forces in Europe. Although the worsening of East-West relations had been caused by the USSR invasion of Afghanistan, the building of the neutron bomb threatened to become another link in a chain of events which tended to endanger Europe and the world.

Petitions Begin

LD182152 Hamburg DPA in German 1718 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] Bremen, 18 Aug (DPA)--Hans Koschnick (SPD), the mayor of Bremen and until just 2 years ago vice-chairman of the SPD, is one of the first signatories of a petition launched by the Bremen SPD against the building of the neutron weapon. The Scleswig-Holstein SPD has announced a similar petition.

The collection of signatures began today. The petitions say that the U.S. Government's decision to build the neutron weapon must meet with the "determined resistance of all democrats". Among the first signatories are the Bremen SPD deputies to the Bundestag, Claus Grobecker and Ernst Waltemathe.

Politicians' Statements

LD191728 Hamburg DPA in German 1513 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Munich, 19 Aug (DPA)--Vice chairman of the SPD Party Council, Juergen Boeddrich has accused the CDU/CSU of an uncritical approach to the "intention of U.S. President Reagan and his power-intoxicated" administration, which "seriously infringes and calls into question" the Federal Republic's autonomy. CDU Chief Helmut Kohl and CSU Deputy Graf Huyn even called for the Bundeswehr to be equipped with the neutron weapon, says a statement issued by Boeddrich in Munich today. The party council is the highest SPD body between party congresses.

Bonn: Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl said today that the question of consultations between the allies on the neutron weapon should be seen and handled in political terms and should not be viewed only in terms of international law. A case in point is the cooperation of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group, he told journalists in Bonn. He was replying to questions about whether the existing conventions on allied forces entitled the Americans to station nuclear weapons in the Federal Republic without consultation.

Bonn: FDP Deputy Helga Schuchardt expects a majority in her party to oppose the introduction of neutron weapons. In an interview published by the SPD press service today, she expressed the fear that this weapon would lower the nuclear threshold. She strongly attacked the view that criticism of U.S. arms measures implies a basically anti-American attitude.

Hamburg: In an interview to be published in tomorrow's edition of BILD ZEITUNG, CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl said the neutron weapon is defensive. "That is why the European NATO partners asked the Americans in the spring of 1975 to produce this weapon." "Former President Jimmy Carter deferred his decision as a guesture of good will toward the Soviet Union. It is clear to the CDU/CSU, Kohl said, that peace in Europe could not be preserved without close partnership with the United States and the Western alliance. The Kohl interview was prereleased to DPA.

LAMBSDORFF HOLDS TALKS WITH SRI LANKAN OFFICIAL

LD191738 Hamburg DPA in German 1553 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Colombo, 19 Aug (DPA)--The Federal minister of economics, Count Otto Lambsdorff, who arrived in Colombo yesterday, today conferred with the Sri Lankan minister of trade and shipping, Lalith Athulathmudali, on closer economic cooperation between both countries. The two ministers also discussed problems relating to the export of textiles from Sri Lanka to the Federal Republic and the European Community as well as shipping questions; the North-South dialogue and the financing of projects by the Federal Republic.

With the acting foreign affairs minister, Tyronne Fernando, Lambsdorff discussed the problem of the influx of people from Sri Lanka seeking asylum in West Berlin. Fernardo assured the German minister that returning refugees would not be harrassed or prosecuted. According to a Colombo Foreign Ministry spokesman, Lambsdorff expressed his satisfaction that the flow of refugees had ceased.

On Thursday, Lambsdorff will meet President Junius Jayawardene and Prime Minister R. Premadasa.

BRIEFS

HEROIN CONFISCATION--Berlin, 17 Aug (DAP)--Officials of the police customs joint narcotics investigation unit confiscated 2 kg of heroin and detained two Germans and three Turkish dealers in another stike against the Berlin narcotics scene. Warrants were issued for their arrest. The police today put the wholesale value of the herion at DM240,000. The officials last Thursday found 1.2 kg of heroin in the home of one of the Turks and another 600 grams in his car. The other Turk and the two Germans each had 50 grams on them. The four men confessed to having stolen the heroin from the third Turk who was also detained stated the police. Last week, the officials made the biggest heroin find to date in Berlin of 4.1 kg. This year the city's police so far confiscated a total of 12 kg of heroin. The figure for 1980 was 17 kg. [Text] [Hamburg DPA in German 1444 GMT 17 Aug 81 LD]

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS ON IRANIAN BOAT HIJACKING

Ministers Council Decisions

LD191158 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The Iranian patrol boat issue has been discussed in the Council of Ministers, thus showing the importance of this affair since the odyssey arrived in French waters.

A short time ago, following the Council of Ministers meeting, Pierre Beregovoy, secretary general of the Elysee, announced the measures decided upon by the government.

[Begin Beregovoy recording] Instructions have been given concerning the following point: There will be neither a boarding by force nor refuelling. It is necessary to avoid being confronted with a situation which would end with a kind of bargaining and to avoid a situation which would have resulted in--with the patrol boat in the port of Marseille--allowing those controlling it to possibly, I say possibly, but we had to think of this, indulge in blackmail, or a kind of blackmail.

With regard to what will happen--I have just told you what the position is at the moment--the members of the commando group who are going to stay in France will be treated in conformity with our laws. This means that they will neither be extradicted nor expelled. With regard to the crew, the contacts we have made with the charge d'affaires show that we intend to facilitate the return to Iran of those who wish this. [end recording]

Communique on Gunboat

NC191424 Paris AFP in English 1425 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Aug (AFP)--The hijacked Iranian gunboat Tabarzin has passed under French Navy control, an Elysee Palace communique said here today. All people aboard the gunboat have been taken ashore, it said.

"When all necessary controls have been carried out, the gunboat will be handed back to Iranian authorities," the communique added. Members of the commando who seized the gunboat will have their security guaranteed and will be subject to French law, the communique said.

Iranian nationals wishing to return to Iran have been put in contact with the Iranian charge d'affaires, the communique added.

Commando Group 'Installed'

NC200814 Paris AFP in English 0800 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Versailles, near Paris, 20 Aug (AFP)--The 22-member commando which seized an Iranian gunboat off Spain last Thursday, and surrendered to French authorities yesterday, has been "installed" in a secret property east of Paris, reliable sources said here today.

The commando was flown last night with four members of the crew of the French-built gunboat, the Tabarzin, from Hyeres in southern France to Paris' Le Bourget Airport.

The commando surrendered to French naval authorities yesterday morning after being taken in tow by a French naval tug near Marseilles and anchoring near the French naval base of Toulon.

The property where the members were now installed was in the Val de Marne region east of Paris, the sources here said. The property was not that of ex-Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, who had taken refuge in France and is now living in the same area, the sources added.

Iranian Officials Arrive

NC201002 Paris AFP in English 0952 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Toulon, southern France, 20 Aug (AFP)--The Iranian gunboat Tabarzin, anchored off the French naval base here after being surrendered by its hijackers yesterday, will leave for Iran "as soon as possible", reliable sources said today. French Navy technicians who checked the gunboat said some repairs were necessary before the departure for Iran, the sources added.

The French-built gunboat was hijacked off the Spanish coast last Thursday, while being delivered to Iran with two other similar craft.

Navy officials refused to comment on the arrival here yesterday of two high-ranking Iranian officials. The Iranians were not in uniform but arrived in a French military vehicle. Reliable sources here also said a woman belonged to the commando unit which seized the gunboat.

MITTERRAND, IRAQ'S 'AZIZ CONFER ON NUCLEAR PLANT

NC192110 Paris AFP in English 2102 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Aug (AFP)--France and Iraq will shortly start talks on guarantees concerning French help in rebuilding the Iraqi nuclear power centre at Tammuz, destroyed in an Israeli raid on June 7, informed sources said here today. The engagement came in talks between visiting Iraqi Vice-Premier Tariq 'Aziz and French President Francois Mitterrand following Baghdad's request that France rebuild the power plant.

France is insisting that the rebuilt power station be for purely peaceful uses. Israel maintained that Iraq was using the Tammuz plant to construct an atom bomb. The subject was at the center of an hour-long talk the deputy premier had with President Mitterrand today, the sources indicated. An official version about what was discussed only referred to "cultural, economic and technical questions" of interest to both countries.

The line taken by the French president was, according to the same sources, that there was no reason for France to refuse material and technical assistance to Iraq that it afforded other countries. Iraq is an important French trading partner, both as a buyer of technology and a supplier of oil. Guarantees sought on the non-military use of the rebuilt Tammuz plant will serve to reassure the Israelis, the sources suggested.

After the talks, Mr 'Aziz expressed his satisfaction "with the deep comprehension" shown by Mr Mitterrand. Tomorrow, Mr 'Aziz is scheduled to meet French Premier Pierre Mauroy, Foreign Realtions Minister Claude Cheysson, Defense Minister Charles Hernu and Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert.

Mr 'Aziz handed Mr Mitterrand a personal message from Iraqi President Saddam Husayn on relations between the two countries. The precise contents were not disclosed.

Last month the Iraqi president said that he would consider France's attitude on rebuilding Tammuz the touchstone for future relations between the two countries. It was France that built the original Tammuz plant. The question raised here was would the Iraqis be ready to furnish new guarantees against a military use of the center. The fact that conversations on this question were agreed on today by Mr 'Aziz appeared to point to at least some flexibility on this on the part of both.

LE FIGARO ON N-BOMB IMPLICATIONS FOR EUROPE

PM193919 Paris LE FIGARO in French 17 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de La Gorce commentary: "The Neutron Bomb: Political and Strategic Realities"]

[Text] The neutron bomb now tends to arouse controversies which strangely cloud any serious discussion and any objective consideration of it. Some people regard it as the incarnation of absolute evil, its exceptional immorality stemming from the fact that it is reputed to kill much more and destroy much less; but the truth is that any weapon is designed to reduce an adversary's resistance and it is ludicrous to establish a scale of horror for weapons. Other people think that the "neutron bomb" is some kind of miracle in that it kills but without causing too much damage and that there will thus be less for which to pay reparations later....In his Atlanticist enthusiasm one "scientific" commentator on our television even went so far as to say that it would only kill combatants--enemy combatants of course.' Would it be possible to point out to him that the radioactivity released by the "neutron bomb" over a 1-km radius does not distinguish between the people it kills according to whether they are wearing battledress or a suit?

So, let's try to discuss the matter as carefully as possible, without giving way to propaganda suggestions or being fashioned by them. The "neutron bomb" comprises a fission initiator yielding several tenths of a kiloton, triggering a mini fusion bomb of 1 to 2 kilotons--some people say more. It would produce blast and heat effects 10 times lower than those produced by thermonuclear weapons of the same power, but not zero effects, and would produce more radioactivity. According to its promotors, the aim would be to use it essentially against an offensive launched by large numbers of tanks.

Let's repeat that this is the least probably scenario since it is very unlikely that a potential adversary would launch a conflict which is, literally, vital for him and for the world with such dubious means.

It is even less likely, since the Soviet Union has, with SS-20 missiles, a weapon which, in a preemptive strike of one or two salvos, could destroy the bulk of NATO's infrastructures and military forces including, possibly, stocks of "neutron bombs" and the guns which fire them.

However, let's take the hypothesis of a possible antitank action by the "neutron bomb." In practice, the bomb would be fired at a range of 15 to 20 km. It should explode at a given altitude (at ground level the effects of the radioactivity would become formidable) and hit a mobile target (a formation of moving tanks) situated within a radius of around 1,000 meters from the point of explosion. First it should be noted that if these tanks are in a village, a suburban district or, more especially, in the center of a city, there will probably be a large number of civilian victims. But for our present purposes the main problem is that of the weapon's efficacy.

Is it possible to protect yourself from the "neutron bomb"? For protection against gamma rays it is a question of thickness and density, but against neutrons concrete would be most effective. It is obviously difficult to protect tanks against them without excessively increasing their weight and size. Thus, work has been directed at a protective capsule inside the tank, the crew being reduced to three--as for the Soviet T-72 tank--and carrying out its work by remote control, television and so forth--which presupposes a major increase in the cost of materials. Nonetheless, this is a plausible prospect which leads to consideration of the "neutron bomb" being more effectively used against light mechanized forces (troop transport, for instance).

That leaves the problem posed by the mobility of the target. If you consider that preparation for firing takes 5 minutes--that is a very optimistic estimate and presupposes that aerial observers are available--then armored vehicles traveling at 15 km per hour cover 1,250 meters or 1,660 meters at 20 km per hour in that time. This suggests that there will be more neutralizing fire than precision firing, that would be even more likely to be the case against light mechanized forces.

All this means that, in the hypothesis of vast armored offensives involving thousands of tanks--the Soviets have 40,000 tanks in Eastern Europe--massive numbers of "neutron bombs" would, in fact, have to be fired, using hundreds if not thousands of them. Aside from the effects of the resulting radioactivity on vast expanses of land and on their populations, that would pose a major political and strategic problem. This gigantic release of nuclear fire would be the decision of the field command, even at a relatively low level. In any case the political authority--in this case the U.S. President--should take responsibility for it and it is known that he has so far never delegated the decision on the use of any type of nuclear weapon.

This last remark leads us to the root of the matter. What is at stake is the possibility of waging a conventional war, in other words with reasonable possibilities of victory after winning battles, but by resorting to nuclear weapons. All the efforts of the general staffs and the arms experts they inspire or from whom they draw inspiration are usually aimed at that end. Since the United States is the only Western country to have the industrial and technological capability to adopt this course, it is natural that its strategy reflects that.

In its view, the problem is still the same; given that American and Russia can destroy each other several times over, and hence neutralize each other, is it possible for them to wage wars--possibly between them--at a lower level by using nuclear weapons but without going as far as mutual suicide? The strategy of the "graduated response" or "flexible" response, conceived in the days of President Kennedy and McNamara, was an initial positive reply to that question. Under the Nixon and Ford administrations the Schlesinger doctine of "adapted response" went in the same direction, by introducing the possibility of using nuclear forces against other nuclear forces at different levels of a possible conflict. But whatever the paths explored and their doctrinal trappings, which are often confused and disputable, the aim is still to make a "nuclear war" "playable," in other words rational, plausible and winnable. The "neutron bomb" is one of the most significant methods of doing that. That is the root of the matter.

And this is the fundamental reasons for the split which regularly and inevitably appears between Americans and Europeans on this essential theme. However it is presented, the point is to make the NATO countries accept what they are unwilling to face but what is nonetheless indisputable; since the United States cannot defend them with its strategic nuclear weapons--which would destroy the Soviet Union--on pain of being destroyed itself, it can only cover them with nuclear weapons by adopting the prospect of a nuclear war which would turn Europe into a nuclear battlefield.

It is quite clear that America's European partners cannot accept this prospect and that, in any case, the governments cannot make their peoples accept it. There is no point deploring their "pacificism" or storming against what is strangely termed their "neutralism," as is now the fashion, because it is Western Europe's political and strategic situation which locks it in this conflict and sparks off the reactions we are seeing. As is known, France has dissociated itself from this by choosing a strategy of national nuclear deterrence, and events show just how vital it is to adhere to this. But the other European countries must still face the consequences of the strategic options with which they are now confronted.

LIBYAN SPOKESMAN ON CLASH WITH U.S. PLANES

AU200840 Rome ANSA in English 0825 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 20 Aug (ANSA)--A Libyan military spokesman telephoned a statement to ANSA last night with regard to the Wednesday clash between U.S. and Libyan planes over the Mediterranea.

The spokesman said that as of Tuesday morning U.S. military planes had violated Libyan air space and territorial waters in the Gulf of Sidra as part of "the American decision to systematically proceed with its aggression against the people of the Libyan Jamahiriyah."

He claimed that two Libyan planes flying reconnaissance missions in Libyan air space and over Libyan territorial waters were attacked Wednesday at 7:12 local time by 8 U.S. fighter planes.

"Libya and the people of Jamahiriyah are ready to defend our territorial integrity and the values of our revolution," the caller continued.

The spokesman also indicated that for the past two days the U.S. press had openly provoked Jamahiriyah by flouting the fact the American Sixth Fleet was in the Mediterranean "to probe the reactions of the people of Libyan Jamahiriyah."

Circles at the Italian premier's office have stressed here that any episode that disturbs the peace in the Mediterranean is cause for deep concern on the part of the Italian Government.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger yesterday said that U.S. Navy planes shot down two Libyan jet fighters which attacked them in international airspace over the Mediterranean that morning. He said the attack was entirely unprovoked and took place more than 60 miles from land.

Libya claims territorial boundaries up to 200 miles from its coast, but the U.S. has rejected the claim and has conducted exercises in the area in recent years, in part to assert its right to do so.

However, the defense secretary denied that a U.S. naval exercise which led to Wednesday's incident had been intended by the Reagan administration as a challenge to Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

IRAN TO REQUEST SPAIN'S MEDIATION ON HIJACKED BOAT

LD191928 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Iran will ask Spain to mediate with France in the case of the patrol boat Tabarzin which was hijacked on 13 August near Algeciras in Cadiz province, according to a statement today by the Tehran government's special envoy to Madrid, (Abbas Sorush). (Sorush) himself added at a press conference that he would take charge of formulating a request to this effect via a meeting with the Spanish secretary of state for foreign affairs, Carlos Robles Piquer.

He also said that the chief of the commandos which hijacked the Iranian patrol boat is one of the CIA agents who are fighting to overthrow the government of Imam Khomeyni. He added that this can be shown with documents which the Islamic students took from the U.S. Embassy in Iran.

PCE CRITICIZES ACCORD ON AUTONOMY NEGOTIATIONS

PM191011 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 7-13 Aug 81 p 4

[4 August PCE Statement]

[Text] The autonomy negotiations are culminating in agreement between the government and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] on the exclusion of the PCE and the Popular Alliance and the absence of the Basque and Catalonian nationalists; and the PCE states:

1--The exclusion of the PCE on the initiative of the government and the PSOE was accounted for by nonacceptance of our proposal for separating the draft organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process from the rest of the political and economic agreements.

2--This stance on the part of the PCE is beaed on well-founded objections concerning the constitutionality of the law on the harmonization of the autonomy process and on its harmonizing nature which was not envisaged in the Enterria report and is contrary to our viewpoint, since it alters the statutes which have already been approved. We also believe that the discussion of a bill of this nature requires, in order to be effective, the participation of the majority forces of Catalonia and the Basque country and strict respect for the legislative function which belongs to the Spanish Cortes.

3--With respect to the issues concerning the compositon of provincial councils and particular aspects of the autonomy of the Canary Islands, as well as everything concerning the quantification of the economic issues, and, in particular, of the interterritorial compensation fund, the PCE finally had no opportunity to express its opinion on the proposals agreed separately by the government and the PSOE.

4--The PCE maintains its viewspoints, which coincide with those agreed and propounded well in advance by our party concerning the autonomy map of 17 communities, the timetables of approval of the statutes by January 1983 and the planning of transferences [of powers from the state of the autonomous communities], as well as concerning the removal of the provincial councils in the single province communities.

5--Last, we express our unfavorable opinion on the way the government and the PSOE have approached, conducted and completed these negotiations. If they had been conducted from the outset on an equal basis among all the forces concerned--including Basque and Catalonian nationalists--the process would not have proved lengthier and would have made it possible to achieve results which would be sounder politically and legally more respectful of the constitution and the statutes.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE REPORT TO 10TH PCE CONGRESS

PM140826 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 28 Jul 81 pp 13-40

[Continuation of the "PCE Central Committee report to 10th PCE Congress" to be delivered by PCE Central Committee Secretary General Santiago Carrillo on 28 July 1981]

[Excerpt] Who is behind these dogmatic groups? I no not want to issue any gratuitous accusations, but in any case they are in one way or another motivated by a policy different from the one that we have independently adopted; they are motivated by the model of a party that does not tolerate factions or dissent and that eliminates them drastically a model of socialism that will not do fo us. Therefore, it is surprising, to say the least, to see some of them agreeing with others who ideologically seem at the opposite pole, in an attempt to establish within the PCE the factions, tendencies or currents rejected by their inspirational models. We believe that this agreement is designed to achieve not more democracy but the weakening of the PCE, which they are trying to destroy, since they have been unable to win it over.

But what must be clear is that the process pursued by the dogmatic currents could be pursued by any other group. This is the dynamic of platforms, currents and tendencies; this is what it leads to sooner or later, and instead of facilitating free collective discussion by the entire party--the enriching debate--what it does is crystallize group stances which impoverish, split and break up the party.

Extending party democracy means reinvigorating its associations, linking them with the masse and their movements, making these associations bring under control the economic and political problems that exist around them and that affect men, women and young people, and turning them into centers or polular culture in all fields.

Extending party democracy means that leadership bodies at all levels must be agile, responsible and sensitive to the heartbeat of the workers and the people. It also means having a free debate that will ideologically and politically form and homogenize the party, with the best people being elected to the leadership bodies by secret ballot and members having the freedom to criticize leaders at all levels without fear of reprisals.

Extending party democracy means that during periods of debate there are no restrictions on anyone in the free expression of opinions, but that when the time for action comes there must be unity and that discipline is the same for everyone.

In the party we have reached a situation in some cases in which unity of action and discipline have been violated, even in the leadership bodies. Unless this congress establishes order in this and other fields, the Communist Party, which has the opportunity of increasing its strength, including its electoral strength, despite the by no means easy objective conditions under which we are developing, would embark on a process of crisis and of suicidal self-destruction.

What is in no way connected with democracy is tolerance toward those who attack the party's strategic outlook, the absence of steadfastness toward those who try to lead it down different paths, and leniency toward those who, though within its ranks and even its leadership bodies, at the same time devote themselves to publicly denigrating the party.

Party Regeneration

This congress must constitute a further step toward the regeneration of the party and of its leadership bodies. It is a fact of life that on the whole the party has taken into account. Regeneration means adapting the party to the growing complexities of political action on two planes--as a revolutionary party of struggle and as a party of government. As a party that must remain linked with the masses, defending their day-to-day interests and trying to formulate solutions to state problems, with a sense of responsibility for the country's future, though still in a minority, because it aspires one day either to form the majority or to be a member of it. This is why the party needs the involvement of the factory worker, of the peasant who works the land and of the intellectual capable of helping it resolve the state's most difficult problems.

Regeneration also means promoting young cadres, new leaders, to replace those no longer able to continue leading because they have lost their energies through old age or because, though still young, they have not proved equal to their tasks. It means to redistribute responsibilities, moving people from one position to another according to their abilities, not allowing themselves to be led by inertia and routine, by stagnation; and to do so while maintaining the necessary political balance, without unnecessary ruptures and without breaking continuity.

The regeneration task is always difficult. There are communist parties, including some of the most authoritative ones, which provide us with the example whereby leaders always die in office. I do not consider this a good example. There are other experiences, other methods, based on rotation, but where this is used, however much rotation there is, the people are always the same in one post or another, with their own specific personal influence, whatever their role.

We believe that at this congress there must be a thorough regeneration of the Central Committee, even more thorough in the Executive Committee and more thorough still in the Secretariat, which must be a very active and dynamic body, in view of the functions entrusted to it. One or more deputy secretaries-general will also have to be appointed if the provisions of the party rules are approved.

Much attention will have to be devoted to the leadership's bodies' collective work, to make the leadership team broad, representative and prestigious and to ensure that relations of loyalty and shared responsibility exist within it.

When new leaders are promoted there are always risks of either not chosing the most capable people or of not chosing the most reliable ones. Capability and reliability--or, rather, steadfastness--must be the decisive qualities. It is a bad example when a party leader leaves the party, and we must try to ensure that selection spares us the slightest surprises of this kind.

Having said that, I entirely refuse to accept that regeneration means the indiscriminate elimination of what, to use a very overworked word, we could call the party's "old guard." The experience of other parties shows, as an observer as wise as the Pole Adam Schaff recently stressed, that the party's bureaucratization begins with the elimination of the old guard. In saying this, I am sure of defending the party's interests, its future and also its distinguishing features.

It is no disgrace for a party when alongside cadres from later generations there are still in its ranks and its leadership men who took part in the armed struggle against fascism.

It seems incredible to have to say this in the PCE, but unfortunately it is inevitable when there are people within our own ranks who reproach us for having fought the war, forgetting that if the PCF is the party of the policy of national reconciliation and Eurocommunism, it owes this to a large extent to the open and innovative spirit demonstrated by this "old guard."

Similarly, it is no handicap to have charismatic leaders. At present, it seems fashionable to deny the leaders' role, in the name of party "democracy." Of course, the party was wasting its time when for so many years it strove to promote natural leaders within the workers movement and the mass movements...!

Anti-elitist demagogery forgets one essential point; namely, that one of the links between any party or organization and the masses are the leaders, that all mass strength is generated by leaders and at the same time generates leaders, and that without revolutionary or other movements there are no leaders, while without leaders these same movements will not progress.

Marxism has always acknowledged the role of the individual in history, and when I say individuals, I am not talking only about a few great men, but about the multitude of more modest leaders who headed the mass struggle to change the world at various levels.

But it is unnecessary to turn to the authoritative testimonies of Marxist theoreticians; it is enough to see how, in our country, parties with a history which lost their traditional leaders and parties with no history have hastened to manufacture leaders using marketing methods, because it is their organizations, but also their leaders, that create the contact between the party and the masses, between the ideas and the people.

Those who speak out against the leaders generally aspire to be leaders themselves. But it is not the post that confers the role of leaders; it is the masses themselves that grant it under specific historical conditions.

Let us not destroy the natural leaders that we have at various levels! Let us encourage the emergence of new leaders, demanding that they do not become tyrants and that they implement in a disciplined manner the policy jointly decided by the party!

In this connection, the new Central Committee will have to find the necessary resources for organizing training work within the party, which has been neglected. We must train hundreds and thousands of new cadres, creating a team of teachers, training centers, courses and abbreviated courses at all levels.

Eurocommunist Policy in the Coming Period

The 10th congress must confirm the PCE's Eurocommunist strategy. A major contribution to this will have been made by the decisions of the recent conference of the PSUC and of its Central Committee. Some comrades reject Eurocommunism because they have fallen into the trap laid by those who, with unquestionable malice, present a caricature of it as an approach inspired by imperialism and social democracy. Others claim to be Eurocommunists but are not, and strengthen the dogmatists and splittists by the stances that they hold.

Being a Eurocommunist now simply means being a communist in the late 20th century, in an industrialized Europe in which political democracy has acquired a great development and where the workers movement wields powerful sociopolitical influence. Being a Eurocommunist means being a communist in an era when revolution can no longer be the solution to a world war, partly because of the development of mass-destruction weapons. It means being a communist when the socialist transformation of society implies not a confrontation between the blocs but their elimination; it means being a communist when there exist a large number of countries that have smashed [as published] the world imperialist system and at the same time and partly for this very reason there is no longer any world revolutionary center.

Being a Eurocommunist means being aware that as a result of the effects of the Great October Socialist Revolution, the development of the production forces and the crisis in the economic structures and cultural superstructures of imperialism, conditions are being created in the world today to attract very broad forces to the cause of socialism--even forces motivated by philosophical ideas that differ from ours and which feel the need for progressive and peaceful solutions similar to the ones that we communists and real socialists advocate.

Being a Eurocommunist means recognizing that the existing model of socialism requires democratic changes, not so as to backtrack to capitalism, but to attain a full implementation in our ideal, and that we will contribute to this through an independent policy that will enable us to advance in what is now the capitalist world.

Being a Eurocommunist means regarding democratic freedoms not as a formal stage but as something lasting that must be extended and developed by bringing democracy also to the economic area, to the area of the ownership of the basic means of production and of change.

Being a Eurocommunist means acting to facilitate communist, socialist unity, the unity of the left and of the progressive forces in Spain, Europe and the world. Being a Eurocommunist also means understanding the historical need for a revolutionary Marxist Communist Party, that is, among the forces aiming at socialism, the ideological and political vanguard, a guarantee against the social democratic backtracking and hesitations of others.

It means having a party spirit or, if you prefer, party "patriotism," regarding it not only as a temporary necessity but as a long-term instrument that must serve the cause of liberation of the working class and working people and the building of a new and socialist society.

We do not deny the role of other parties and groups of socialist and progressive leanings; what we are saying is that their role is not interchangeable with the PCE's that the PCE is a historical necessity, a necessity that would only cease to exist if the PCE were unable to update its strategy without consequently losing its distinguishing features.

Our Distinguishing Features

What are our basic identifying features?

Looking back at history, the break away from a social democracy that fell into the mire of cooperation with the various bourgeoisies during World War I, thus violating international working calss solidarity and abandoning all plans for the transformation of society. Our distinguishing features also stem from the unconditional defense of the Great October Socialist Revolution in Russia against those who opposed it in one way or another;

From our support for all national and social liberation movements against imperialism;

From our conception of the party not exclusively as a government party that is active only under democratic conditions and dozes when they disappear, but as capable of struggling for democracy and socialism with every available means and under all conditions, with a political consistency and discipline based on the principle of democratic centralism;

From our adherence to the theories of creative revolutionary Marxism;

And at present from our resolute determination to defend peace and to avert a Third and nuclear world war, as the inalienable precondition for the socialist transformation of the world.

Our distinguishing features are completed now by the corrections that we do not hesitate to make. At the Rome Central Committee plenum we said:

"Have we Communists become more democratic than we used to be? This question might seem simplistic, and doubtless it is. But simple people ask simple questions and we must not refuse to answer them. It is true that the PCE has always struggled for democracy. But it is also true that 40 years of fascist dictatorship have prompted us to form a much loftier assessment of democratic freedoms even that at previous times. Moreover, the negative experience for socialism constituted by the violation of democracy in certain countries and particularly the Stalinist phenomenon have taught us that the absence of democracy is fatal to the thriving of socialism.

"Thus the simple answer to this simple question is that we communists have indeed become more democratic and now regard democracy as fundamental."

We believe that this is an aspect that we must emphasize, because there have been parties within the communist movement that have gained power and transformed the ownership system but have failed to develop democracy and have experienced degenerative processes.

Elsewhere, social democracy has acceded to government and has respected democratic freedoms, but has not transformed the social system.

We advocate a different path, which we consider possible in the industrialized countries--a path that will transform society while preserving and extending democracy.

To achieve this we believe it is necessary at this time to seek scope for unity with the socialists within these parameters. We also believe that by resolutely pursuing this path it is also possible that the socialists will move in the same direction. Confidence in this path, which is not without difficulties, stems from the objective and increasingly apparent need for socialist solutions to the problems now facing mankind.

Under Spain's conditions, knowing that it is not a plan that will be carried out overnight, that it will be difficult to implement and that there will be varying mediations in it, we are in favor as we have said before, of moving toward a new political group in which all the components of this country's socialist movement--political parties, trade unions and social movements--would participate, while maintaining their own personalities and organizations.

Crisis, Autonomies, Terrorism and Threat of Coup d'etat

To end this report, we would like to sum up some of the guidelines for our policy in the period ahead.

First, our stance on the crisis and its effects.

It is very easy to say: It is a crisis of capitalism. Let them resolve it!

Those who say that are forgetting that the working class and working masses live not outside this society but within it and that it is they who are suffering the most direct consequences of this situation. By acting as an isolated group, we Communists could deliberately place ourselves outside the real situation, awaiting capitalism's judgment day, offering to turn the earth into paradise on that day.

But meanwhile, what will happen to the unemployed, the women and young people who can find no place in production?

If we consider this problem we must also consider others. What will happen to the small and medium enterprises, that are inexorably disappearing? What will happen to the industries that must be converted unless we want them to succumb under world competition?

What will happen to the unjust agricultural ownership structures, which so pressingly demand reform? What will happen to the pensioners, disabled and other broad sectors who are also suffering as a result of the crisis?

We of the party and the trade unions must tackle these problems of the crisis as topical problems and our problems. We must put forward national solutions--I mean national in the social sense--and we must put forward national solutions not because we are abandoning the class concept but out of loyalty to it, because we are the ascendant class and this ascendant class can only triumph when it manages to embody the interests of the nation.

To come to more specific formulas, the Spanish left will not achieve hegemony until it shows itself capable of resolving the national problems which the center-left is unable to resolve.

We must show the people by means of a national policy that big capital and its political spokesman must be replaced in power by the representatives of the working and cultural forces so that in Spain there is work for everyone, prosperity, more equality, justice and freedom.

Consistent with this idea, we Communists support the national employment agreement signed by the confederation of [line apparently dropped] the workers commissions and the general union of workers. The national employment agreement does not resolve all the problems of the crisis, or anything like it, but it is an act of solidarity between those who are at work and those who are unemployed. If it is implemented properly, moreover, it will have favorable secondary effects on the economy. We must struggle to ensure its implementation and the party must devote all its forces to this end, alongside the workers.

But what if the government fails to implement it, under pressure from the employers? We must prevent this from happening. But if it does happen, we workers must not respond by kicking ourselves for having signed it, but by condemning the conduct of those who fail to honor something necessary to the political and social stability of Spanish democracy, thus turning it not into a failure on our part but an experience that will help to extend the people's awareness of the need for the working class to gain positions of power; so that the PCE and the left will be supported by the majority of the country and that there will be a punitive vote for those who failed to honor it.

Of course, the national employment agreement is not enough; it is merely a partial measure and there must be a plan to rebuild and modernize the economy and to reform agriculture, whose guidelines must be laid down at this congress, as the conclusion of the debate on the theses. Such a plan must not be solely technocratic; it must be social at the same time and must not lose sight of medium-term objectives, such as those set by the leftwing government in France; retirement at 60 and a 35-hour working week, which though proposed by the left, are necessitated basically by the development of the production forces which, without measures of this kind and irrespective of whether or not there is a crisis, would expel more and more millions of workers from production, would create a mass lumpen proletariat of young people and would destroy any blueprint for society.

Along this path, and as conditions evolve, we must present proposals for the centers of economic power held by the oligarchy to pass to social ownership.

We must tackle all these economic problems from within society, not from outside, because we would be in limbo outside it. I say inside, because it is only from there that society can be transformed.

At present a Eurocommunist policy is also prompting us to participate in the political agreement on the autonomies.

If we reach an agreement it will be based on observance of the constitution and of the approved statutes, the rationalization of the autonomy process and a policy of solidarity aimed at surmounting the terrible regional imbalances that now exist and at safeguarding democracy.

Our strategy is diametrically opposed to terrorism. We are in principle opposed to this method, which has nothing to do with Marxism or Leninism. Terrorism could have some justification in the presence of tyranny, but even then not in the name of Marxist and Leninist ideology. We must condemn the attempt to disguise terrorism with a proletarian ideology as a usurpation that plays into the hands of the right. ETA and Grapo have nothing to do with Marx or Lenin or with the Third World peoples' anti-imerpialist armed struggle.

Be that as it may, there is no excuse for terrorism in a democratic system in which there is freedom for all parties, including ones that declare themselves separatist.

The parties and social forces must conduct political action against it but there must also be police action. For it to be efficient it must be directed by officers loyal to the constitution and supported by the people.

This raises the issue of the democratization of the state apparatus. It is intolerable for the far right to remain untouchable even when the government does overcome its timidity and take measures, because there are certain sectors that act with scandalous complacency.

The political and social forces must tackle the socioeconomic problems and the problems of the autonomies. But we demand the same involvement in examining the responsible and pondered but steadfast measures needed to avert the possibility of a coup d'etat.

Until the measures are adopted, Spain and the constitutional and parliamentary monarchy will not be secure. Whatever we may do will amount to building on sand. And the constitutional forces must undertake to ensure, supported partly by a popular mobilization, that the changes of policy made in this country are the ones decided on by the people via universal suffrage. This must always be the rule for everything.

The constitution envisages general elections in 1983. We believe that it would be counterproductive to hold them any sooner. If the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] is unable to govern until then, it must make its mind up once and for all to form a coalition government with broad parliamentary support. Spain cannot bind its fate to the UCD's internal problems and the UCD has no right to perpetuate a weak government with the sole aim of ensuring its monopoly in government posts.

A government which is strong by virtue of its parliamentary and social support is essential to surmount the threats hanging over democracy.

We will continue to work toward improving and developing cooperating with the socialist comrades and would support their presence in the government if that government's program is consistent with ours. Otherwise, we would adopt a stance of constructive opposition.

At the 10th congress, the PCE finds itself at a crossroads, at which decisions will be made concerning its continued existence; its chances of transforming itself in the medium term into a party with considerable electoral strength capable of wielding increasing influence within the left or within the sphere of national politics or of declining either into a dogmatic sector or into an exodus toward another party. Two factors could cause such a decline; the inclination to align with one of the major blocs through the attraction of power and of the abstract formulation of what we might call the "Mitterrand syndrome," the idea that the communist party is a historically obsolete instrument.

In Spain's historical situation, such an event would have very dangerous connotations for democracy. If one adds to the crisis of the UCD and the other political groups the crisis of the PCE and if the political parties on which the democratic system is now based present the people--who largely interpret such phenomena as petty struggles for no less petty portions of power--with the spectacle of their inconsistency, we will be providing ideal scope for the potential instigators of a coup d'etat.

And unless we abandon all sense of responsibility, we must not ignore the fact that in the near future this threat of a coup will be the main obstacle to be overcome to guarantee democratic freedoms.

I am convinced that the PCE is still a historical necessity. But we need a PCE that will democratize and regenerate itself continuously, without losing its distinguishing features; capable of acting as a genuine revolutionary Marxist vanguard of the creative masses and critical within the historical bloc that we must forge, and of its political, social and economic forms--a party in which there is broad circulation of ideas, but a homogeneous policy, not a conglomeration of sub-parties competing for the votes of a passive tank and file; leadership teams within which various comrades can express themselves differently, but within the framework of mutual cooperation and loyalty. A party whose aim is to win over the people, which is not the same as a party shaken by the pressures of society's ruling strata or by the powers of this world.

I am sure that we will emerge united, strengthened and regenerated from this 10th congress. This is the responsibility of those of us in this room authorized to speak and to vote.

ARMED FORCES MANPOWER CUTS EXPECTED THROUGH 1985

PM190949 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The new defense settlement will reduce the present strength of the standing forces in the Army, Air Force and Navy by a total of 995 men from 1 January 1982 to 1 January 1985.

The figure must be seen in the context of the original government offer in March of a zero-solution, which would have reduced the standing forces by a total of 1,900 men in the three branches of the armed forces.

Thus the defense settlement has reduced the cuts in the standing forces to half those proposed by the government in the zero-solution.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE has arrived at these figures on the basis of Defense Minister Poul Sogaard's final zero-solution demarche on 18 March. Sogaard then announced that a zero-solution would reduce the Army, Air Force and Navy standing forces by 800, 400 and 700 men respectively from 1982 to 1985. The new defense settlement reduces cuts in the army by 360 permament staff personnel and 300 conscript man-years (400 conscripts for 9 months). Thus the net reduction in the Army will be 140 men. Navy cuts will be reduced by 25 men (for Sea Lion, the motor torpedo boat), and will thus total 375 men. Air Force cuts will be reduced by 325 men (for the Hawk missiles) and will therefore remain at 480.

It was not possible yesterday to receive official confirmation of the figures from the Defense Ministry because Defense Minister Sogaard is away.

At group meetings yesterday the four nonsocialist parties--the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party--approved the settlement with the government and the Social Democrats.

PAPER VIEWS EMERGING U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

PM181605 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 14 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Haig Sets the Tone"]

[Text] Secretary of State Alexander Haig's speech Tuesday can be seen as the first foreign policy statement from the Republican administration in Washington. It was about time one was presented.

During his first months as President, Ronald Reagan, fully occupied with the economy, has shown only halfhearted interest in the rest of the world. A certain lack of coherence and subtlety has characterized the official statements on foreign policy questions, and the disagreements on these questions in the administration's wings also seem to have been considerable at times.

Judging by all the signs, the Reagan Government will give foreign policy higher priority in the future, and Haig's speech--which is said to have been cleared in advance by both the White House and the Defense Department--should therefore have great importance ascribed to it.

This speech did not contain any real surprises. However, what was new was the balance which characterized the statement, and this is bound to be welcomed by the U.S. Western European allies, who, while it is true that they appreciate the U.S. Government's firm approach, have at times felt concern in the face of the saber rattling and the insufficient willingness to negotiate.

The reestablishment of U.S. military strength and self-confidence takes priority over everything else. This is what the Reagan government has made clear from the very first, and Haig did not give an inch on this position. However, he claimed that the decisions on an increase in U.S. defense spending and for the acquisition of new arms--such as the neutron bomb--should improve relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, not worsen them.

Washington is willing to negotiate with Moscow but not without conditions, Haig indicated. From the Soviet Union the United States demands greater restraint in power politics and increased respect for the independence of other nations and for international agreements, including the Helsinki agreement.

If the Soviet Union shows some compliance on these points a new relationship could, according to Haig, be established between the superpowers which would offer both sides great advantages: A reduction in military tension which is so expensive for both the East and the West, diplomatic alternatives to change through force, balanced agreements on arms control, improved trade opportunities and greater access for the Soviet Union to Western technology.

We will not find out today or tomorrow how the Russian leaders react to this message. At present there is in the Soviet Union a strident campaign against the U.S. decision to produce the neutron bomb, and the official Russian attitude seems implacable.

However, Western diplomats in Moscow think that strong forces are drawing Brezhnev to the negotiating table. There is no doubt that there is every reason for the leaders in the Kremlin to listen to Haig's arguments with attention.

The arms burden is greater on the Soviet Union than on the United States. In recent years U.S. military spending has amounted to an average of 5 percent of GNP. Reagan's rearmament plans will raise this figure to around 7 percent. According to foreign calculations the Soviet Union's military spending has amounted for more than a decade to between 10 and 15 percent of GNP.

In the long run this must mean an intolerable burden on the Russian economy, which is showing obvious signs of stagnation. The need to give priority to civilian production is clear. The shortage of goods is a great problem, and developments in Poland have made the Russian authorities aware of where the discontent among citizens standing in lines can lead.

On Thursday it was reported that this year too the Soviet Union will reap a miserable harvest--probably less than 190 million tons against the planned 236 million tons. This more than anything else underlines the country's economic vulnerability.

Somewhere--and not even the best Kremlin watchers know where--there is a limit at which the Soviet leaders will be forced to think again. Haig's speech radiates the conviction--or at least the hope--that the Soviet Union is approaching this limit.

If this is the case, the new U.S. policy of strength could pay off. Even when you are using strength against strength you should, however--as proven experience shows--give your antagonist the opportunity for an orderly retreat without loss of face. Firmness must be combined with diplomatic finesse.

Up to now such finesse has not been a characteristic of the Reagan government's actions, but Secretary of State Haig's speech gives rise to certain hopes that it is beginning to learn.

INTERLOCUTORS' STATEMENTS BEFORE 19 AUG MEETING

NC191930 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Another meeting was held this afternoon within the framework of the intercommunal talks. At this meeting, the Greek Cypriot side expressed its first general reaction to the Turkish Cypriot proposals.

In his statement prior to the meeting, Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, said he continues to be optimistic and added he would admit defeat only when the talks collapse. He said: The fact that the government has made an assessment of the Turkish Cypriot side's proposals is not the end of the road. He also said that, despite the fact the government has said the proposals cannot constitute the basis for a Cyprus solution, the dialogue is continuing.

Mr Gobbi added that there is movement and, as long as there is movement there is hope. He also said the dialogue is at a creative stage and the fact that proposals have been made, even if they are not satisfactory, constitutes a positive indication. Mr. Gobbi said that the procedure to be followed was to be discussed at today's meeting and expressed optimism at the results.

Mr Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the talks, stated that at today's meeting procedural matters were to be discussed. He also said he would convey the [Greek] Cypriot side's initial reaction to the Turkish Cypriot proposals. Ioannidhis said: We are continuing the talks on the basis of the two summit agreements and the UN resolutions on the Cyprus issue.

Answering a question whether the talks will be interrupted in mid-October, Ioannidhis said: On the contrary, the speeding up of the talks will be pursued. At the same time, he also stated that priority on the Varosha issue should be maintained in accordance with the agenda.

Mr Onan, the Turkish Cypriot side's representative at the talks, said that procedural matters were to be discussed at today's meeting but refrained from answering a question as to whether he would object to a proposal by Mr Ioannidhis to speed up the talks. Answering a question about priorities, as defined in the UN secretary general's opening statement, Mr Onan said both sides have their reservations on that statement. He added, however, that both sides could make arrangements for the continuation of the talks.

Asked to comment on President Kiprianou's statement about the Turkish Cypriot proposals, Mr Onan said everyone may have his views. He further noted that Mr Kiprianou's reference to the internationalization of the Cyprus issue is not very helpful for the continuation of the talks. He added: The Turkish side has prepared its proposals with good will and with the intention of settling the Cyprus issue. There may be certain points on which there is no agreement, particularly on the constitutional aspect, but we will continue the talks and the proposals are open to negotiations and discussion.

Today's meeting was also attended, on the Greek Cypriot side, by advisers to the talks Triandafillidhis and Soulioti, constitutional expert Mrs Palley and counselor Poliviou.

A UN statement says that during the meeting procedural matters were discussed and it was agreed that in the future the four topics of the agenda would be discussed alternately at each meeting. The statement adds that the Greek Cypriot side outlined its initial reaction to the Turkish Cypriot proposals. The statement concludes: The substantiated views of the Greek Cypriot side will be given at a later stage.

The next meeting will be held on Wednesday.

MITSOTAKIS, ROLANDHIS STATEMENTS AFTER TALKS

NC191815 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] This morning there was a meeting at the Foreign Ministry to examine the Cyprus problem in light of the recently submitted Turkish Cypriot proposals. The meeting was attended by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zakharakis, Cyprus Ambassador to Athens Khatzimiltis as well as other officials.

After the meeting, Mr Rolandhis made the following statement:

Yesterday we made an indepth study of the Turkish Cypriot proposals with Prime Minister Rallis and today we discussed them with Mr Mitsotakis at the Foreign Ministry. As we have already said, these proposals are far from the impressions that the Turks themselves had made before they were in fact submitted. The proposals are not satisfactory, and they cannot constitute a basis for a solution of the Cyprus issue. The Greek Government's views coincide with the conclusions of the National Council and the decisions of the Cyprus Council of Ministers, and I have already conveyed them to the president of the republic.

In Athens I have contacted political party leaders whom I have briefed on the latest developments of the Cyprus issue and our positions in relation to the Turkish Cypriot proposals.

Mr Mitsotakis then made the following statement:

On my part, I confirmed what Mr Rolandhis had to say and added that his visit to Athens was very useful for it gave us the opportunity to exchange views and determine a line at the crucial juncture that our Cyprus national issue is going through. The Greek Government's assessments and views coincided with the decisions of the Cyprus National Council and the Council of Ministers.

Mr Mitsotakis then said: As I have said, total harmony prevailed at the talks. We concurred in the assessments and prospects regarding the ways of handling [the issue]. The Cyprus Government is now expected to make its final decisions. In fact, the proposals submitted by the Turkish side were not those that were expected. I think that it was a mistake on the part of the Turks to proceed in such a timid way. They had given us the impression that they were going to proceed with a much greater step. In any case, the reactions of the Greek side will be responsible and serious and will take a specific form after the final decision by the responsible Cyprus Government.

Mr Mitsotakis further said: I would also like to add that I am particularly happy because Mr Rolandhis had the opportunity to come in contact with representatives of all the Greek political parties. The view of the government is that the Cyprus national issue is not a partisan but a national issue. All parties should see it in this light. Consequently, the first duty of the governments is to brief all the parties so that both Greece and Cyprus--all Hellenism--can chart a unitary national political line on the Cyprus issue.

In reply to a journalist's question whether after the submission of the Turkish Cypriot proposals the dialogue will be continued, Mr Rolandhis replied that the decision, despite the unacceptability of the Turkish proposals, is at the present stage to continue the exploration and the dialogue in an effort to achieve progress on the Cyprus problem.

Before the meeting at the Foreign Ministry, the Cyprus foreign minister had met with Mr Mavros, chairman of Center Union Party; Mr Iliou, Chairman of EDA [United Democratic Left Party]; Mr Kaloudhis, the KKE representative; and Mr Kirkos; representative of KKE-Interior. He briefed them about the Cyprus Government's views on the recent developments of the issue.

At 1100 this morning, Mr Rolandhis visited the leader of the official opposition party, Mr Papandreou, at Kastri. He also briefed him on the contents of the Turkish Cypriot proposals and the Cyprus Government's views. Mr Rolandhis departed Athens at 1315 for Paris where he will meet with French Foreign Minister Cheysson. He will discuss issues dealing with EEC.

SOVIET OFFICIALS RECALLED IN 'GALINA' CASE

NC200910 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 17 Aug 81 pp 1, 14

[Irfan Ulku report]

[Text] Mikhail Orlov, Soviet consul-general in Istanbul, has been recalled to Moscow and punished. It is also reported that he has been replaced by a new consul-general named Savastony. It has been learned that in addition to Mikhail Orlov, also certain other Soviet diplomats in Ankara and Istanbul have been recalled. According to some diplomatic circles, beautiful ballerina Galina of the Bolshoy ballet, who sought asylum at the U.S. Consulate-General in Istanbul and who was flown to the U.S. airbase in Frankfurt, is the cause of these developments.

It is claimed that the Soviet administration rendered Orlov and some other diplomats inactive and also punished them for failing to keep Galina under adequate control and for letting her take refuge in the West. Again, according to some reports, Galina's escape to the U.S. Consulate-General was not an ordinary case of 'taking refuge' but a plotted affair. This argument is based on the fact that the beautiful Galina's father (Valery Korchnoy) is deputy defense minister and head of the air defense section of the ministry [as published] Diplomatic observers point out that Galina's escape to the West, a daughter of a highly-placed Soviet administrator, could not be interpreted as a mere case of "seeking asylum" in the West. They suspect that there are other angles to this affair.

VOTCP: TCP CENTRAL COMMITTEE ISSUES STATEMENT

TA161214 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Statement Issued on 12 August 1981--read by announcer]

[Text] The Turkish Communist Party (TCP) Central Committee plenum has convened and has discussed the international situation and the political developments in our country since the military coup on 12 September [1980]. It approved the report by the Politburo and the party's policy, and determined the urgent tasks of the struggle against the reactionary military dictatorship. The plenum reviewed the measures to protect the cadres in the conditions of attack currently facing the party. Decisions concerning all the problems on the agenda were unanimously ratified.

The meeting of the Central Committee plenum--under conditions of deep secrecy and the threat of massive arrests--is the revolutionary reply of the Turkish working class to the anticommunist attack. The Leninist unity of the Central Committee was enhanced more than ever. The plenum will secure the further strengthening of unity among the party ranks and it will make party members look forward and not backward through revolutionary optimism. The plenum has stressed that, despite all the losses it suffered, our party is capable of taking a new and powerful leap forward. It strengthened the administration of the party. It proved that the TCP is able to convene as congress even under these difficult conditions. The plenum charged the Politburo with the task of completing the preparations for the 5th congress.

The Central Committee plenum convened at a time when the world is experiencing a very critical stage. The human race is facing the problem of peace or war. The Soviet Union and the socialist bloc is leading the struggle for peace and disarmament. The Central Committee plenum announced that the concrete peace proposals that emerged at the 26th congress of the CPSU reflect the interests of the Turkish people as well. On the opposite side, there are the imperialists, who are accelerating nuclear armament, and particularly the U.S. imperialists and the Reagan administration that have started producing new nuclear missiles and the neutron bomb. These forces are straining the international situation. A thermonuclear war can annihilate the entire humankind. Turkey, too, will not remain outside this. Even now, our people are bitterly paying for the burden resulting from dependence on NATO. Unemployment, poverty and tyranny are primarily the consequences of dependence on U.S. imperialism and a pro-NATO policy. The struggle for peace is closely linked to the struggle for general national interests, for democracy and for social progress. The plenum presented the party with the task of recruiting the widest circles to the peace movement.

The Central Committee plenum convened at a time when the rightist military dictatorship unusually intensified its pressure on the progressive forces. During a period of almost 1 year, the junta failed to solve any national problem. It is becoming clearer every day that the sovereign forces were not able to overcome the crisis even through the force of the bayonet. In its basic direction, the stand of the junta is reflecting the interests of imperialism and the monopolistic and collaborationist bourgeoisie. This policy is, on the one hand, creating grave consequences for the millions of toilers, the middle classes and the nonmonopolistic capitalists. On the other hand, this policy is providing the local and foreign monopolies with excessive profits. This policy is strengthening the position of the most reactionary, militant and pro-American elements within and outside the junta.

The economic crisis is continuing. The pressure applied on our country by imperialists, and particularly by the United States, is increasing. The pressure is continuing to use our soil for the U.S. rapid deployment force within the framework of NATO's new strategy of tension.

Terrorism, which is provoked by imperialists and the most reactionary, collaborationist and monopolistic circles, has no doubt been curbed to a great extent. However, the junta is increasingly intensifying the pressure on the progressive forces. Torture, massive arrests and measures that are characteristic of fascism are being implemented against these forces.

The Central Committee plenum strongly criticized the attacks directed against labor parties such as the Turkish Labor Party and the Turkish Socialist Workers Party. The RPP, democratic Kurdish organizations, worker, peasant and teacher organizations such as the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], the Turkish Teachers' Unity and Solidarity Association [TOBDER] and the Union of Cooperatives for Village Development and Other Agricultural Goals [KOY-LOOP] and against youth and women movements like the Progressive Youth Association [IGD], the Young Vanguards Association and the Progressive Women's Association [IKD]. The public is well aware that these patriotic organizations and parties are in no way connected with terrorism.

The plenum determined that the so-called constituent assembly to be convened by the junta is not a democratic assembly. The junta is engaged in an attempt to legitimize the reactionary dictatorship it has established and to disguise it with a parliamentary cover.

The pressure applied by imperialists and the collaborationist and monopolistic bourgeoisie is creating differences within and around the junta. The most reactionary elements in the junta and their supporters are trying to drag our country into adventures led by U.S. imperialism. Reactionary circles are intensifying anticommunism and anti-Sovietism.

They are accelerating their efforts to exacerbate the deep poverty of our people for the sake of the interests of a handful of monopolistic profiteers. The fascist NAP, which is stained with the blood of thousands of citizens and which attempted to seize power in a bid to suffocate the country in fascist darkness, is being defended by the reactionary press.

On certain issues, specific sectors in and around the junta are not implementing fully the demands of U.S. imperialists and collaborationist monopolies. They are following a policy vacillating between that of the reactionaries and that of the liberal bourgeoisie. This situation is reflected in the contradictory and (?imbalanced) policy pursued by the junta.

The TCP, which has not for a day renounced the struggle even under conditions of the military dictatorship, has been subjected to a new reactionary attack. The plenum discussed and criticized the shortcomings and errors in the implementations of the party. It determined the ways to eliminate them. Our party organizations were damaged. The failure to fully follow the principles of working under a ban facilitated the attack by the police. The leftist opportunist Worker's Voice [Iscinin Sesi] group, which attacked the party, also prepared the grounds for the arrests. From the beginning, the leaders of this group exposed the party secrecy and betrayed the party. Thousands of progressive persons are being forced--through extreme torture--to admit to membership in the TCP. There are attempts to try patriots in accordance with fascist Articles 141 and 142 of the Turkish penal code after the patriots were subject to gross anticommunist provocations. The reports that are being leaked to the bourgeois press--which are usually false--are only aimed at confusing party members and shaking their confidence. However, the junta has not achieved its purpose in the attack launched against the TCP. It has not been able to eliminate the administrative cadres and strong nucleus of the party. The TCP is still alive despite the most barbaric attack by the reactionaries. No force can destroy the TCP, which is tied to the Turkish proletariat in spirit and blood. No force can cause the collapse of the TCP--the most consistent defender of national interests.

The Central Committee plenum emphasized that the junta regime can be eliminated through the unity of all the national and democratic forces. It noted the necessity to form a national, democratic, provisional and revolutionary government, democratize the state and implement anti-imperialist and antimonopolistic provisions. It announced that elections can be held for a democratic constituent assembly with such a government. The plenum drew the attention of all party cadres to the problems of forming a united front of anti-imperialist, antifascist, antimonopolistic and antichauvinistic forces. The most pressing task facing the working class, the toilers and all our people consists of uniting the widest national and democratic forces. Even today, a significant force is emerging capable of struggling against imperialist pressure, the ruthless exploitation by the monopolies and the pressure by the junta for peace, democracy and social progress. Among the masses, support in the face of the 12 September coup is being replaced by hesitation and hesitation is being replaced by discontent. The plenum advised circles that are hesitant in opposing the junta's attack against democratic rights and freedoms to reconsider their positions. Moreover, it criticized persons who describe the present military dictatorship as fascist (?but who refuse) to take advantage of the conflicts within or around the junta and regard the conflicts as unimportant.

Today, there are possibilities of unity of action with Ataturkist forces that adopt a hesitant stand regarding the junta, reformist circles and with religious and anti-imperialist sectors. It is possible to recruit certain sectors of the Kurdish national movement to unity of action. While discussing the problems of a united front, the plenum developed the views of the party regarding Kemalism, the army and religious circles. It stressed the importance of an alliance between the patriotic officers and the people's movement.

The plenum expressed the wish to enhance the unity of action especially with the labor parties, and work toward political unity.

Unity between the members of the Confederation of Revolutionary Workers Unions [DISK] and the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] is at the top of the agenda of the labor movement.

The task of creating an anti-imperialist, democratic and wide-ranging youth movement is facing progressive youths who are resisting the junta through sacrifices.

The TCP is supporting those who struggle to foil the U.S. rapid deployment force plan and NATO's missile policy and those who struggle to abandon NATO and eliminate the nuclear stockpiles and the imperialist bases of aggression on our soil. The TCP is in solidarity with those who struggle in order to prevent a handful of collaborationist monopolies and local and foreign industrial and banking capitalists--who work together--from obtaining absolute sovereignty over the entire state. The TCP is in solidarity with persons who struggle to improve the living conditions of the toilers. The TCP extends a hand to all those who struggle to forestall the junta's pressure on the progressive forces and secure the reopening of unions that were closed. The TCP supports all persons struggling for the lifting of the ban on all political parties opposed to fas ism and the release of all patriotic and democratic detainees and seeks a genuine democracy. The TCP struggles together with these persons.

The Central Committee plenum analysed the condition of the party. Above all, it adopted measures necessary to protect its organizations and cadres and to develop the types and methods of the struggle tools suitable to the new conditions. It (?determined) the steps that must be taken to erase all the traces of [word indistinct] from party life and to improve the work style of communists among the masses. Communists must be active in all places--even in the most reactionary mass organizations--and organize the masses in the places.

A principled [words indistinct] policy, the most wide-ranging alliance system, correct working procedures among the masses and the protection of party organizations and cadres constituted the main points of the discussions. The plenum charged all our agitation and propaganda organs with instilling this Central Committee line among the masses and cadres in a more successful and active manner.

The TCP Central Committee plenum greeted with fiery communist feeling all our comrades who protect the honor of our party and of the Turkish working class in prison dungeons and under torture as well as the thousands of patriotic and progressive friends who are in prison charged with being members of the communist party. It expressed thanks to all the brotherly communist parties and to all the international progressive forces that are in solidarity with these most heroic sons of our people.

The TCP Central Committee plenum defended the unity of the world communist movement on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. It stressed, once again, the great importance of holding a general meeting of brotherly communist and worker parties at this stage of international developments.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee, 12 August 1981.

EMBASSY CULTURAL ATTACHE EXPELLED FROM MOSCOW

LD200300 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0050 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Mr John Gordon, cultural attache at the British Embassy in Moscow, has been asked to leave in retaliation for the expulsion from Britain of Mr Victor Lazin, said the Foreign Office early today.

"There are no possible grounds for such action against an innocent member of the embassy's staff. We deplore the Soviet reaction, which is being considered carefully in Moscow," [as received], said a Foreign Office spokesman.

Three weeks ago Mr Lazin, a second secretary at the Soviet Embassy in London, was declared "persona non grata" and told to leave Britain.

It was said that his activities were "incompatible with his status as a diplomat."

The Foreign Office spokesman said later: "The Soviet Union has said that Mr Gordon's activities were unacceptable, but we are taking it that this has been imposed in retaliation."

Of the fact that Moscow was expelling a first secretary after we had expelled a second secretary, he said: "I don't think we would regard it as an escalation. There is nothing unusual about it."

PAPERS VIEW EFFECTS OF U.S.-LIBYAN AIR CLASH

'Clear Message'

DW201025 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Friedhelm Kemna commentary: "Bitter Lesson"]

[Text] The Americans definitely did not plunge rashly into the confrontation over the Gulf of Sidra. The risk has existed since 1973 when Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi unilaterally extended his country's territorial waters beyond the internationally recognized zone to 200 nautical miles off the coast. Since that time Libya has been the only Mediterranean country which has defended the usurpation of international waters with militant threats against any "intruders." What the Libyans have been doing is not just warning but also shooting; and yesterday was not the first time, either.

What happened for the first time yesterday, however, was that the fire was returned. Two of Al-Qadhdhafi's fighter-bombers, which are sluggish as interceptors, were sacrificed to a self-appointed guardianship against "imperialist aggression." Meanwhile, al-Qadhdhafi should have know that the times are past when U.S. naval maneuvers in the Mediterranean could be impeded without punishment. A lack of American response to the challenges by the regime in Tripoli could not longer be anticipated since May, when Reagan, in a frontal position against international terrorism, kicked Libya's diplomats out of the country.

It goes without saying that the two jets from the carrier Nititz could have withdrawn, as have other U.S. planes which were attacked before. But this should have appeared out of the question to anybody when the President ordered the maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra. It is part of Reagan's program to restore the credibility of U.S. presence throughout the world -- including the presence of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean. The unilateral extension of Libyan territorial waters 7 years ago -- and of the airspace above them -- was a consequence of the doubt to which this credibility had been subjected, and not just in the eyes of the Libyans and their ruler.

Viewed this way, the order of the President to return the fire this time reaches far beyond the battle site. The message is clear: The liability for risks with which the Americans had been saddled without any hazard for years--and not just by Libyan challenges -- is being returned to the challengers.

Libyan Motives

[Commentary signed G-N: "What Does Al-Qadhdhafi Want?"]

[Text] The downing of the two Libyan fighter planes over the Gulf of Sidra is obviously not an "incident" caused by an unfortunate misundertanding. In all properly led armed forces, the use of arms (except in self-defense) takes place only when ordered, and not without the orders of the political leadership. There is more room for "trigger happiness" in novels than in military reality. The case must be viewed politically.

Why did the Libyans open fire on the American planes? According to American statements, the air battle took place "more than 60 nautical miles" from the closest shore in the northwestern part of the Gulf of Sidra in "international" waters" on the high seas. The Libyan Government maintains, however, that it occurred in its national airspace. Libya claims in fact a 200-nautical-mile strip of the Mediterranean as national waters--a demand which not only goes far beyond the rules of the classic rights of maritime nations, namely 3 nautical miles, but also beyond the 12-nautical-mile coastal zone negotiated but not yet agreed by the Law of the Sea conference. The U.S. naval exercises 60 nautical miles off the Libyan coast are taking advantage of the common right of all nations to free seafaring, a right which can be preserved only through repeated use--and if need be, in a demonstrative way. One day before the air battle, the Libyan news agency had "warned" the Americans against manuevers in the waters it claimed.

What further developments can be expected now? In any event there won't be any help from the Soviet Union for its client Al-Qadhdhafi in a conflict which is supposed to help implement a claim for a 200-nautical-mile coastal zone. The Soviet Union is a naval power and in problems related to coastal seas it is a silent partner of America. The United States to has no reason to make more of the incident than it really is: A violation that had to be warded off. One must ask what Al-Qadhdhafi and in mind in trying to start a conflict with America. Does he need a great foreign enemy? The selection of the adversary and the method--provocation in the field of recognized international law--is reminiscent of the occupation of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

'Questionable' U.S. Reaction

[Commentary signed ZER: "Not Always Coincidences"]

[Text] It could be that two particularly hot-headed Libyan Air Force pilots wanted to intercept the American planes by force more than 100 kilometers off the shore of their country. It is also feasible that the attacked American pilots fired their rockets too quickly to tell them what is what in the American way.

Incidents of this kind have often had consequences in history, whether they were coincidences or not. Responsible policy, therefore, is committed to keeping opportunities for armed incidents as small as possible. In the case of the Libyan-American dogfight, both sides may have disregarded these rules.

When Libyan chief of state Al-Qadhdhafi, probably the most unpredictable man in international politics, unilaterally announced 8 years ago a 200-mile zone along Libya's coast, most people did not take it very seriously. The Mediterranean is too narrow for such claims. Libya's zone would include the Greek island of Crete as well as independent Malta. One can surely contest such demands without hseitation. It is more than questionable, however, whether it must be done as U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger did, who gave explicit orders to the U.S. 6th Fleet to hold maneuvers off the Libyan coast--even if the ships remained more than 100 km away.

Regarding the nuclear field, the two sides agreed to continue their cooperation program, taking care to guarantee its employment for peaceful purposes.

The talks also dealt with the situation in the Middle East and Lebanon as well as the struggles raging in the region. The discussions stressed the need to work for solutions to the region's problems based on freedom and justice, for which the peoples aspire.

Regarding Lebanon, the two sides were in agreement on the need to safeguard its security and territorial integrity as well as the need to respect its constitutional authorities. The talks also demonstrated that Iraq and France hold identical views on the Third World states' economic and social development.

The statement pointed out that France shares with Iraq its adherence to the major intrinsic principles in this regard, that is, safeguarding national independence and the peoples' right to social justice, self-determination, freedom to have the political system thay want and freedom to choose their form of development, in addition to their right to safety and security.

'Aziz Conveys Message

JN191627 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1605 GMT 19 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Aug (INA)--French President Francois Mitterrand met this afternoon with Tariq 'Aziz, Revolution Command Council Member and deputy prime minister. The meeting, which lasted 1 hour, was attended by Iraqi Ambassador to France Isma'il al-Ways and French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson.

In a statement to journalists after the meeting, Tariq 'Aziz said he is visiting France on a friendship mission and added that he had conveyed to the French president an oral message from President Saddam Husayn. He said that after this meeting he can stress that his talks were cordial and characterized by deep understanding. He said he would continue his contacts with senior French officials today and tomorrow.

To Rebuild Reactor

NC201326 Paris AFP in English 1309 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Aug (AFP)--France will help rebuild Iraq's nuclear reactor--destroyed in an Israeli air strike on June 7--once both sides agree on new control measures to insure that the plant is not put to military use, informed sources said here today.

Their comments followed initial talks here between French leaders and Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq 'Aziz. Mr 'Aziz conferred on his arrival yesterday with President Francois Mitterrand and had further talks today with Defense Minister Charles Hernu and External Trade Minister Michel Jobert.

Later he was scheduled to lunch with Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy and complete the round of talks with Froeign Minister Claude Cheysson, the sources said.

Though just a month ago Iraqi President Saddam Husayn seemed cagey over French stipulations for tighter guarantees that a rebuilt reactor at Tammuz would not be used to make nuclear weapons, Mr 'Aziz's visit appears to have cleared the air, the sources said.

Iraq is now prepared to accept the stiffer controls the French expect in exchange for rebuilding the Osiris reactor, which the Israelis charged was being used to develop nuclear weapons for Iraq.

French presidential palace sources said yesterday that follow-up talks would open shortly to work out these control measures.

At the same time the sources gave no sign that Iraq might be prepared to accept medium-enriched uranium for the reactor--useless for military purposes--in place of the fully enriched uranium that fueled the reactor destroyed in the Israeli raid.

According to observers here, Mr 'Aziz may also have used the visit to sound out France's new socialist administration on the possibility of selling Iraq conventional war materials.

Formerly supplied exclusively by the Soviet Union, Iraq is now turning to other markets. It recently took delivery of four French Mirage fighters--first of 60 that it ordered under the administration of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing--as well as several hundred light armoured vehicles.

The presidential spokesman reiterated yesterday that the present government intends to honour all civil and military contracts with Iraq entered into before it took office this spring.

Jobert To Visit Baghdad

LD201906 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Another thing that is not going to improve Paris-Tehran relations is the visit to France by the Iraqi number two, Tariq 'Aziz. Iraq is still at war with Iran and the Ayatollah Khomeyni does not appreciate seeing one of his enemies flirting with France. And yet that is what is happening. After being received yesterday by Francois Mitterrand, Tariq 'Aziz lunched today with Premier Mauroy. Then this afternoon he met Foreign Minister Cheysson.

Iraq is asking France to rebuild the Tammuz nuclear power station, which was badly damaged by the Israelis. The French Government has agreed in principle but is asking for guarantees on the strictly civilian use of the Tammuz reactor. The minister of state for foreign trade, Michel Jobert, will go himself to Baghdad on 3 and 4 October to negotiate all that on the spot.

'Aziz Departs

JN201940 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1825 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Aug (INA)--Tariq 'Aziz, member of the Iraqi Revolution Command Council and deputy prime minister, met here today with French Foreign Relations Minister Claude Cheysson. He told reporters that friendly and fruitful discussions were held on all political issues that concern Iraq and France. Viewpoints were exchanged in an extensive and deep manner, he added.

Tariq 'Aziz announced that his meeting with the French foreign minister completes his official visit to France. He said: I can assert that the visit was successful and contributed to consolidating and developing French-Iraqi relations.

Asked whether Iraq has extended an invitation to French officials, 'Aziz said: The French president, premier and ministers can visit Iraq whenever they want and they will be welcomed. The ministers can visit Iraq whenever they want and they will be received as friends.

In a statement to reporters on seing Tariq 'Aziz off, Claude Cheysson expressed his thanks for the visit made by the deputy prime minister. He said: The interest attached to this visit and Tariq 'Aziz's reception by President Francois Mitterrand, Premier Pierre Mauroy and the ministers indicate the depth of relations between France and Iraq.

Cheysson Comments on Talks

NC201855 Paris AFP in English 1839 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 20 Aug (AFP)--France and Iraq are agreed on continuing cooperation "in all domains," French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said today following a meeting with visiting Iraqi Deputy Premier Tariq 'Aziz.

Mr Cheysson said that both governments had "the same concern for developing modern technologies for peaceful ends, including nuclear technology." This will be the point of departure for talks between experts on how this development can be achieved, not only in the nuclear field, but in other sectors as well, Mr Cheysson added.

MINISTRY DENIES MEDIATION ATTEMPTS IN AFRICA

AU201628 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Aug (ANSA)--For the moment, the French Government has proffered no mediation plan to the nations in conflict in the Horn of Africa, according to a spokesman for the Foreign Affairs Ministry here.

He was replying to insistent rumors about a possible French mediation role in the Horn of Africa.

These rumors doubtless sprang from steps taken by the governments of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing beginning in 1978 with a view to getting Somalia, Ethiopia, Sudan, Kenya and Djibouti around a peace table.

Only Ethiopia rejected the plan for a conference, at least up until last April when then French Foreign Under Secretary Stirn made a visit to Addis Ababa and obtained an agreement in principle from Ethiopian leader Haile Mariam Mengistu.

The conference was to have simultaneously dealt with a search for ways to end the conflicts in Ogaden and Eritrea and to settle the Somaliland controversy between Somalia and Kenya.

The Quai d'Orsay spokesman today said that if a French mediation effort was to emerge, it would certainly not be a dusting off of the previous regime's efforts.

Any French plan to help the Africans solve their disputes would be thought out and drafted by the new government using criteria consonant with the program and spirit of socialist foreign policy, the spokesman added.

No Move on Chad

AB181332 Paris AFP in French 1229 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Aug (AFP)--Jean-Pierre Cot, minister delegate to the Ministry of Cooperation and Development, stated on Tuesday that France is not dealing with Libya in the Chadian affair.

Interviewed during the Channel 2 television news program, the minister pointed out that France's efforts will, on one hand, consist of humanitarian aid to reconstruct Ndjamena and on the other hand, diplomatic efforts to create conditions for the withdrawal of Libyan troops from Chad. This move is also aimed at ensuring the implementation of the OAU resolution calling for the setting up of an inter-African force.

The implementation of the OAU resolution, Mr Cot continued, is primarily the responsibility of the African states themselves and the Chadian leader. France, through its foreign policy, encourages the African states to set up the inter-African force which is the necessary condition for the withdrawal of the Libyan troops, the cooperation and development minister stated in conclusion.

COLOMBO ADDRESSES SENATE ON NUCLEAR MISSILE ISSUE

AU201955 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 20 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian position in favor of the "absolute necessity" of installing nuclear-tipped Euromissiles in Western Europe while resuming talks with the Soviet Union on the balanced and controlled reduction of nuclear arms in Europe was renewed by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo here today.

Colombo, who was followed to the speakers podium by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio, was speaking to a joint session of the Rome Senate's Defense and Foreign Affairs commissions.

Tomorrow, the two ministers will be briefing the lower house's Defense and Foreign Affairs commissions on developments over the Euromissiles and the Reagan administration's recent decision to make and deploy the neutron bomb.

The debate was urged by all the Italian parties after the government's decision to start building launching sites for 112 cruise missiles sometime in the coming months at the NATO base at Comiso near Ragusa in southern Sicily.

The Italian position as stated by Colombo today was approved by both houses of the Italian Parliament towards the end of 1979, meaning that the debates today and tomorrow will be followed by no vote since the earlier vote cannot be reversed.

On the N-bomb, Colombo, a Christian Democrat, said Italy supports negotiations with the Soviet Union which would make "deployment of neutron warheads in Europe" superfluous "but an eventual deployment in Europe cannot be put into effect without prior consultation and consent from the European allies, according to the rules of the Atlantic alliance, an alliance which is made of free and sovereign states," Colombo stressed.

In his turn, Lagorio, a Socialist, said that without installation of the Euromissiles there would be no talks with the Soviet Union on a reduction in nuclear arms, "because the West would not know what to negotiate with, seeing its current military inferiority."

According to Lagorio, the link between modernization of the nuclear arsenal and the advancement of neogitations is essential.

Waiting for the eventual positive conclusion of the negotiations would make the military gap unbridgeable and the negotiations themselves "misleading and hypocritical," Lagorio claimed.

He also told the Senate that the estimated cost of the Comiso missile base would be about 200 billion lire (about 170 million dollars).

The work should last six years and the first cruise launching pads be operational by 1984, he added.

Predictably, the opposition benches, and above all the Communists, spoke out against the missiles and the N-bomb.

Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's ruling coalition groups the Christian Democrats and the Socialists with the Social Democrats, the Liberals, and Spadolini's own Republicans.

BALSEMAO AGREES TO STAY ON, FORM NEXT GOVERNMENT

LD201958 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Dr Pinto Balsemao this afternoon told members of the permanent committee of his party that he has accepted the nomination as prime minister of the next government.

Tomorrow leading members of the Social Democratic Party will call on the president of the republic to inform him that the choice made by the party's National Council last weekend has now been confirmed, since Pinto Balsemao has now decided to stay on as prime minister.

This weekend or this coming Monday at the latest Gen Ramalho Eanes will again receive the parties represented in Parliament to tell them the name of the prime minister of the eighth constitutional government, precisely the same as the present prime minister. Later the president of the republic will consult the Council of the Revolution, after which he is expected to immediately designate the new head of government.

After the communique announcing the designation of the new prime minister has been released, there is no constitutional provision laying down the deadline for formation of the government, but this should take place (?without) major difficulties as it is admitted that the new cabinet might be sworn in at the end of next week or in the first days of September.

It will be recalled that Dr Pinto Balsemao accepted nomination to the post of prime minister even before centrist leader Freitas do Amaral's final decision on whether or not to participate in the next government had been made known.

The evening paper A TARDE says today that the chairman of the Social Democratic Center Party [Freitas do Amaral] has already told Pinto Balsemao that he will accept the nomination as deputy prime minister, although Freitas do Amaral said yesterday after an almost 2-hour-long meeting with Pinto Balsemao that only this Saturday would he make a definitive decision after having heard the views of his own party's Political Committee.

Freitas do Amaral's reluctance to serve in the new government stems from a pledge he personally undertook before Democratic Alliance voters during the campaign for the legislative elections in October last year, according to which he would not return to the government if Gen Ramalho Eanes were reelected president of the republic, which in fact happened on 7 December.

Insistence has been expressed within the Social Democratic Center Party itself that Freitas do Amaral Should withdraw his pledge as it is virtually certain that he will be the deputy prime minister of the eighth constitutional government.

GONZALEZ ON ALLEGED PSOE LINKS WITH MOSCOW

PM201546 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 15 Aug 81 p 11

[Joaquina Prades report: "Continuation of Consensus Depends on UCD's Denying Our Alleged Agreement With CPSU"]

[Text] Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez yesterday sent a letter to Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo in which he expresses his opinion on the publication in a Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) internal bulletin of alleged agreements signed in December 1977 between the PSOE and the CPSU in which, among other things, the Socialists undertook to oppose Spain's entry into NATO in return for "the Soviet Union's tangible support for the PSOE, to enable it to attain power in Spain as soon as possible."

This action by the UCD has aroused such indignation on the part of Felipe Gonzalez that at a press conference in Madrid yesterday he did not hesitate to describe its authors as "deliberate liars," and warned that his party has already begun a legal study to determine the criminal liability which might result from its publication, and that if the government persists in this course of action, "the consensus will be gravely threatened."

The conflict between the PSOE and the UCD over these alleged agreements arose 3 days ago, when those in charge of the ruling party's internal information office decided to insert in a bulletin intended for its members and leaders a report in the magazine CARTA DEL ESTE--a publication with a very small circulation and financed, according to what was disclosed at the press conference, by "those U.S. services which also subsidize Radio Liberty and other similar propaganda media." Felipe Gonzalez' annoyance is due to the fact that it is a report which was published in the first issue of CARTA DEL ESTE, of 16 February 1978, which, in his opinion, has not the slightest credibility.

In fact that magazine published on its front page a report datelined Moscow and signed by nobody (only the phrase "private correspondence" appears) concerning those secret agreements. These were signed--according to the pamphlet--during a visit Gonzalez paid to the Soviet Union, and the person writing the report cites as his source "rumors persistently circulating in the Soviet capital, specifically in the small Spanish community." The fact that the UCD reproduced a report which is so unreliable, in the PSOE's opinion, and above all th moment chosen for this, were the causes of the indignation of the Spanish Socialists' secretary general, who has interrupted his summer vacation specifically in order to clarify what he does not hesitate to describe as "insults, slanders and libels launched by a group of liars."

This "group of liars," "whoever they are, and the PSOE will discover the identity of all those involved in the maneuver," are already "absolutely discredited," in the opinion of Gonzalez, who added emphatically: "These people do not exist politically, as far as I am concerned. Therefore I will never take part in any conversation, agreement or negotiations in which they are interlocutors."

Gonzalez appeared to be particularly surprised by the gestation of this process: "The first time these agreements were mentioned was during a seminar on Spain and NATO," He said: "On that occasion," he continued, "a certain frivolous UCD personality mentioned these agreements. It was 11 July, and the whole process of the autonomy negotiations with the government was underway. I told Calvo-Sotelo at the time that we would sever our relations immediately if the government allowed such lies in its party." Continuing with Felipe Gonzalez' account, just a few days after the signing of the UCD-PSOE agreements on autonomies, the above-mentioned report was published in the UCD bulletin.

"I do not know if they are starting to sever relations between themselves and us in order to begin a dirty war. I know many things about the UCD which I have not disclosed so far, nor do I intend to do so, because that is not my political style. What I really cannot understand is how the government, if it really believes that we have jeopardized Spain's sovereignty by reaching an agreement with the USSR, dare sign the autonomy agreements. Of course I would be unable to sit down at the same table with individuals of such a moral character. And yet they did so." "Is it not the case," Gonzalez asked, "that the government knows that all that is a lie? So why do they publish it in that event?"

For the Socialist leader the answer is clear: It coincides with the PSOE's announcement that it will begin a campaign against Spain's entry into NATO and to seek a public debate and a popular referendum. "There is the key to the libel," he said, "because that has made them very nervous." But, he commented, another two factors have influenced the ruling party's attitude: "The UCD must not be able to swallow the fact we will be holding our congress in October in the midst of calm, and is attempting to spread confusion in our midst." And the other factor, which is of greater political significance: "They cannot accept that the latest opinion polls and enquiries should demonstrate the extent to which popular support for the PSOE has increased. And they cannot accept that this is due to our ability and political responsibility, and so they must launch campaigns of deception."

In addition to that, Felipe Gonzalez added: "What I find most unspeakable is that they chose precisely a moment when the extreme right is launching another campaign of deception against the parties and democracy in order to spread libel. And in the midst of the leaking of the indictment concerning 23 February [date of coup attempt], which is when we ought to appear before public opinion more united than ever, it emerges that it is people belonging to the UCD Parliamentary group itself who are playing into the putschist extreme right's hands."

Therefore, in his opinion, "the government is obliged to stop this base confrontation which basically is gravely harming democratic stability," since the continuation of the consensus which was initiated between the two major Spanish parliamentary parties in the wake of Tejero's abortive coup "is gravely threatened if the government's stance is not one of totally ending these dirty political methods."

He also described as "absolutely untrue" reports recently given by "a centrist personality" to EUROPA PRESS concerning other PSOE agreements, this time with the UCD, with respect to the setting up of private television networks.

Guerra Remarks

PM201558 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 13 Aug p 9

[Excerpts] Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Deputy Secretary General Alfonso Guerra yesterday threatened to propose to his party's leadership the severance of every kind of relation with the government if the latter does not issue a denial concerning the allegation of a secret agreement between the PSOE and the CPSU disseminated among the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] leaders by means of a report to which the EUROPA PRESS news agency had access.

Guerra described this allegation as a "contemptible libel" on the part of the UCD, and stated: "I hope it is the government itself which denies it, because the UCD does not exist." He warned that if the government does not do so, he will propose to the Socialist leadership the severance of all relations with it, as a result of which it would be very difficult to implement the autonomy pacts which have just been signed "and which we will not repudiate."

Guerra asserted that the origin of the "contemptible, immoral and shameless" libel is an internal document known as the Igalso Document, of July 1981, of the UCD Secretariat for Organization. UCD Secretary for Organization Jose Ramon Caso for his part expressed surprise at Guerra's reaction

TURKISH PROPOSALS CANNOT FORM BASIS FOR SETTLEMENT

NC210930 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The Greek Cypriot side is going to present its "reasoned views" on the Turkish Cypriot proposals at next week's meeting of the intercommunal talks on Wednesday.

Reliable sources yesterday indicated that the Greek Cypriot side, despite its disappointment over the "poor show" of the proposals, does not intend to abandon the conference table before all possibilities are explored.

The presentation of "reasoned views" by the Greek Cypriot side showing where and why the Turkish proposals cannot form the basis for a settlement will be the first step towards helping clarification of the situation.

The sources confirmed that a detailed study of the map proposed by the Turks indicates that the area from which the Turks propose to withdraw amounts to only 2.83 percent of the island's surface and another 0.75 percent ceded by the Turks is in the buffer zone. So altogether the Turkish concessions do not exceed 3.5 percent.

Contrary to the heavy advertising of the proposals by the Turks before their presentation, these allow a maximum of 31,000 Greek Cypriots to return to their homes out of the 200,000 displaced persons, and of these 15,000 will be in the Varosha areas that are proposed for handing over.

It is understood that at last Wednesday's meeting the Turkish side indicated that their proposals on the constitution--which are said to be an exact copy of their previous proposals--are "negotiable" but did not explain which are the areas which could be expanded.

However, on the question of territory, the Turkish side appears tougher and this is confirmed in their document accompanying the maps in which they say that the Turkish side has shown "maximum flexibility" in determining the regions to be abandoned.

Informed sources indicated that the feeling of disappointment and disenhancement [as published] about the narrowness of the Turkish proposals is shared by most Western governments, and this tends to confirm reports that Ankara had given the impression that much more generous proposals would be forthcoming to allow more hope of progress.

As the Greek foreign minister, Mr Mitsotakis, stated in Athens, "it was a mistake on the part of the Turks to advance so timidly especially when they had given the impression that they would take a much more resolute step."

The Greek Cypriot side hopes that the next meetings of the intercommunal talks will show whether there is a chance of a real improvement, otherwise the Cyprus Government would be compelled to take its case to the UN General Assembly.

Already the new procedure agreed, of taking all four items of the agenda at each session, and not simply one item at each sitting, is expected to speed up the anticipated clarification of the situation.

The new procedure also leaves unaffected the agreement on priority for Famagusta (Varosha), so that in case there is commendable progress it could be possible to pursue this issue independently of the overall negotiations.

It is emphasized, however, that the priority for Famagusta does not in the least imply abandonment of the basic rights of movement, settlement and ownership for all the people and this of course includes the right of refugees to return to their homes, a point on which the Greek Cypriot side insists whereas the Turkish Cypriot side tends to see it in a restricted sense.

"We can only hope that the Turks will acknowledge our goodwill for a true federation and will cooperate in establishing conditions for a federal structure which would take care of the local circumstances and lead to a better life for all citizens," a Greek Cypriot official said.

Timetable Proposal

NC191100 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government will propose a timetable for the talks during today's inter-Cypriot meeting. The timetable will be for the period until the middle of October, and if there are no positive developments the talks will be interrupted and the Greek Cypriot side will seek recourse to the UN General Assembly.

This decision was made by the National Council during last Friday's meeting following the rejection of the Turkish proposals. The National Council will probably meet again next Friday in order to study the document being prepared by the government on the Turkish proposals and to be submitted at the negotiating table.

In any case, the Cyprus Government does not believe that the Turkish side will submit fresh proposals on the territorial aspect.

TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA202028 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen arrived in Cyprus this evening as the official guest of President Rauf Denktas. At Ercan state airport Turkmen was received by Denktas, the Turkish ambassador in Lefkosa, Inal Batu, the commander of the Turkish Cypriot peace force, Lt Gen Dogan Kromors, Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk, Assembly Deputy President Ekrem Ural, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, various ministers, the commander of the security forces, Brig Gen Kemal Yavuz and other officials.

Speaking at Ercan state airport, Denktas recalled that Turkmen had visited Cyprus many times in the past in other capacities and that he was very happy to see him in Cyprus as foreign minister. He expressed the belief that this visit would have beneficial results. Turkmen said he visited Cyprus many times but that he is very happy to be the first Turkish foreign minister to visit the island. He added: The sole aim of this visit is to stress the solidarity between Turkey and the Turkish Federated State, to further consolidate the existing ties and the unbreakable relations and to seek ways to advance our joint cause more effectively. To assess the information I will obtain from the president, the prime minister and the foreign minister will be an exceptional opportunity for me.

Turkmen replied to questions by newsmen. On whether or not a statement will be made in connection with the initial Greek Cypriot reaction to the Turkish Cypriot proposals concerning the Cyprus problem, Turkmen said he would be briefed by Federated State officials and that he would be informed on how they assessed the Greek Cypriot attitude. Turkmen said: As far as I can see, the Greek Cypriots have not yet submitted their counterproposals. Upon being reminded that their initial reaction had been negative, Turkmen said: It is early yet to [word indistinct]. I believe it will be appropriate to wait a while longer. In reply to a question on whether he thought the intercommunal talks should expand to include Turkey and Greece in a future phase, Turkmen said: No, we by no means think so. The intercommunal talks have a determined method. These talks are being held under the auspices of the UN Secretary General. We are convinced that this is the best method. This issue should be discussed between the two communities. This has always been Turkey's stand.

On being reminded that there are claims to the effect that the recent Turkish Cypriot proposals are not of a nature that can solve the Cyprus problem, Turkmen said: We claim the opposite.

TURKISH CONSUL IN COUNTRY SAID TERRORIZING EXILES

NC201520 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Thessaloniki, 20 Aug--There is already the question of dismissal of Aziz Yakin, Turkish consul general in Thessaloniki, following the leak from his office of a document in which he is said to be involved in the campaign to terrorize Turkish defectors living in Thessaloniki.

Specifically, Mr Yakin has sent a letter (bearing his signature) to more than 50 defectors, threatening that "they will bear all the consequences if they continue to participate in gatherings directed against the Turkish Republic."

Indicative of this issue is the case of Turkish pacifist Al. Balikci, who was attacked the other day by unknown persons outside his house. Balikci has sent a letter to the newspapers stressing, among other things, that "these acts of terrorism are intensified while world opinion strengthens its support for the Turkish people who are oppressed by the junta."

TALKS SET WITH USSR ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

NC201957 Paris AFP in English 1832 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Text] Helsinki, 20 Aug (AFP)--Finland hopes it will get more information on the Soviet proposal to discuss "measures" involving the Soviet territory bordering a proposed Nordic nuclear-free zone, a high-ranking Finnish Foreign Ministry official said here today.

Keijo Korhonen, secretary of state for foreign affairs, said that the question of the prospective creation of a nuclear-free zone will be taken up at the regular meeting between senior Foreign Ministry officials of the Soviet Union and Finland. The meeting will be held in the near future, Mr Korhonen (?said).

The question will also be taken up at a meeting of Nordic foreign ministers next month, Mr Korhonen said. In June Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev said in an interview in Finland's Social Democratic Party newspaper that the Soviet Union was ready to discuss "measures involving our own territory bordering on a Nordic nuclear free zone".

Earlier Soviet leaders and commentators had resolutely rejected any ideas of extending the proposed zone to Soviet territory or to the waters around the Nordic countries.

Finnish President Urho Kekkonen has repeatedly advocated the idea of the Nordic nuclear-free zone since 1963, and the discussion has recently started again in other Nordic countries as the Nordic sea areas have become more attractive to the superpowers for their strategic operations.

Both Sweden and Norway have taken a more favourable attitude towards the idea but both would like to see the Nordic zone as part of a more comprehensive zone which should also include most of central Europe.

PRC WILL PAY COMPENSATION FOR COMPANIES' CLAIMS

LD210951 Montreal International Service in English 1900 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Excerpts] China has agreed to make compensation payments to Canada for goods and property seized in the revolution in 1949. The Canadian Government has been negotiating with Beijing for several years on behalf of individuals and companies who have made claims.

The agreement was announced by Canada's external affairs minister, Mark McGuigan, at the end of a 4-day visit to Beijing. Mr McGuigan also said that Canada is ready to sell China many types of defensive weapons.

The external affairs minister announced the Chinese have agreed to hand over a lump-sum payment of $340,000 to cover all compensation claims since 1949. This represents just over one-third of the million the Canadian Government has been asking for on behalf of Canadian companies and individuals whose property or goods were expropriated after the communist revolution.

Although McGuigan was vague about who would benefit from the settlement, Canadian officials said the Bata shoe company was one of the major claimants.

POLISH AIRLINER LANDS AT TEMPELHOF, BERLIN

LD221750 Hamburg DPA in German 1729 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Berlin, 22 Aug (DPA)--A Polish airliner landed this evening at Tempelhof Airport in Berlin. A U.S. spokesman confirmed that it touched down at 1709 GMT. Further details as to whether this is a hijacking are not known. Tempelhof Airport has a civil and military section and is in the U.S. sector. As soon as it landed, the plane was surrounded by military police.

The Berlin police have confirmed that the Polish LOT airline which has landed had been hijacked. There are reportedly 39 people on board the plane. The plane was hijacked on an internal flight from Breslau to Warsaw.

Hijacker Surrenders

LD221856 Hamburg DPA in German 1841 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 22 Aug (DPA)--For the second time within 5 weeks an airliner of the Polish LOT Airlines has been hijacked to West Berlin. It touched down just after 1700 GMT at Tempelhof Airport in the U.S. sector. The presumed hijacker at once surrendered to the U.S. authorities. This was announced by an official quarter. There were 39 passengers and a crew of 4 on board the plane which was on a domestic flight between Wroclaw and Warsaw.

The Antonov-24 airliner, bearing flight No 726, touched down at 1707 GMT, according to the U.S. authorities. It was the fifth time a Polish airliner has been hijacked to West Berlin since 1969. It is not clear how the hijacker forced the pilot to change course and land at Tempelhof. U.S. military police at once ringed the plane. West Berlin police have been posted around the airport.

Two Passengers Request Asylum

LD222358 Hamburg DPA in German 2338 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Berlin, 22 Aug (DPA)--Two Polish passengers of the LOT airliner which was hijacked to West Berlin on Saturday evening have asked for political asylum at Tempelhof Airport. They are two men aged 19 and 22, the [words indistinct] of the West Berlin police said shortly after midnight local time. The hijacker of the twin-engined airliner, 25-year old Jerzy P. from Warsaw, has been turned over by the U.S. authorities to the West Berlin police, who will make further investigations.

It is expected that the hijacker will appear on Sunday before an examining magistrate, who will issue an arrest warrant. U.S. and German sources said that there are two U.S. citizens among the passengers; all the others are Poles. The Polish plane, which took off at 1745 local time from Wroclaw for Warsaw, is to fly back to Poland on Sunday. Different figures were given about the number of persons on board. While the Berlin police assumed there were 39 persons, including the hijacker, the U.S. authorities spoke of 41 persons. Shortly after the plane landed, the number on board was given as 43, including 4 crew members.

Airliner Returns to Warsaw

LD230256 Hamburg DPA in German 0049 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Summary] Berlin, 23 Aug (DPA)--The hijacked Polish airliner took off from Tempelhof Airport on its way back to Warsaw at 0117 this morning, according to West Berlin police and the U.S. authorities.

West Berlin police said that 36 persons, including the crew, were on board for the return journey. The arrested hijacker has remained in Berlin, as have two Polish passengers who have asked for asylum.

Hijacker Explains Action

LD230850 Hamburg DPA in German 0049 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 23 August (DPA) The 25-year old hijacker of the Polish airliner forced to land in West Berlin on Saturday evening has told the West Berlin investigating authorities that his reason for the hijacking and flight to the West was dissatisfaction with the conditions in Poland. The man, who lives in Warsaw and has been identified as Jerzy Dygas, is a messenger by trade. In 1979, he had made an abortive attempt to escape to the West via third countries, as DPA was told early on Sunday by the police state security force. The hijacker stated that the Polish authorities had forbidden him permission to leave after this abortive escape attempt.

The man stressed that he definitely wanted to remain in the West. He will today appear before an examining magistrate on strong suspicion of "attacking air traffic" and after an arrest warrant has been issued, will have to appear before the West Berlin Regional Court. The authorities stressed that the questioning of all the passengers and crew and the investigations as a whole went "without difficulties and complications". The 25 year-old Dygas confessed immediately.

SCHMIDT URGES GREATER CARE IN U.S. STATEMENTS

NC231513 Paris AFP in English 1503 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Aug (AFP)--West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today said that the United States should constantly measure the impact of its political statements on Europe to avoid further upsetting citizens there.

In an interview on West German television, Mr Schmidt was questioned on "surprise" decisions by Washington, such as President Ronald Reagan's recent announcement that he had authorized production of neutron bombs.

The White House should avoid a situation where "the Italians, Dutch, Scandinavians and Germans believe one day that the USSR is more willing to negotiate and reduce its arms than their own allies", the chancellor said.

It is thus necessary that U.S. politicians and journalists, as well as their European colleagues, understand that the people of Europe should not be disturbed further. "They must be given a certain security regarding the possibilities the future could have in store for us," he said.

SCHMIDT ON BREZHNEV VISIT, MEETING WITH HONECKER

LD211334 Hamburg DPA in German 1218 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 August (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has refused, before the Federal Cabinet's final decisions on 2 and 3 September, to commit himself publicly in the coalition dispute over the financing of an employment program. But in an interview today with "ARD--Topics of the Day" [television program] Schmidt hinted at a possible compromise.

In the interview, the federal chancellor thought a meeting between himself and GDR Council of State Chairman Erich Honecker conceivable at a date "in a relatively short period of time" after the visit to Bonn by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev. For Brezhnev's visit, a date in November was being sought.

On the question of neutron weapons, Schmidt referred to the attitude adopted by the Federal Government in 1978 according to which stationing in German territory was only conceivable if the alliance together decided on stationing in other countries and if the arms control negotiations to be held should remain fruitless.

Comments on Neutron Bombs

NC211730 Paris AFP in English 1729 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 Aug (AFP)--West Germany will allow neutron bombs to be stationed on its territory only if "very specific conditions" are fulfilled, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said here today. In a television interview, Mr Schmidt reiterated Bonn's position of 1978, when then U.S. President Jimmy Carter was considering manufacture and deployment of the neutron bomb in Western Europe--a project that met with opposition among U.S. allies.

Without giving any details of the conditions that had to be met, Mr Schmidt noted that West Germany had given "very exhaustive and serious" attention to the issue in 1978. "I see no reason why the German Government should change its stance fundamentally at this time," he said.

Mr Schmidt suggested that attention now be turned to how the neutron bomb could be included in a comprehensive policy of arms control and be made a topic of negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. There was currently no question of deployment of such a weapon on West German territory, he said.

"At the time, it was not just a matter of German territory, but also of other territories if the (Atlantic) alliance decided in that direction and only if negotiations on arms control (SALT-2) failed," Mr Schmidt said. "In order to dispel any confusion," he added, "I would like to say that this question has nothing to do with the talks scheduled in September between (U.S. Secretary of State Alexander) Haig and (Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey) Gromyko aimed at opening formal nego ions of mutual arms limitations."

The neutron bomb, he held, amounted to "artillery ammunition and warheads for short-range rockets with which one cannot hit Soviet territory."

Meanwhile, Mr Schmidt confirmed that the West Germans were hoping for a visit in November by Soviet Leader Leonid Brezhnev. "I would not like to mention a date because we are still making arrangements," he said. "We are doing our utmost to see that it takes place in November, and I can easily imagine a meeting with (East German Leader Erich) Honecker a relatively short time later."

GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS ON N-WEAPON, HAIG VISIT

Weapons Stationing Discussed

LD211122 Hamburg DPA in German 0958 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 Aug (DPA)--The Federal Government knows nothing of an alleged intention by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger to urge the British Government to station neutron weapons with the Rhine Army. Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl told DPA today that he ruled this out and considered it to be politically absurd that the United States intended with London's aid to exert certain pressures on the Federal Republic.

Ruehl stressed that the possible introduction of neutron weapons in the alliance would first require a decision by the alliance. Then there would have to be consultations with the countries in which the weapons would be stationed--in this case with the Federal Republic--in order to arrive at a joint decision.

Haig's Berlin Trip

LD211138 Hamburg DPA in German 0945 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 August (DPA)--U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig will make an "important political statement" on the United States' special relationship with the divided city during his forthcoming first visit to Berlin. Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl today told the press in Bonn that Haig himself had expressed the wish to visit Berlin. The U.S. secretary of state wanted to underline the U.S. rights and obligations for the security and freedom of Berlin.

Haig is expected on 13 September on a 2-day visit to Bonn, where talks with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher are on the program. As a part of this visit he also intends to fly to Berlin.

Neutron Weapon Endorsed

LD221143 Hamburg DPA in German 1107 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Aug (DPA)--Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl has endorsed the neutron weapon which, in his words, is to replace "only other" nuclear weapons already existing and available today. On Radio Free Berlin on Saturday, he also said "it should replace them, since it would cause fewer losses and less devastation for both country and people than the nuclear arms existing on both sides."

Ruehl clearly criticized the discussion surrounding this new weapon which made less mention of Soviet nuclear arms targeted on the Federal Republic than of opportunities to improve NATO's nuclear armament for the preservation and strengthening of deterrance, and thus of disarmament negotiations. In the interest of a common policy with the allies, German public discusson should be prevented from sinking "into the abyss of absurdity" which opens up "when the German people are taken for a ride on a ghost train of war which only has U.S. nuclear ghosts on board." Following the ghost train ride, the frightened public was then led to the market square where "the great, magnificently painted Russian peace bazaar" was located. Under such conditions there could be no reasonable political arrangement with the allies and "no reasonable political arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union," the government spokesman emphasized. The interview was prereleased by the federal press office.

CDU'S KOHL SUPPORTS NEUTRON WEAPON DECISION

LD211624 Hamburg DPA in German 1558 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Mannheim, 21 Aug (DPA)--CDU chairman and opposition leader in the Bundestag Helmut Kohl has come out without reservation in favor of the neutron weapon decisions. In view of "Soviet excess arming" Kohl, in an interview with MANNHEIMER FORGEN (Saturday edition) saw no reason to repeal the agreements made in 1978 and 1979 on the deployment of neutron weapons.

The CDU chairman emphasized that there are things one can criticize about the American alliance partner, but this is no reason to revile the Americans "like a trooper and in a degrading manner" as done today by leading Social Democrats. These critics are "either foolish or incapable of recognizing that they are playing the role of useful idiots for the other side." The impending visit of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig to Berlin shows "that our American friends continue to stand by us." An editorial version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

BANI-SADR'S WIFE, SON ARRIVE ON AIR FRANCE FLIGHT

OW220540 Hong Kong AFP in English 0524 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 22 Aug (AFP) -- Osra Bani-Sadr, wife of deposed Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, arrived here today on a regular Air France flight from Beijing via Karachi, and was later delayed at the airport, airport sources said. Mrs Bani-Sadr and her eight-year-old son 'Ali were welcomed by Firuze Bani-Sadr, daughter of the former president who was already in France, when they arrived at 6:30 a.m. (0430 GMT).

Mrs Bani-Sadr was reported not to have a visa to enter France and immigration officers were seeking a decision from the External Relations Ministry on whether to allow her to join her husband who is living in exile here after fleeing from Iran late last month.

NC221949 Paris AFP in English 1943 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 22 Aug (AFP) -- Osra Bani-Sadr, wife of deposed Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, arrived here today to join her husband in exile and said she left Iran because she was afraid for her eight-year-old son.

"The terror that reigns in Iran now is even more terrible than that under the regime of the shah." Mrs Bani-Sadr said in a telephone interview from her husband's home in a Paris subu

The ex-president's wife, who arrived with her son on a regular Air France flight from Karachi, refused to give details of her journey out of Iran. But she made it clear that she only recently left her homeland where, she said, "some people are thinking regretfully about the past and even the shah." The current situation was very difficult and Iran could become a theater of conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union, she said, though she felt the current regime was playing both sides.

Mrs Bani-Sadr, who has obtained official permission to live in France, said: "Many Iranians are disappointed with the revolution and wish for change. I will only return to Iran if the situation changes."

The couple has been married for 18 years, she said, but she hoped soon to find a house which would shelter her from the journalistic and political gang surrounding her husband.

IRAN COMMANDO CHIEF WILL TAKE ON MORE 'MISSIONS'

NC211641 Paris AFP in English 1636 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 21 Aug (AFP) -- The head of the commando which last week seized an Iranian gunboat off the Spanish coast, former Admiral Kamal Habibollahi, today announced he would soon be leaving France to undertake "new missions".

At a press conference at the Paris headquarters of the Azadegan organisation, the former admiral said the 22-member commando had achieved its intended goals in hijacking the Tabarzin--to give publicity to the nationalist opposition and show that the struggle continued against the Tehran regime. The former admiral, who was the last navy chief under the deposed shah, did not say whether other commando members would be leaving the country with him.

During his stay here, he would place himself "under the protection of French laws and would abide by them", he said.

FOREIGN MINISTER CHEYSSON DEPARTS FOR INDIA

NC221237 Paris AFP in English 1221 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 21 Aug (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson left here today for a two-day visit to India where he is to meet with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and other Indian leaders. The trip aimed to expand French-Indian relations and redefine France's policy in Asia, French diplomatic sources said. It also came within the context of the new French Socialist Government's desire for policies more sympathetic to the Third World, the sources said. They noted that Mr Cheysson recently visited Mexico and Algeria which, along with India, he considered key Third World nations. Mr Cheysson's talks in India will cover bilateral cooperation, major international problems, the southeast Asian situation and development.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON PROVIDING REACTOR FOR IRAQ

LD211106 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] France agrees to rebuild the Tammuz reactor, but on the other hand the Iraqis must guarantee it will be used exclusively for peaceful purposes. In other words, negotiations between the two countries will be continued to define the security conditions under which work will begin on the new installation. Speaking to (Marc Crepin), the details from Claude Cheysson, who took part, of course, in the meeting with the Iraqi number two, Tariq 'Aziz.

[Begin recording] [Cheysson] The visit was a very full one. I would also underline that it is exceptional for the president of the republic, the prime minister and five or six ministers to see one envoy from a foreign country. That demonstrates the close connections between Iraq and France.

[Question] What guarantees does the government expect about the use of the Tammuz reactor for peaceful purposes?

[Answer] The Iraqi Government shares our concern for the development of modern technology, including nuclear technology, for peaceful purposes. That is the starting point for discussions which will take place between the experts, the specialists, to see how this peaceful development is carried on, not only in the nuclear field but also in other areas. [end recording]

'AZIZ SAYS FRANCE TO BOOST ARMS SALES TO IRAQ

NC211506 Paris AFP in English 1435 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 21 Aug (AFP)--France is willing to boost its sales of arms to Baghdad, Iraqi Vice Premier Tariq 'Aziz said here today after winding up a three-day visit to Paris for talks with French leaders. But Mr 'Aziz also said in an interview with the newspaper LE MONDE that no agreement had yet been signed for reconstruction of the French-built nuclear reactor at Tammuz that was destroyed by Israeli jets on June 7. "We kept to generalities," the Number Two Iraqi said of his talks here. "I am not a nuclear technician. Experts from our two countries will finalize the details of our cooperation."

The new Socialist government in France has said that it will honor all outstanding civil and military contracts with Baghdad. Asked about sales of new arms, French foreign minister Claude Cheysson said last night: "All areas of cooperation will be pursued." In talks with French Defense Minister Charles Hernu, Mr 'Aziz expressed Iraq's desire to buy new weapons from France, particularly Mirage-2000 or F-1 combat planes. France has already signed a number of military contracts with Baghdad, including two for the supply of 60 Mirage jets. The first four were delivered at the beginning of this year.

FOREIGN MINISTRY NOTE ON U.S. MANEUVERS OFF LIBYA

AU221930 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Aug (ANSA)--Italy was informed on Friday, August 14, of the plans of the United States Navy 6th Fleet to conduct maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra, in the Mediterranean off the Libyan coast, a Foreign Ministry note disclosed today in response to an editorial appearing in today's edition of the Rome newspaper, LA REPUBBLICA. The information on the maneuver was conveyed by the American ambassador to Rome, Maxwell Rabb.

The REPUBBLICA editorial, over the byline of managing editor Eugenio Scalfari, insisted that the ambassador failed to explain to the Italian foreign minister, Emilio Colombo, that the fleet maneuver was viewed by Washington as a "show of strength" for Libya. To support this idea, the editor referred to the fact that President Ronald Reagan was closely involved with his navy chiefs in the planning of the fleet exercise and gave a precise order on the procedure to follow in case of an "incident" with Libyan air force planes.

According to the Foreign Ministry note, the maneuver which led to the shooting down of two Libyan SU-22 fighters by U.S. Navy F-14's early Wednesday morning cannot be considered as anything other than routine maneuvers "as was declared in the of icial communique of the Washington government to the United Nations Security Council and confirmed in Brussels by the Americans on the NATO Council," the note said.

To refute the REPUBBLICA claim that the site of the maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra was chosen to challenge Tripoli, the Foreign Ministry note recalled that American fleets conducted exercises in these waters "in July 1977, in March, July and September 1978, in April and July 1979 and, finally, in June and September 1980."

Addressing itself to Libya's unilateral proclamation extending its territorial waters out to a 200 mile limit, the Foreign Ministry said that Italy has shown considerable reserve since October 1973, reserve reconfirmed one year later within the United Nations."

The note added, "the Italian position coincides, moreover, with that of many other nations, including for example, the Soviet Union which, in December 1973 informed Italy that it had given Libya the understanding that it was not willing to recognize the legitimacy of this unilateral measure."

FOREIGN, DEFENSE MINISTERS DISCUSS NEUTRON WEAPON

AU211550 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Aug (ANSA)--Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo told a joint meeting of the house Foreign Affairs and Defense Commissions today that the Soviet Union has 250 SS-20 missiles already installed, making a total of 750 nuclear-tipped warheads already in place. Moreover, the number of such missiles installed increases at a rate of one every five days, the minister continued.

Colombo and Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio were briefing the lower house commissions on developments over Euromissiles and the Reagan administration's recent decision to make and deploy the neutron bomb. They reiterated the positions already set forth yesterday before the Senate's Foreign Affairs and Defense Commissions.

The foreign minister today, as yesterday, reiterated the Italian Government's commitment to promote negotiations with the USSR for a balanced reduction of nuclear weapons in Europe. He left more purely technical and military matters up to the defense minister to outline. Colombo stressed that Italy's urgings to negotiate had been balanced and directed to both the superpowers.

Colombo said he plumped for the opening of negotiations from the moment of his first encounter with members of the Reagan administration last February and just a few days ago sent a letter urging disarmament talks to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

Towards the USSR, Italy has kept up a steady insistence that Moscow overcome its position of reluctance to engage in negotiations. This Italian pressure was especially felt in the three encounters that Colombo had with his Soviet colleague Andrei Gromyko over the past year. The two foreign ministers are to meet again shortly in New York within the framework of the U.N. Assembly meeting there. "This will give me a further chance to push in this direction" Colombo said.

Referring to the U.S. decision to produce and deploy the neutron bomb, Colombo insisted on the need for the ten European Economic Communisty states to deepen their political cooperation, extending it to include matters of security, with a view to reestablishing a balance of force between East and West.

The Libyan-American air clash Wednesday over the Mediterranean was called "extremely troubling" by Colombo. He said that Italy was actively working to lessen and if possible eliminate tensions in the area. Colombo added that the Libyan Government was "keeping in contact with us." However, Colombo called "arbitrary" the Libyan decision to consider the Gulf of Sidra as encompassing its territorial waters. This decision has always been met with serious reservations by the Italian Government.

Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio, speaking specifically of military matters linked to government decisions, stressed the need to reestablish a balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact nations. This balance has been broken by Soviet deployment of SS-20 missiles, he said. Lagorio insisted on the need to quickly open negotiations that would make the manufacture of new weaponry superfluous.

He stressed that there could be no talks with the Soviet Union on a reduction in nuclear arms without installation of the Euromissiles, because the West would not know what to negotiate with, seeing its current military inferiority. According to Lagorio, the link between modernization of the nuclear arsenal and the advancement of negotiations is essential. Waiting for the eventual positive conclusion of the talks would make the military gap unbridgeable and the negotiations themselves misleading and hypocritical, he claimed.

The current debate in the House and Senate commissions was urged by all the Italian parties after the Italian Government's decision to start building launching sites for 112 cruise missiles sometime in the coming months at the NATO base at Comiso in southern Sicily.

The Italian positions as stated by Colombo before the joint sessions yesterday and today was approved by both houses of the Italian Parliament in December 1979, thus the present debates will not be followed by voting since the earlier vote cannot be reversed.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON SOMALI MINISTER'S VISIT

AU221542 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 26 Aug (ANSA)--Italy and Somalia "have a lot of things to do together," according to a statement issued today following a meeting in Rome between Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio and his Somali counterpart Omar Hagi Mohamed. The communique said the two men reiterated "the friendship and the spirit of cooperation" characterizing relations between their countries.

Hagi Mohamed and Lagorio reportedly discussed problems connected with bilateral technical cooperation matters. The Somali minister invited Lagorio to visit Mogadishu.

PAPER: KIPRIANOU'S MOSCOW VISIT MAY BE CANCELED

NC221125 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] According to information received by I SIMERINI, the date of President Kiprianou's visit to Moscow has not yet been fixed; government circles are again expressing fears that Moscow will probably renege again. We were specifically informed that Ankara has exerted diplomatic efforts to convince the Soviet Union to again cancel Mr Kiprianou's visit to Moscow.

As it is already known, Mr Kiprianou was invited to visit Moscow in May 1979, but the visit was canceled at the last minute following a unilateral decision by Moscow, which did not furnish any explanations. According to unconfirmed reports, Moscow's unilateral decision to cancel Mr Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union in 1979 was due to diplomatic representations by Ankara.

Answering questions, the spokesman said there is no information about a visit to Cyprus by FRG Foreign Minister Genscher. He also said he does not want to comment on Mr Genscher's statements in Athens in connection with the Cyprus problem.

Requested to comment on a report that the president's visit to Moscow might be canceled, the spokesman stressed that the visit will definitely take place in autumn.

Agreement on 18 October

NC211710 Athens NEWS in English 21 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Yeorgios Rallis and official opposition leader Andreas Papandreou have agreed on October 18 as the date for new Greek general elections, an authoritative source said yesterday. According to a REUTER report, President Konstandinos Karamanlis was given the news in separate meetings with the two men Wednesday and Thursday, the source said.

In mid-September, the source said, Parliament would be dissolved and Mr Rallis would be told by the president to form a new government for the election period.

After an agreement between Mr Rallis' New Democracy Party and Mr Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK), the source said, the new Rallis government would include new ministers of Interior, Justice and Public Order, as demanded by the PASOK leader. The changes, which are provided for in the constitution, were made to ensure the impartiality of ministries directly involved in the elections, the source noted.

The vote for a new 300-seat Parliament will come a month before expiration of the four-year term of the present body, elected on November 20, 1979. The October date was seen as a bid to beat the winter weather which substantially reduces the number of voters in mountain villages.

Prime Minister Rallis presided over a Cabinet meeting last night and expounded New Democracy Party directives in the light of the forthcoming elections.

NC211050 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 21 Aug 81

Press Conference

NC211941 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Shortly before 2000, at the Grande Bretagne Hotel, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and FRG Foreign Minister Genscher held a joint press conference. At the beginning of the press conference, both Mr Mitsotakis, who spoke first, and Mr Genscher, who spoke next, stressed the excellent Greek-German relations and the absolute agreement between the two countries on the questions discussed during Mr Genscher's meeting with President Karamanlis, Prime Minister Rallis and Mr Mitsotakis.

Answering questions by Greek and foreign newsmen, Mr Genscher said that he considers Greece's integration with the European Communities as a fact of historical and at the same time of determinative importance for the future.

Answering a question on the Cyprus problem, Mr Genscher said that West Germany is particularly interested in stability and the restoration of trusting relations in the southeast Mediterranean region. Rapprochement of views on the question of Cyprus would constitute an important step which would have positive repercussions even beyond the circle of the directly interested parties. For this reason, he said, we watch with particular attention every hopeful effort that takes place within the framework of the Cypriot talks. Mr Genscher stressed that the interested parties must take advangage of the present opportunity to dare proceed with the move for a definite solution. The FRG foreign minister voiced the certainty that this goal will be advanced and expressed the hope that the interested parties will show willingness for conciliation and that it will soon become possible to work out a compromising solution that would avert the partitioning of the island.

Answering another question, Mr Genscher said that Greece is an important link with the countries of Africa and Asia and expressed the certainty that out of this fact fresh prospects will open for the European Community and the Western industrial countries.

In his opening address, among other things, Mr Mitsotakis said: [Begin Mitsotakis recording] This is the first visit of the FRG foreign minister to our country following Greece's integration with the European Community. And this visit takes place at a period when many and major questions, which are occupying us, are at a crucial and always interesting turn.

As it was natural, we had the opportunity to talk with Mr Genscher--to start with--about problems of interest to the two countries. As you know, Greek-German relations are excellent; there are no problems between our two countries. There is solely a permanent and firm goal to broaden still further our cooperation which is taking place in all fields. And, naturally, as of 1 January when Greece became a member of the European Community we must regularly exchange views on the problems of the Community as well--the general problems and problems particularly of interest to Greece.

But as is natural, we have discussed with Mr Genscher, and we shall continue our talks on, major world problems of today, on the Middle East problem which is of special interest to our country because of our proximity to and special relations with these countries; about the problem of Poland and the problem of East-West relations, the Madrid Conference, about all the problems which are occupying the entire world right now. [end recording]

Next to address the newsmen was Mr Genscher.

[Begin Genscher recording in German with superimposed Greek translation] I find myself in the very pleasant position, a position, however, that should not cause absolutely any surprise, to fully stress that I fully agree with the positions of my Greek counterpart.

I am very pleased to be in Greece, the first visit since Greece's integration with the European Community. The talks which I had today again proved how much both government's agree on all the current international problems, on our appraisals concerning the issues that currently face the world. And I am glad because this is not the first time that this has happened. We had previous discussions within the European Community, within the Western defense alliance, and we again arrived at the conclusion that both Greece and West Germany set off from [words indistinct] seeking common goals, something which in my opinion constitutes valuable enrichment of the goals of the European Community and of the Western alliance. [end recording]

DPA Account

LD212238 Hamburg DPA in German 1911 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Athens, 21 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, speaking to journalists in Athens on Friday evening, has praised the great sense of responsibility with which the Greek Government, during the present difficult phase, is trying to contribute towards solving the Cyprus question.

Genscher said it is very important for the dialogue about the Cyprus question not to be disrupted now. The Federal Government is very interested in a solution to the Cyprus question since it involves friendly and allied countries. It believes that its most effective contribution would be to underline to all parties involved its concern in a speedy and just solution.

The minister underlined the valuable contribution made by Greece as a member of the European Community, and the part which Greece as a link between the Community and the states of the Middle East and Balkan Peninsula could play.

Prior to his talks with his Greek opposite number, Konstandinos Mitsotakis, which will be continued on Saturday morning, Genscher met in Athens also the socialist opposition leader Andreas Papandreou for a talk on European and international questions.

Dinner Addresses

NC212209 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] At noon, President of the Republic Karamanlis received FRG Foreign Minister Genscher with whom he had a talk for 1 and 1/2 hours. Later, the FRG minister visited Prime Minister Rallis and had a long talk with him. In the evening, Genscher and Mitsotakis began their talks on bilateral and international issues and then gave a press interview. In the interview the two ministers noted the excellent Greek-German relations and the identity of views on the issues that were discussed with both the president of the republic and the prime minister.

Replying to questions by Greek and foreign journalists, Genscher said that he considers Greece's entrance into the EEC a fact of historical and, at the same time, determinative significance for the future.

In reply to a question connected with the Cyprus problem, Genscher said that his country is especially interested in the stability and the restoration of relations of trust in the area of the southeastern Mediterranean. For this reason he said we follow with special attention every effort that is taking place within the framework of the Cypriot negotiations. The interested parties, he added, should take advantage of the current opportunity and dare the movement for a permanent and definitive solution, avoiding the island's partition.

In reply to another question, Genscher said that Greece can constitute a significant connecting link with the Arab world and Asia and expressed the certainty that this fact will create new prospects for the EEC and the industrial countries.

This evening Mitsotakis gave an official dinner in honor of Genscher, during which the FRG minister referred to the very close and friendly relations between the two countries. These relations, he said, are based on common values and aims; like man's dignity, human rights, the state of law and democracy. After mentioning that the spiritual roots of Greece are to be found in ancient Greece he noted that currently the EEC is undergoing a decisive test. Either it will achieve a new dynamic start to consolidate and strengthen its identify, or Europeans will remain bound to an obsolete nationalistic egoism and will not be able to deal with internal problems; with the result that the Community will then be threatened by stagnation and perhaps by advancing dissolution.

The FRG minister noted that currently dynamic political decisions are needed. Periods of international tensions and crises, like the current one, in the past gave new stimuli to the European idea. Europe currently should reach practical conclusions. Europe, he went on to say, constitutes a part of the democractic West. The guarantee for its security is its participation in the Atlantic alliance. Genscher mentioned that his country has hailed Greece's return to the alliance's military wing and said that only a strong alliance capable of acting makes our policy credible, a policy which aims at maintaining peace.

Federal Germany, he said, is especially interested in the stability and the restoration of relations of trust in the area of the southeastern Mediterranean. The approximation of viewpoints on the Cyprus issue, he stressed, would consitute a significant step that would have positive repercussions beyond the circle of the directly concerned parties. For this reason, Bonn following with special attention every hopeful effort that is taking place within the framework of the inter-Cyriot negotiations.

Genscher proposed to all interested parties to take advantage of the opportunity and dare move toward a definitive solution of the problem. Finally, the German official expressed the certainty that political courage and insight will contribute to the promotion of this goal.

Addressing the FRG minister, Mitsotakis, among other things, mentioned that the proposals on the Cyprus problem, which the Turkish Cypriot side recently submitted, had been especially disappointing. They do not at all correspond to the expectations that had been created prior to their submission. Nevertheless, he continued, the dialogue has not been discontinued, thanks to the political ability of the Greek Cypriot leadership and, he said, we shall support it in the hope that finally it will lead to the problem's just solution. Mitsotakis also ascertained that the disturbed international situation and tension should not deter us from the pursuit of ways for the salvation of detente.

Referring to EEC issues, he said: We support the effort that is being made to improve political cooperation with political unification as the ultimate goal.

DPA Report

LD211254 Hamburg DPA in German 1145 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Athens, 21 Aug (DPA)--The Europeans should be "mindful of their own identity and develop thedetermined will for the capacity to act economically, politically and in security policy" in order to deal with the still difficult international situation. This view was put forward by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher at a dinner today in Athens given in his honor by his Greek opposite number Konstandinos Mitsotakis.

Genscher described the present discussion on questions of security policy as an expression of the lack of a European capacity to act in the tense relationship between West and East. He warned against cheap anti-Americanism and stressed that Europe's place was not between the two great powers but that it was part of the democratic West.

In this connection, Genscher welcomed Greece's return to NATO military integration in October of last year, promised that German defense aid to Greece would continue, and backed the Greek Government's efforts to reach an agreement with Turkey. Genscher said that an accommodation on the Cyprus question would be an important step for the stability and restoration of trusting relations in the southeast Mediterranean region.

Athens Talks End

NC221054 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Following a long private meeting with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis this morning, FRG Foreign Minister Genscher concluded his talks in Athens. Today the two foreign ministers made a general review of the questions--on both bilateral and international issues--which they have discussed. They particularly dwelt on Common Market and the Cyprus questions.

At noon, Mr Mitsotakis will attend an official luncheon to be given in his honor by Mr Genscher at the Grande Bretagne Hotel. This morning Mr Genscher laid a wreath at the German military cemetery in the Dhionisos area. Later, accompanied by deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs Rendis, Mr Genscher laid a wreath at the tomb of the unknown soldier.

Final Interview

NC231941 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Text] After his 2-day official visit to Athens, FRG Foreign Minister Genscher began a 3-day holiday in Greece. With EEC Executive Committee Chairman Gaston Thorn and Spanish Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo, he is on a cruise in the Aegean Islands. Before departing, Genscher gave an exclusive interview to the Greek Radio Television News Service.

In reply to a question on conclusions he'd reached from the talks he had with the Greek Government, Genscher said: Once again I have been impressed by the very broad coincidence of views between Greece and Germany on international issues, issues of common interest and on issues that concern the strengthening of the EEC's ability for political action to enhance Europe's protagonist role.

In reply to a question on the significance of Greece's position in the EEC and NATO, he said: I always believed that Greece's entrance into the EEC was a gain for the EEC, not only because of your country's intellectual, artistic and cultural tradition, but because of the great respect Greece enjoys internationally and, furthermore, because Greece has good relations with the countries of your area, the Balkans, and with Middle Eastern and Arab world countries. In any case, for us Greece's entrance into the EEC means good cooperation with the Arab countries. And this is significant for the rest of West Europe.

In reply to the question on his personal opinion of the FRG's new partner in the EEC, after the 7 months since Greece's official entry, Genscher said: Greece is a creative partner, and this constitutes a gain for the community.

Then the FRG foreign minister replied to a question on the importance of the Greek emigrants' community in his country. The Greeks who live in our country, Genscher said, are not only likable, they are also welcome as cooperative people for the further development of the FRG economy.

The Greek emigrants, he added, are good ambassadors for the excellent relations between Greece and Germany.

Finally, in reply to the question of the international problem which occupies him most as a politician, Genscher said: I believe that the most important thing is to adopt a constructive mentality in order to stop a new arms race. Thus [word indistinct] and despite prophecies we shall guarantee from now, the beginning of the decade, a decade for the limitation of military arms. We must work to guarantee peace.

PAPANDREOU STATEMENT ON U.S.-LIBYA INCIDENT

NC211705 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] In connection with the U.S.-Libyan air battle, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou, and the party's Executive Bureau have made the following extremely cautious statement in which they neither condemn the United States nor support Al-Qadhdhafi:

"We express deep concern over the consequences which might result for world peace from exercises and from the provocative presence of superpowers, particularly in delicate regions such as the Mediterranean and the Baltic Seas."

PAPANDREOU ACCUSES GOVERNMENT OF USING BRIBERY

NC221544 Athens NEWS in English 22 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Late last night PASOK Chairman Papandreou issued a statement charging the government with preelection bribery and attempts to "terrorize public servants" with unfavorable transfers. The government was also indulging in persecutions of syndicalist leaders, Mr Papandreou said.

Claiming that some high-ranking career public servants were "contributing" in the implementation of the government's "vain plans," Papandreou warned same that even though his party had no intention of introducing the spoils system after the election, nevertheless "we demand today and will require tomorrow the most ardent declaration to duty" on the part of public servants.

Public service legality will be restored after the election, Mr Papandreou said, and all those who lost their jobs for political reasons will be reinstated.

Meanwhile, the PASOK Party newspaper EXORMISI yesterday said Mr Papandreou will abolish the Ministry of Coordination, Commerce, Industry and Energy when he comes to power.

PLO'S 'ARAFAT ON RELATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT

AU221413 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 2000 GMT on 21 August 1981 carries, as part of its weekly "Politics on Friday" program, an 8-minute undated "exclusive" interview given in Beirut by Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, to Austrian Television correspondent Antonia Rados. In the recorded interview, which is conducted in English with superimposed German translation, 'Arafat first stresses that the Palestinian issue is the "crux of the Middle East crisis" and the Palestinian people's right to set up an independent state. He then commends the role of the Saudi King Khalid and Crown Prince Fahd in bringing about the cease-fire in Lebanon, saying that the two "did their best" and that "we are very grateful for what they have done." Asked about the PLO's response to Egyptian President As-Sadat's recent trip to Washington and his efforts to resolve the Palestinian problem, 'Arafat merely states that "we have no information about it" and goes on to reject the Camp David agreement as "a new slavery."

Having noted the "crimes" committed against the Palestinian people and their suffering in both "diaspora" and "under occupation," 'Arafat refers in the next part of the interview to the Palestinians' "many friends in the West," singling out "our friend Kreisky" as being "at the top of them."

Commenting on the "PLO affair in Vienna," which involved the arrest on 29 July and the subsequent deportation of two Palestinians who attempted to smuggle arms into Austria and who were in contact with the PLO representative in Vienna, Ghazi Husayn, 'Arafat says that "the issue is being exaggerated" because "some sources are trying to spoil the very good relationship between us and Austria and especially His Excellency Chancellor Kreisky." "As soon as we were informed about what had happened," 'Arafat goes on to say, "we immediately withdrew our representative, with the Austrian Government's approval." Ghazi Husayn is now "under interrogation" and the "investigations" of the affair continue, according to 'Arafat. He calls it a "mistake" that the PLO representative "contacted these two persons."

The excerpt from the interview with 'Arafat mentioned in the first referent item, which Vienna Television broadcast on 20 August, included an additional passage of 'Arafat's interview not broadcast on 21 August, in which the PLO chairman commented on the successor to Husayn as PLO representative in Vienna. Asked whether the PLO had already selected someone to fill the vacant post, 'Arafat says that "the procedures come first." Explaining the nature of the procedures, 'Arafat says that "I have to send a list of names and the government in Vienna has to accept one of them."

AL-'ASIFAH THREATENS AUSTRIAN AUTHORITIES, PRESS

[Unattributed report: "Insolent Threat"]

[Text] A Palestinian group calling itself "General Command of the Al-'Asifah Forces" warned "the Austrian authorities and press" against "the consequences of cooperation with the reactionary forces and Zionism" on Wednesday.

The communique sent to the press names "the murderer Salah Khalaf (Abu Iyad--chief of the PLO Secret Service) as one of the leaders of these "reactionary forces." It will be remembered that the "Al-'Asifah" movement, in leaflets disseminated in Damascus, claimed responsibility for the assassination [on 1 May 1981] of Vienna City Councilman Heinz Nittel. This group has also threatened on several occasions to assassinate Chancellor Kreisky. The communique, moreover, speaks of slanderous information to the effect that the two Arabs, who were arrested at Schwechat Airport on 29 July for the illegal importation of weapons, were "members" of the "Al-'Asifah" organization. The press release concludes with the threat to use force of arms against the Austrian authorities and against the press.

POOR WHEAT CROP MEANS LESS WHEAT FOR POLAND

AU211238 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 21 Aug 81 p 16

[Summary] As a result of this year's bad wheat crop--25 percent less than last year and of very poor quality--Austria will only be able to export 200,000 tons of wheat at the most to Poland this year, as against a skeleton treaty quota of over 300,000 tons. According to a Chamber of Agriculture spokesman, over 0,000 tons of wheat are of such poor quality that it can only be used as animal fodder. To avoid major income losses for the farmers concerned, subsidies will be paid in the amount of the difference between bread grain and fodder grain. On the other hand, Austria will have to import less fodder grain this year, the spokesman declared.

POWER IMPORTS--The Federal Power Company has concluded contracts providing for power imports next winter totaling 1.14 billion kilowatt-hours. Power imports from East European countries will be substantially lower than last winter: The CSSR will not export any electric power to Austria at all, and Hungary has cut its export quota to Austria by 2/3 and will supply only 180 million kilowatt-hours, owing to domestic fuel shortages in these countries. Poland, however, has committed itself to supply to Austria the full contracted quota of 400 million kilowatt-hours. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 20 Aug 81 p 7 AU]

OCCUPIERS EVICTED FROM IRANIAN EMBASSY

PA250930 Brussels Domestic Service in French 0900 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] The occupation of the Iranian Embassy in Brussels is over. It was 1015 when gendarmes and police burst into the building to oust about 20 students opposed to the regime of the Ayatollah Khomeyni. Apparently no staff members or diplomats were on the premises during the occupation by these Iranian students, who were shouting slogans hostile to Khomeyni and who had hung a banner from the embassy balcony with the words "Down with the facist and bloody regime of Khomeyni."

The occupation was peaceful, without incident, and lasted 75 minutes. The Iranian students declared that they support the National Iranian Resistance Council led by former President Bani-Sadr, currently a refugee in France. There was an identical embassy occupation this morning in The Hague. All this is part of the demonstrations by Iranian students in Europe who are protesting the daily executions in Iran of leftist militants.

The recall was reported in the Yugoslav press a week ago but not acknowledged in Brussels.

The source said that the government was studying the Yugoslav protest and would give a formal reply very soon.

In the latest incident, two Yugoslav diplomatic employees were shot outside the embassy on August 14. Ten days earlier, another employee, Stojan Djierec, was shot dead by a Yugoslav national from the autonomous region of Kosovo.

QUEEN ASKS FORMER MINISTER TO FORM GOVERNMENT

NC211229 Paris AFP in English 1229 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] The Hague, 21 Aug (AFP)--Queen Beatrix has called on a former Christian Democratic interior minister, Wilhelm de Gaay Fortman, to look into the possibility of quickly forming a government out of the feuding factions in the States-General (Parliament), the queen's secretary reported today.

Fortman was named after a tentative center-left coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, and Neo-Liberals fell apart Tuesday over government spending proposals.

The outgoing Christian Democrat and Liberal coalition, led by Christian Democrat Premier Andreas van Agt, lost its majority in the lower house during legislative elections on May 26. It now only controls 74 of the 150 seats, two short of majority.

After the proposed coalition fell apart on Tuesday, political observers here said that only a right-center coalition would be able to form a government. But Mr Fortman has previously said he supports a left-center coalition, and can be expected to try to strike a compromise between the Christian Democrats, the Socialists and the Neo-Liberals.

Background on Budget Dispute

PM250838 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 14 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague--Now that the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy has refused to cooperate over next year's budget, Prime Minister van Agt has proposed to government formation team members Kremers and Van Thijn that firm agreement should now be reached that next year a cabinet comprising the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA], the Labor Party [PVDA] and Democrats '66 [D'66] will make budget cuts of 4.5 billion guilders. This figure corresponds to the inheritance from the now outgoing Van Agt-Wiegel cabinet.

CDA parliamentary group chairman Van Agt has in the last few weeks been insisting on renegotiation over the economic paragraph of the government accord for the intended cabinet. The PVDA and D'66 are opposed to this, but have now been confronted with the fact that the outgoing cabinet has a 4.5-billion guilder budget deficit by Van Agt. He is now trying to entice the two coalition partners in the new cabinet into an agreement that the 1982 budget will contain cuts of 4.5 billion guilders.

Progress in the talks Thursday evening between CDA, PVDA and D'66 parliamentary group chairmen Van Agt, Den Uyl and Terlouw on this point was slow. Neither Den Uyl nor Terlouw would consider renegotiation of the previous agreements, but the PVDA leader is prepared to help to find a solution to the budget problems for next year. However, Den Uyl wants to avoid any agreement now that there will be a minimum 4.5 billion guilders in cuts next year without an agreement that this would happen within the framework of a program to combat unemployment. The PVDA position is "no blank check."

If the new cabinet is formed in time, this accord could then be used for the presentation of the provisional budget legislation on 15 September which is required by the constitution. This would save Van Agt embarrassment that his outgoing cabinet had failed to produce results in the field of social and economic policy. On the other hand the PVDA and D'66 have little inclination to make definite arrangements during the government formation talks about the drafting of the budget (a purely cabinet matter). On Thursday Terlouw pointed out that the parliamentary parties now involved in the government formation talks could not accept any direct responsibility for the budget.

POLICE PREVENT TAKEOVER OF IRANIAN EMBASSY

NC250928 Paris AFP in English 0924 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] The Hague, 25 Aug (AFP)--A commando of Iranian students briefly occupied the Iranian Embassy here today, but police quickly brought their anti-Khomeyni protest to an end.

Seventeen people were arrested. An official spokesman said. He said the unarmed group, who came from West Germany, had got only as far as the entrance hall after six staff members present barricaded the other doors. When the students refused a police request to end their action, the door was forced and the demonstrators dislodged, the spokesman said.

A spokesman for the 17 said the occupation was the work of members of the Iranian Peykar leftist group as a protest against Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni's regime in Tehran. A Dutch Foreign Ministry official said the posts of ambassador and charge d'affaires at the Iranian Embassy had been vacant for 18 months.

Police kept a permanent watch on the front of the embassy, but the duty officers had been taken by surprise by the speed with which a sort of procession had infiltrated the embassy, he added.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON PARTY, POLICY PROBLEMS

DW241307 Cologne ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Reporter Friedrich Nowottny interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Brahmsee; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Are the Social Democrats and the Free Democrats really in a position now to master the difficult and complicated domestic and foreign policy problems together?

[Answer] I see no reason why they should not be. The word "really" indicates that it is more difficult to agree now than it was before.

[Question] It looks that way.

[Answer] Well, I would say that it is being made to look that way. This is not the case. It was never simple to agree on problems of budget policy. Even if one party ruled alone, it would not be easy because it is impossible in problems of budget and economic policy to do justice to all interests. As regards economizing measures, the opposition finds that in general not enough economizing is being achieved, but then it sharply attacks and criticizes each individual measure. The opposition does not say, however, what it would do itself.

[Question] Is the impression wrong that the Free Democrats are drifting farther and farther away from the Social Democrats with regard to current problems?

[Answer] I don't believe this is so. This could admittedly be the subject of wishful thinking on the part of some individual members of the FDP, but it certainly does not apply to the FDP leadership and the majority of FDP voters. I see that when I look at the charts reflecting the opinions of FDP voters on Mr Strauss or Mr Kohl or, on the other hand, on leading Social Democrats.

[Question] Do you consider the social-liberal coalition to be fully able to act on the difficult problems facing you?

[Answer] This is not the first time that we have faced difficult problems in this coalition, which has governed the country for 12 years now--it is not the first time that we are facing difficult problems in our cooperation. Together we have mastered a number of difficult economic problems. We have also mastered together very difficult foreign policy and arms control policy problems, as well as military strategic problems. I have no doubts at all that together we will decide on the current economic problems. One country by itself cannot master current economic problems. France, England, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy or Germany can't do that, and it remains important for us to act together and not against each other. We depend too much on world markets, not only with regard to the import of oil and raw materials, but also with regard to the export of our products.

[Question] Do you want to bring about an all-party government to solve the budget policy problems?

[Answer] No, I do not want that. I need CDU votes in the Bundestag to change certain laws, but I am far from an all-party government. No, I just wanted to indicate with my remark how far the CDU/CSU is from feeling a sense of responsibility for what is going on in Germany.

[Question] You mentioned the CDU, but maybe you mean the FDP which most definitely has different ideas regarding the balancing of the budget as well as the employment program and its financing?

[Answer] No, I don't mean the FDP. We already discussed the FDP and the coalition.

I really mean the CDU and I mean the opposition leader in the Bonn Bundestag, but I gladly exempt someone such as the Schleswig-Holstein minister president. I talked to him when I was on leave and I definitely gained a more positive impression of him.

[Question] You believe you can manage together with the FDP until 1984?

[Answer] I am proceeding from that assumption.

[Question] The question regarding the financing of the employment program remains unanswered. Will this employment program come, must it come?

[Answer] I believe that here, too, one must clearly see the international interrelationships. A year ago nobody thought that America would have interest rates of more than 20 percent for more than 1 year now. The oil exporting countries that achieve great surpluses today want to invest the money at as high an interest rate as possible. If a rate of 12 percent is paid in say, Frankfurt on Main, Duesseldorf or Hamburg and 22 percent in New York, the money flows to New York. Whoever needs money in Europe for his national economy must pay even higher interest rates than in New York--take France or Italy, for example--rates that are clearly higher than 20 percent, higher than in the United States.

We in Germany pay much lower interest rates than in the United States, and yet our interest rates are too high. That is one of the reasons for the weaker economic activity and for the decline in the economic situation in Germany--rates are too high. If the Federal Bank lowered the interest rates on its own, too much money would probably float abroad where higher rates are paid. It is, therefore, necessary for fewer people to demand credits on the German credit markets. Therefore, we are cutting state credit demands, and this will have a great effect on land budgets also. In this way some leeway will be created to lower German interest rates. But we do not have completely unlimited leeway in this respect.

[Question] Do you mean to say that you are rejecting an employment program because the market is exhausted?

[Answer] No, definitely not. Let me add that we do not have full freedom of action regarding the achievement of much lower interest rates as long as we have such a large deficit in our balance of payments because of the oil price hikes or, to be more specific, as long as we have such a large deficit in our balance of current foreign trade transactions. This is why it is very important to close this gap. The overall development looks quite promising, and we are making great efforts to contribute to this end by reducing oil consumption. But at the same time we must try to do something to strengthen the competitiveness of our economy and to strengthen investments, and this means doing something for employment. To this extent we differ quite clearly from current U.S. economic policy. A certain parallel can be found with French concepts, but on the whole you can only say that we are traveling a middle course between the two extremes being pursued in Paris and Washington.

[Question] When the question of how to finance a program to create jobs was raised, there was always talk about a surtax on wage, income and corporation taxes. Mr Genscher, your coalition partner, considers this matter dead; SPD spokesmen, in contrast, deem it indispensable. What do you think about it?

[Answer] So far I have resisted adopting a definite position on this issue in public, and I will do so today as well. But let me repeat one thing. A surtax which, after all, would be effective only for a very limited period of time--a maximum of 2-3 years--such a surtax for the purpose of financing the normal budget is absolutely out of the question as far as I am concerned.

[Question] Also for the financing of a program to create jobs?

[Answer] A program to create jobs must not necessarily be financed at this time. Measures on employment policy are conceivable which only need to be financed later. If orders are placed today, for example, no financing is yet necessary. It is required only when the capital equipment is delivered and must be paid for. This is done at a later time. What the discussions this summer have completely overlooked is the fact that measures to create jobs are conceivable which do not essentially require the financing of concrete projects but which stimulate economic activities in general by tax alleviations and depreciation on new investments, for example. This is conceivable for movable commodities just as it is for buildings, including apartment houses--not particularly for one or two family homes, but for multistory apartment buildings.

[Question] What you mean to say is: no special funds, no surtax for financing to create jobs.

[Answer] Without committing myself, I drew your attention to various options. What I did was bring about a cabinet decision in late July which instructed the ministers of economics and of finance to submit proposals in this field by 2 September. I am not one of those people who lay down stipulations in interviews ahead of time. I would like to wait and see what the two ministers propose. I have received an advance oral report from Federal Minister Matthoefer--Federal Minister Graf Lambsdorff is currently on a tour abroad. But the two gentlemen will get together soon, the groundwork having been laid by their staffs. I am quite sure of one thing, though; something purposeful must be done to strengthen investment activities. In this field the cabinet has already given a clear clue, more than just a clue in fact. It actually provided a decision on principles with respect to German steel production.

[Question] Do you too also consider the discussion of cuts in unemployment compensation to be finished?

[Answer] No, as far as I am concerned the discussion is not finished on anything. However, while I do not believe that it is necessary at the moment, if anybody in the Federal Government brings up such a subject, it will have to be discussed.

[Question] The discussion topic of foreign policy that pervades everything is--as we might rightly say--the coup with which the United States announced the production decision for the neutron bomb. Is this the proper way of dealing with friends?

[Answer] You phrased it quite appropriately when you said: announced. For in reality something was publicized which had been going on for quite some time and about which the Federal Government had been informed a long time ago. The Federal Government itself dealt quite explicitly and carefully with the question of the so-called neutron weapon in 1978. What is involved, by the way, is artillery ammunition and warheads for short-range missiles.

[Question] This meaning that they are usable primarily on European, specifically German, soil?

[Answer] Correct. In any event, arms with which Soviet territory could be reached are not involved. I would like to emphasize this in no uncertain terms. So, in 1978, we dealt with this issue quite carefully and said in the Federal Cabinet at the time that the decision to produce such a weapon must be an American one--a decision by the nuclear power, or by the French or British Governments.

[Question] It has really become just that.

[Answer] Well, leaving this aside for a moment, I would like to make the second element of the Federal Government's judgment of that time quite plainly understood.

The second element was that if such an American decision were made, it would be necessary to look into the question of how this could be utilized for, or introduced in, arms control policy which, after all, is part of general security policy; as well as how negotiations between the two world powers on this new neutron weapon could be attained. I add here parenthetically that developments in this field also exist in France. There is no production yet, but definitely research and development. In the third place, we said at the time, in 1978, that we can visualize deployment on German soil only under very specific conditions--deployment which at this time is not at all topical and which at present is not the subject of negotiations. What we meant was not just on German soil but also on other territories, and then only if the alliance would so decide and only if the arms control negotiations to be conducted in that context remain abortive. This was in 1978. Actually, I fail to see why the Federal Government should fundamentally change its attitude. To play it safe, I might add once again that this has nothing to do with the Euro-strategic or medium-range weapons which Foreign Minister Gromyko and Secretary of State Haig will initially discuss in September for the purpose of initiating formal negotiations on mutual arms limitation. This is something else; these are short-range weapons.

[Question] How did the deep irritation and indignation develop to the point in your party, the SPD, where the opposition believes it can interpret it as an anti-American attitude on the part of many Social Democrats?

[Answer] I find that this reaction is somewhat exaggerated on both sides. I find it understandable, on the one hand, that due to the American announcement some people in Germany feel discriminated against and forced in a certain direction. On the other, however, I understand that there are people who say that we must give the Americans a free hand and not interfere in such decisions. But you must not attack the Americans with the claim that they are the ones who are promoting the arms race, nor should you do what the opposition is doing, namely to pretend that this weapon will eventually offset the Soviet conventional superiority in the number of tanks and soldiers. This is nonsense. You should never believe in the long run that you can develop a weapon while the other side cannot. The other side can do it too. And this is not just a purely defensive weapon. It can naturally also be used for an attack, as can most weapons in the world. Also, a tank is not just an offensive weapon; it can be very well used for defensive purposes.

[Question] Is the exaggerated assessment of the opposition not completely wrong when they say that the Social Democrats are showing great anti-Americanism in this discussion?

[Answer] German Social Democracy is neither anti-American nor anti-Russian; much rather it seeks the best for the German people. It seeks to preserve peace for the German people. We must urge everyone who bears responsibility in German policy not to link himself unilaterally to decisions of another government, but to look after the interests of his own people and state. This is the standard to be applied.

[Question] Doesn't this mean a step away from the alliance?

[Answer] I just wanted to say that the Americans are not the commanders of the alliance. Command is exercised by more than a dozen states joined in the alliance, and we are one of these states.

[Question] Does Mr Weinberger know this?

[Answer] I am most certain that he knows it. But you can address your rhetorical question also to Helmut Kohl.

[Question] You received Klaus Boelling, the Federal Republic's representative in the GDR, here and you discussed the letter to the GDR state chairman with him. Did he bring you an answer or a signal from East Berlin?

[Answer] No, not really. We discussed the world situation very carefully as viewed by the East Berlin government. For example, we examined the situation as viewed through the eyes of State Council Chairman Honecker, and discussed the problems and the dependence he has to consider. Naturally we tried to contrast this with our assessment of the situation. There is, I am convinced, a point we have in common.

I believe that the SED Politburo and Mr Honecker himself are most interested in not allowing the tensions between both world powers to have a large impact on relations between the GDR and the Federal Republic of Germany. We here in West Germany have exactly the same interest. We also do not want tensions that have come about between the world powers--due to the invasion of Afghanistan, the SS-20 or NATO's dual decision--to have a large impact on relations between both German states. It is in the interests of the German people for us not to be taken in tow by agitators over here and over there. We must not be taken in tow or become involved in additional aggravation or tensions.

[Question] Is there a date in sight for your visit to the GDR?

[Answer] I would like to leave that open for the moment. We will try first to set a date with the Soviet side for Brezhnev's visit to Bonn; we will try to set a date in November. I can very well imagine that a meeting with Mr Honecker could take place relatively shortly thereafter. I say that I imagine it can, but at the moment there are no discussions on the matter.

COLUMNIST STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF U.S. PRESENCE

DW250809 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 25 Aug 81 p 10

[Article signed Ein.: "Strategy, not Ideology"]

[Text] The formulation used by Egon Bahr is not just hateful, it is politically dangerous. He said in a television discussion something to the effect that the Americans are treating the Federal Republic in the military policy field as if it were a protectorate. The remark was made in connection with the neutron bomb. Other socialists in Bonn call us a nuclear colony of America. What a distortion of reality! The Americans are our best equipped military partners. To be sure, their military presence in Europe protects the strategic countercoast of the Fortress America, but we enjoy the main political benefits. What is termed forward defense cannot be implemented without the Americans. In order to hold a strategic bridgehead, the Americans would not necessarily have to have divisions east of the Rhine. In the age of long-range weapons, we could very well imagine them keeping just symbolic troops in Berlin and the Federal Republic. They could have their 7th Army and their Air Force units stationed in Portugal, for example, using Spain and France as a military buffer. Does Bahr want that? If not, the neutron discussion must become more factual. Strategy is not ideology.

SPOKESMAN EXPLAINS NUCLEAR WEAPONS REMARKS

[Excerpts] Bonn, 24 Aug (DPA)--Deputy government spokesman Lothar Ruehl has said that he has not advocated the introduction of the neutron weapon. Today he explained to the federal press the remarks he made in an interview at the weekend, and stressed that stationing of this weapon in the Federal Republic is not at present being considered. His remarks were not at odds with the attitude taken by the Federal Government. He simply wanted to set out the arms realities in the East and West and to point out that the neutron weapon also had to be included in considerations on arms control policy.

Ruehl felt it important to state that in his weekend interview on the problems of the neutron weapon he had simply made a "series of different points." He had said that NATO, for its part, had considered neutron weapons as complementary to its revaluation of its nuclear arming in Europe; and not as a preparation for a limited nuclear war on the European Continent, but rather to strengthen general deterrent p[illegible] He had also pointed out that chemical weapons were "roughly comparable" with the neutron weapon in their effect on human life. Moreover, what the chancellor had said was true. The latter h[illegible] confirmed that its possible stationing on German soil was only conceivable if the NATO alliance decided on them jointly for other countries and if the arms control negotiations to be held remained fruitless.

Olof Palme, the Swedish Social Democrat Party chief and chairman of an international "Independent Commission for Disarmament and Security Questions," put forward the view in the SPD party organ VORWAERTS that the U.S. decision on building the neutron weapon was "not a good opening for negotiations" with regard to medium-range missiles. The neutron weapon could "very well be viewed as an isolated problem." Palme spoke "basically very positively" on the suggestion of a nuclear weapons-free zone in northern Europe, but there were certain difficulties arising from Norwegian and Danish membership in NATO.

SOVIETS EXPRESS INTEREST IN RAIL-FERRY LINK

LD221702 Hamburg DPA in German 1545 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Luebeck, 22 Aug (DPA)--The Soviet Union is "greatly interested" in setting up a rail-ferry link between the Federal Republic and the USSR. The Soviet minister of the maritime fleet, Vladimir I. Tikhonov, said on Saturday in a DPA interview in Luebeck while visiting the port facilities that the development of trade output between the Federal Republic and the USSR during the past years showed a link of this kind to be practical and economically advantageous for both countries "because it would also save time and costs."

A ferry link between Luebeck and Memel is being discussed. But in the Federal Republic the ports of Kiel, Hamburg and Bremen are also being considered as possible sites for such a ferry link. Tikhonov said that the basic decision on setting up the ferry link could, he thinks, be made this year in talks between German and Russian experts. The German and Soviet sides have in mind a total of four train ferries, two under the Soviet and two under the German flag, to travel regularly in both directions. The Soviet minister of the maritime fleet sees "no problem" in solving the technical questions arising from difference in gauges between the West European and Soviet railways. Tikhonov pointed to the trouble-free rail-ferry traffic, now in its sixth year, between Luebeck and Finland which also "has the Russian broad gauge."

GOVERNMENT REACTION TO HONECKER VISIT TO MEXICO

LD241618 Hamburg DPA in German 1440 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Aug (DPA)--Bonn has reacted with distinct reserve to the visit to Mexico which Erich Honecker, the chairman of the GDR Council of State, is planning next month. Nothing has come of an official visit by Helmut Schmidt in connection with the North-South summit conference due in Mexico in October. Bonn government circles were clearly embarrassed by Honecker's trip since the chancellor had vainly tried to arrange a visit with Mexican President Lopez Portillo.

Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl told a Bonn press conference today that, in view of the presence of 22 heads of state and government in Cancun, Mexico, on 22-23 October, no convenient date had been available for Schmidt's visit, yet the Mexican president has invited French President Francois Mitterrand to pay an official visit after the summit. However, that only happened after Mexican contacts with the chancellor had been put aside, Ruehl said.

PREMIER MAUROY PROMISES CONTINUED AID TO POLAND

PM241305 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] On Monday 17 August France decided to continue its aid to Poland at a time when the Soviet Union, while warning the Polish Government against "forces hostile to socialism," has just promised increased aid to Warsaw too. "We will continue to aid Poland unconditionally," Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy stated after a meeting with Polish Foreign Minister Josef Czyrek which lasted more than 150 minutes.

The head of the French Government also revealed that France will continue to play its role as Poland's "advocate" to the other Western capitals. For instance, he specified that France is "working constantly" to win Warsaw a $500 billion loan from the West. Back at the beginning of the month France reported the "very strong pressures" it was exerting on its partners to attain this.

Mr Czyrek said he was "very satisfied" and invited Mr Mauroy to visit Poland. No date has been fixed, but the prime minister announced his desire to visit Warsaw "soon." Mr Czyrek also reiterated the Polish Government's invitation to Mr Mitterrand who, according to a good source, intends to visit Poland at the beginning of the year. It will be remembered that Mr Cheysson is due to visit Poland in the first 2 weeks of Ocotber.

(According to a source close to the Hotel Matignon, the talks related solely to the problem of aid, the Polish debt and Poland's economic situation. Mr Czyrek apparently carefully prevented the conversation moving onto the problem of Polish-Soviet relations after the Kania-Brezhnev meeting in the Crimea last week. He apparently merely reiterated that there is "room in Poland for the state, the Communist Party, the Church and Solidarity." Mr Czyrek, who left Paris Tuesday morning, nonetheless apparently said some harsh things about Solidarity. Contrary to the advice of some experts, Mr Mauroy apparently did not deem it right to warn Mr Czyrek against possible political repression in Poland.--LE MONDE note)

CHEYSSON SAID TO PLAN MEETING WITH 'ARAFAT

PM211605 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] We learned from a very good source in Paris Tuesday that External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson will meet with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat in Beirut next week during his official visit to Lebanon.

Mr Cheysson will be in Amman 28 and 29 August, in Lebanon 29 and 30 August and in Damascus 30 and 31 August. The good source also specified that negotiations are continuing between Paris and the PLO on where the meeting with Mr 'Arafat will be held. Paris would like the meeting to take place in the French Embassy in Beirut while Mr 'Arafat would like Mr Cheysson to visit PLO headquarters.

Last month the head of French diplomacy received Faruq Qaddumi, chief of the PLO's Political Section, during one of his stopovers in Paris. Mr Qaddumi returned to Paris Tuesday 18 August.

The first meeting between Yasir 'Arafat and a member of a French Government--Jean Sauvagnargues, then foreign minister--took place in Beirut 21 October 1974.

Meeting Plans Denied

NC241403 Paris AFP in English 1402 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 24 Aug (AFP)--No plans have been made for French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson to meet Palestine Liberation Organization Chief Yasir 'Arafat in the Middle East later this week, the Foreign Ministry said today. Mr Cheysson is to tour Jordan, Lebanon and Syria between Friday and Sunday. Last week, the ministry refused to confirm or deny reports that Mr Cheysson was to meet with Mr 'Arafat in Beirut.

CHEYSSON ON USSR, SOUTH AFRICA, ISRAEL RELATIONS

NC231338 Paris AFP in English 1315 MGT 23 Aug 81

[Text] London, 23 Aug (AFP)--Paris is concerned about a deterioration in relations with Iran because of French acceptance of Iranian political refugees, but will not change its "tradition of political asylum," French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson said today.

Mr Cheysson, speaking during a wide-ranging interview with the British independent television network ITV, added that French foreign policy concerning the Soviet Union and Israel would not be substantially modified. But he said changes would be made in policies towards South Africa. Because of its apartheid policies, Pretoria will receive "not one pistol, not one rifle, one part of a rifle" from France, he said. He added that a nuclear power plant being built there with French help resulted from a commitment by former president Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

On the Soviet Union, he said: "We want to have the same relations with the Soviets as any (of our) predecessors. But these relations cannot be the same as long as there are Soviet troops in Afghanistan. It's as simple as that."

On Israel, he said that "a friendly relationship" had developed "between Israel and my party and we want to keep that....We feel this would be an asset at a time when a peace settlement is getting closer."

CHEYSSON NEWS CONFERENCE ON MOROCCO VISIT

PM210745 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Aug 81 p 5

[Roland Delcour dispatch: "Cheysson Thinks Morocco Will Not Be Sacrificed in Franco-Algerian 'Reconciliation'"]

[Text] Rabat--At the end of his short visit to Morocco, which he left on the evening of Monday 10 August, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson gave a press conference after signing three legal and consular conventions and after being received by King Hassan II in his palace at Skhirat. The minister did not reveal anything about his talks with the king.

Questioned in particular on a possible meeting between President Mitterrand and King Hassan II, he replied: "The king of Morocco did not discuss a meeting with the president of the French Republic but there is reason to think that these two prominent leaders will meet in the next few months." Talking next about Algeria the minister asserted with great conviction: "That is a very special case. The emotional element in relations between France and Algeria has been intensified. We get along even better with the Algerians because we have the same views on domestic policy. The French and Algerian heads of state have met in the past but the results have been limited, expecially when the French head of state visited Algeria. We are anxious for a spectacular reconciliation. A meeting between the French and Algerian heads of state is planned for November. It could even take place in Paris. King Hassan II has already visited Paris several times.

In reply to this lyrical statement, a Moroccan journalist asked the minister: "Is Morocco not going to be sacrificed on the altar of Franco-Algerian reconciliation?" "What is the point of that question," Mr Cheysson retorted. "When King Hassan II visited Paris you did not wonder whether Algeria was being sacrificed. In recent history only one French head of state has visited Algeria, so there was an imbalance. France and Morocco have had very close relations. France has had distant relations with Algeria. Relations with the latter will be strengthened."

In addition to these fairly revealing statements which will certainly spark off many bitter comments here, the minister outlined the results of his visit to Rabat, which he regarded as positive, but he linked and compared them once again with the results of his visit to Algeria. First Mr Cheysson reiterated that this was the first visit by a Socialist minister since the change of majority in France. "I was invited by Morocco," he said. "For my part, I draw fruitful conclusions from my visit. There are different kinds of subjects to be discussed between Morocco and France. There are the great projects in the Moroccan 5-year plan, but there are also very urgent matters. For instance, we supplied 800,000 tons of wheat under a special contract in addition to cash purchases. We intend to add 200,000 tons of wheat. We are going to start discussions on a food agreement for the 1981-1982 agricultural year--a year which promises to be very difficult because the drought in Morocco this year was even more serious than last. There are observations on the Maghreb, the Mediterranean or the Near East. It will take longer to assess their significance."

Very Intensive Cooperation

"In Algeria and Morocco, the two countries which I have just visited," the minister said, "France is determined to pursue very intensive cooperation. This is the case with the three Maghreb countries which are linked to France by so many geographical, historical and other ties. France's future partly depends on this, as does development in this part of the world, understanding among our partners is essential. I am bringing this message as a Socialist and as a Frenchman continuing French policy. I hope that the Moroccans understand that."

As regards the West Sahara, Mr Cheysson expanded on what he had said on his arrival in Rabat by indicating that the Algerian and Moroccan Governments had noted with interest France's readiness to make a possible contribution to the development produced by the Nairobi conference but only provided it was asked to do so. "At present," he said, "we have not yet reached that stage."

On two occasions, during a speech delivered Sunday evening after a dinner given by Mr Boucetta, his Moroccan counterpart, and during his press conference, the minister stressed the French Government's intention to give foreign workers residents in France the environment, especially cultural environment, to which they are entitled, up to and including possible participation in local elections. He described as "shameful" the incidents at the beginning of the year involving a Maghreb family ostracized by the population (allusion to the incidents provoked by the communist municipality of Montigny-les-Cormeilles in February 1981).

With regard to relations between Morocco and the EEC, the minister maintained that France "would not accept the community's expansion until the latter has put its affairs in order and ended the imbalance which leads it to finance the production of hothouse tomatoes which other countries associated with the EEC can produce in the open."

As regards the Near East, Mr Cheysson referred to the EEC position, describing the PLO as a "representative organization" but refraining from regarding it as the only such organization as long as the Palestinian people have not had the opportunity of expressing their views. Mr Cheysson compared this situation with the one he experienced in free France: "As long as General de Gaulle," he said, "was not in Paris, the British, Americans and allies recognized him but not as France's sole representative. For this it was necessary to wait until General de Gaulle returned to Paris. I have been explaining this to Faruq Qaddumi (PLO external relations chief) for 6 and 1/2 years without managing to convince him. But this is nonetheless the position held by France and the EEC."

IRANIANS ON PARIS AMNESTY OFFICE HUNGER STRIKE

NC241907 Paris AFP in English 1902 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 24 Aug (AFP)--Eight Iranians opposed to the current Tehran regime, who have been occupying the Paris headquarters of Amnesty International for the past five days, today began a hunger strike to push their demand that the human rights organization "condemn the wave of executions and torture in Iran."

The eight, who claim membership in an "independent patriotic organization of Iranian students abroad," said in a communique today that they would pursue their strike until their demand was met. Contacted today, an Amnesty spokesman said that his organization would refuse to comment "under pressure."

LE MONDE VIEWS IRAN TIES AFTER GUNBOAT INCIDENT

PM241523 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Another Grievance Against Paris"]

[Text] The new and spectacular "affair of the Cherbourg patrol boats" constitutes the first important operation staged by monarchist officers against the Imam Khomeyni's regime.

Even though it was an action of marginal importance which will in no way change the situation in Iran, this spectacular action is bound to improve the morale of many adversaries of the Islamic republic who have been fretting in their enforced exile while waiting for a hypothetical overthrow of the Tehran government.

It is significant that the boarding of the ship, an operation prompted solely by monarchist circles--Gen Bahram Aryana has claimed responsibility for it and Admiral Habibollahi, one of the shah's ablest officers, has carried it out--has not been condemned by former Iranian President Bani-Sadr who was until quite recently responsible for the anti-Iraqi war effort. From his Auvers-sur-Oise retreat the former head of state merely stated that "it was only natural for members of the anti-Khomeyni opposition to participate in such operations."

Despite certain incompatibilities, differences of opinion among the Iranian opposition in exile are beginning to gradually blur in view of the common desire to bring to an end once and for all the Imam Khomeyni regime. Even those who at one time planned to soft-pedal their propaganda against the leader of the Islamic revolution in order not to hinder the national war waged against Iraq have abandoned their ideas about conciliation and desire nothing except opening new fronts against the Tehran Islamic citadel which is being besieged from all sides and undermined as a result of its internal dissensions. In any case, General Aryana announced in July his intention of leaving Paris for "a country bordering on" Iran in order to fight against the Khomeyni regime. As for the Tehran regime, it will undoubtedly see in the Cadix operation yet another proof of the "collusion" which, according to is, exists between all opposition organizations without exception and the various "imperialist satans," whether big or small. Tehran's relations with Paris, which have already been gravely strained as a result of the arrival of Messrs Bani-Sadr and Rajavi in France, could well deteriorate still further. During Friday prayers in Tehran the faithful were again urged to chant slogans hostile to France, which has "become a traitors' refuge."

The fact that one of the headquarters of General Aryana's movement has been established in Paris has strengthened Tehran's belief that the French leaders have been playing a "double game."

An increasing number of people in Iran have been advocating the breaking off of relations with the "French satan" who, according to them, looks forward to the overthrow of the Islamic regime.

PARIS DAILY TO SWITCH TO WEEKLY PUBLICATION

PM211115 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] LE CONTINENT, the daily newspaper devoted to African problems, stopped publication on Wednesday 5 August and will become a weekly publication beginning 19 September. Under the heading: "To our readers, see you 19 September," Justin Vierya, LE CONTINENT's editor, stated Tuesday that the distribution of the newspaper had encountered "serious obstacles as regards transport, censorship and so forth.... In any case, transport costs are high. Their effect on the newspaper's price made it an expensive daily--too expensive for many Africans who would have liked to read it regularly."

SPADOLINI GIVES INTERVIEW ON DOMESTIC ISSUES

PM211321 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 7 Aug 81 p 3

[Eugenuo Scalfari interview with Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini: "Berlinguer Is Right: There Is Some Decay in the Italian Parties...."]

[Excerpts] Rome -- [Question] Would you say, Prime Minister, that, after you, there can only be early elections?

[Answer] It really is not for me to make forecasts of that kind. All I can say is this: the government which I have the honor to lead in the product of a profound political crisis. It is the first example of rotation in the country's leadership. Berlinguer said in his interview with your newspaper that he expected greater innovations and that the distribution of ministerial posts continued as before. I must admit that I too hoped to be able to do more in the direction of regeneration, but nevertheless there has been some regeneration and there will be more. A non-Christian Democrat at the Chigi Palace -- and I refer to what [PSI Secretary] Craxi said in the parliamentary confidence debate -- is itself a very significant innovation. The fact that the top military and security services appointments were made without any interference or influence by the parties is another entirely new factor. The same can be said of the rigor which we have adopted from the outset with regard to the P-2 affair and all that aberrant phenomenon represents in Italian life. Are these perhaps matters of secondary importance? I do not believe that the present legislative term should end prematurely, as some people are forecasting....

[Question] You did not select your ministers as prescribed by the constitution and as the public expected. Why was that, Mr Spadolini? Did you not consider your colleague Bruno Visentini's proposal [for a government of "experts"] feasible? Do you not agree that it would have been a real step forward in releasing the institutions from party tutelage and a return to the constitution?

[Answer] Do not forget that I am, by training and by habit, a historian. Therefore, I do not allow myself to be easily misled by schemes. Visentini's proposal is in principle correct and largely approvable. I too believe that we should soon reach a more flexible method of forming governments. But let us now look at the real situation confronting us when this government was formed. The DC is experiencing a profound crisis, of which not even its most authoritative leaders made and make any mystery. The divergence with the Socialists was at its peak and relations between the majority parties and the PCI were very bad. As I have already said, under such conditions the non-DC premiership was an obligatory solution. I would say, moreover, that the appointment of a Republican as prime minister was an obligatory solution. Ours is not a party that sets its sights on an alternative. Our sights are set on a particular program and whoever supports it supports it; the alignment, the parliamentary majority must stem from the program, not vice versa. Thus the secular and Republican premiership. Pertini chose this solution, as he did the La Malfa solution in 1979, to prevent early elections. But the fact that this was an obligatory choice does not mean that it was a painless one for the DC. Could I have added to the mortification of the non-DC premiership the error of ignoring the internal balances of the party with the relative majority? Could I have formed a presidential-type government, when the head of state himself ruled out such a solution? Berlinguer is not being realistic when he reproaches me for being timid in my choice of ministers.

[Question] You fully accepted the Cencelli manual [defining composition of DC factions], that is, the share-out among parties and currents.

[Answer] I asked the parties to supply me with lists of names....

[Question] Were they broad lists containing new names?

[Answer] Not very broad, it is true. But after all, I did reject one or two DC candidates and tried to put a very prestigious independent in charge of economic policy, and the DC agreed to it. If I failed in this, it is because the independent did not accept the post....

[Question] Do you not regard the morality issue as a serious one?

[Answer] Unfortunately the morality issue is manifest to everyone and I agree with what the PCI secretary general says about the parites' responsibility and their decline. But it should be noted that this stems from the fact that the parties have become weaker, not that they have become too strong; their interferenes are due to weakness, not arrogance.

[Question] Nevertheless, the result is the same.

[Answer] Yes, but the real danger is not so much the parties' decline as the existence of hidden centers of power. Let us look at the P-2 affair. if the parties had been strong, what need would generals, admirals and high-ranking bureaucrats have had to seek hidden forms of support rather than open forms?

[Question] Prime minister, this is a broad subject, but allow me to say that these hidden centers emerged and prospered as a result of the laxity of certain parties, racketeering and patronage as a system of power....

[Answer] Well, I am here to eliminate such phenomena. Just 2 days ago the Senate unanimously passed the law dissolving the P-2 lodge and appointing a parliamentary committee of inquiry. Two such significant measures were approved in a single day. Why despair when signs of a regeneration are beginning to emerge?

[Question] I do not believe that you can be equally optimistic about the subject of inflation and negotiations with the trade unions....

[Answer] But I am optimistic. First, I would like to clarify the following point; only a madman could have imagined that the negotiations with the trade unions and the Confederation of Industry could be completed by the end of July after just 4 days of talks. Other governments have devoted themselves to that task for years and in some cases their parliamentary majority included even the PCI. Listen: In just 4 days you cannot resolve problems such as labor costs, the escalator, fiscal policy, public spending cuts and utilities charges.

[Question] So, Mr Prime Minister, what is the timetable for the negotiations? Will we wait months? Years? While inflation devours the nation's wealth and social imbalances increase alarmingly?

[Answer] You are right to demand speed. This is my timetable: during those 4 days in July we broached the subject. We even drafted a joint document with the trade unions--and that was the first time that it had happened in many years. In September the trade unions and Federation of Industry will discuss the problems of labor costs together. Meanwhile, the government is already preparing its plan to cut inflation....

[Question] Do you mean that there will be a plan to implement even if the trade unions do not agree with it?

[Answer] We will present the plan to the social partners and open the debate on it. But I will do my utmost to secure the trade unions' consent. I mean all the trade unions, including the Italian General Confederation of Labor [CGIL], which is apparently the most balky.

[Question] Lama [head of CGIL] even rejects the term social contract....

[Answer] But I am not proposing a social contract. Mine is an emergency government and inflation at 20 percent is an emergency phenomenon. What I am proposing is an anti-inflation fact. Nothing more, nothing less. They must answer me on this point.

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON NEUTRON BOMB, U.S.-USSR TALKS

AU221553 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Aug (ANSA)--Italy's "urgent interest" in sticking close by the United States was stressed here today by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in connection with the deployment of cruise missiles on Italian soil as well as Washington's decision to produce neutron warheads.

In a radio interview, Colombo said that the Rome government's decision to pick the site for NATO's new medium-range nuclear-tipped missiles "gave credibility to the avowed desire of NATO members to go through with nuclear modernization plans." He stressed, however, that the move was just a premise for negotiations, adding "now it's a matter of pushing for the talks."

Recalling Italian moves to promote such disarmament talks, the minister pointed to the recent message he sent to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig urging him to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko, which he will be doing in September. That meeting, Colombo commented, will be "decisive" for passing on to an effective negotiating phase.

At this time, now that Washington has announced plans to manufacture the neutron bomb, Italy's relations with the United States were said to be "particularly important and urgent." By the same token, he added, Italy has also tried to convince the Soviet Union to negotiate without posing any pre-conceived conditions that would jam the talks.

Colombo insisted that there would be serious trouble if Europe tried to play a "separate role" in the negotiations or in preparations for them. "This would mean breaking up the alliance and leading Europe toward a neutralist stand, like some parts are asking," he asserted.

In the Rome government's view, "our solidarity with the United States must be resolute" while Italy, within the realm of the Western alliance, promote negotiations.

The Italian foreign minister ruled out the possibility of the neutron bomb being employed in Europe without the consent of Europeans, or of the state in which it was used. At this time, he said, there is no such consent, mainly because "it has not been asked of us."

The government official pointed to the seriousness of this week's dogfight between Libyan and American jet fighters over disputed waters off the North African coast to show the "prudence" with which the United States, the Soviet Union "and even Libya" behaved. This means," Colombo concluded, "that in the face of a situation which could upset the international balance of power, everyone stops to reflect."

BERLINGUER HAILS LEGALIZATION OF TUNISIAN CP

PM241529 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 29 Jul 81 p 11

This act, which grants your party its due, with a clear acknowledgement of its major contribution to the national independence struggle, will make a fundamental contribution to extending and strengthening the foundations of democracy and national unity in your country and will increase its international prestige and its role within the alignment of nonaligned countries. Renewing our good wishes, which we extend through you to the Tunisian people, we hope that relations between your party and ours will be intensified and strengthened in the interests of both our peoples, who are bound not only by historical and cultural traditions and by the antifascist and anticolonial struggles but also by current and pressing objectives of cooperation and peace."

FORMER OFFICIALS CLEARED OF CHARGES IN BOMBING

AU241647 Rome ANSA in English 1505 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian Parliament's panel of inquiry today acquitted two former premiers and a former defense minister of cover-up and perjury charges in connection with the 1969 bomb massacre in Milan's Banca Dell' Agricultura.

The three, former premiers Giulio Andreotti and Mariano Rumor (Christian Democrats) and former Defense Minister Mario Tanassi (Social Democrat), were cleared of suspicions of having protected a former intelligence agent convicted for the massacre and subsequently acquitted in appeal. Sixteen were killed and some one hundred injured in the blast at Milan's Piazza Fontana, the first of a series of bomb attacks generally believed to have been part of a strategy of neofascist terror.

After years of investigation, the courts convicted the former spy, Guido Giannettini, and two neofascists, Franco Freda and Giovanni Ventura, of having masterminded the massacre and gave all three life sentences. Their sentences were suspended by the Catanzaro Appeals Court in March 1980 on the grounds that there was not enough evidence to prove their involvement in the bombing.

The parliamentary impeacement panel cleared Andreotti, Rumor and Tanassi at dawn this morning after an all-night session in which another former government official, Mario Zagari, the Socialist justice minister in office at the time of the investigations, was also vindicated of suspected misdeeds.

But not all of the former ministers exonerated by the panel may be sure that their troubles with the law are over. Neither Andreotti, nor Rumor, nor Tanassi got the required four-fifths majority of acquittal votes to make the dismissal of the perjury case against them final.

According to parliamentary rules, the two houses may be summoned into joint session to debate the case if at least one third of their members, a total of about three hundred MP's, and senators, endorse a petition for a public hearing. On the cover-up charges, Rumor and Tanassi got no more than a simple majority of eleven out of twenty acquittal votes, so they are both liable for further hearings on that charge too.

The only irrevocable rulings the panel made last night were those acquitting Andreotti of cover-up charges and Zagari of abuse of office.

In another ruling, the commission decided to refer the case against eight other suspects--all high-ranking secret service officers--to the courts.

The panel had been asked to determine whether the eight, including Generals Vito Miceli and Gianadelio Maletti and Admiral Eugenio Henke, had provided cover for Giannettini. The 50-year-old journalist and former intelligence agent released from jail after the 1980 appeals verdict spend a period of time in hiding in Argentina before giving himself up at the Italian Consulate in Buenos Aires in 1974.

BALSEMAO DESIGNATED TO FORM NEW GOVERNMENT

NC251235 Paris AFP in English 1231 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Lisbon, 25 Aug (AFP)--Francisco Pinto Balsemao, who resigned as prime minister of Portugal on August 10, was today officially invited to form the 14th government since the April 1974 revolution.

The appointment, by President Antonio Ramalho Eanes, had been certain since Mr Pinto Balsemao's confirmation on August 17 as head of the Social Democratic Party. It followed a 90-minute meeting between the president and the outgoing prime minister at the Belem Presidential Palace here today.

Following the meeting, Mr Pinto Balsemao (44) said he had accepted the invitation and would start consultations at once.

A minister in the last government said the new cabinet might be formed at the beginning of September. It would be presented to Parliament to obtain a vote of confidence, which would undoubtedly be given as the Democratic Alliance (Social Democrats, Christian Democrats and Monarchists) held 134 of the 250 seats.

It will be the third centre-right government since 1979, when the alliance first wrested a majority in Parliament away from the left.

CDS Chairman To Join

LD222252 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Excerpt] The Political Committee of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] met for 5 and 1/2 hours today to discuss the extent of the party's participation in the eighth government currently being assembled by Pinto Balsemao.

The primary question was whether CDS Chairman Freitas do Amaral would accept a cabinet post. About 30 minutes ago Freitas do Amaral himself announced his willingness to participate in the next government:

[Begin recording] To this end I received pressing requests and appeals from many voters. The leaders of the Social Democratic Party and the Peoples Monarchist Party conveyed the same message to me, as did the CDS's executive and political committees. I think, therefore, that it is my duty to accept.

I may be accused of contradiction, but the charge I do not want to see leveled at me is that of desertion. The Democratic Alliance needs to be strengthened and must honor the responsibilities it has assumed to the Portuguese people. I cannot and must not deny them the contribution being asked of me. [end recording]

Council Accepts Balsemao

LD221444 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1400 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Excerpts] At a meeting held this morning, the Council of the Revolution did not raise any objections to the nomination of Pinto Balsemao for the post of prime minister. This was announced by the council's spokesman, Lt Col Vitor Alves.

[Begin recording] The council was consulted and did not raise any objections to the nomination of Dr Pinto Balsemao. [Passage indistinct] once the Council of the Revolution and the parties represented in Parliament have been heard, the final decision rests with the president of the republic. [end recording]

This morning's meeting of the Council of the Revolution signals the beginning of the legal procedures leading up to the formation of the new government. This Monday General Ramalho Eanes will receive the parties represented in Parliament. The following day, Tuesday, Pinto Balsemao will call at Belem Palace to be designated by the president of the republic to the post of prime minister and will be charged with forming the new government--the 14th since 25 April 1974.

Chief Commissioner Erkki Korhonen, from the Ministry of the Interior, says Finnish authorities are not cognizant of anything in connection with this matter that could motivate any steps whatever.

WELT AM SONNTAG wrote yesterday that the Bulgarian-born commercial director of Tampella, Atanas Tilev, is an agent of the Soviet secret service, KGB. According to the West German weekly, Tilev's task was to collect information in the circle intimate with the acting chairman of the Bank of Finland, Ahti Karjalainen. Tilev is Karjalainen's son-in-law. Tilev has categorically denied the allegations of the West German weekly.

IRANIANS SEIZE AMBASSADOR IN OFFICIAL RESIDENCE

Conditions for Release

LD241034 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] About 30 Iranian students this morning occupied the residence of the Iranian ambassador in Lidingo, just outside Stockholm. The students seized Ambassador 'Abdol Rahim Govahi and his wife. An hour later Lidingo police cordoned off the area around the residence.

At an improvised press conference outside the residence an Iranian declared that the action was caused by the fact that since 21 June 600 persons have been executed in Iran. This cannot go on, the spokesman said.

The occupants demand to be allowed to hold a press conference inside the ambassador's residence. They want to appeal to the Swedish Government to contribute to the sending of an international commission of jurists to Iran. The students say they will release the ambassador and his wife and leave quietly if they are allowed to hold their press conference.

The occupiers of the ambassador's residence belong to Iranian leftist organizations Peykar and Feda'iye Khalq.

Police Storm Building

LD241138 Stockholm International Service in English 1125 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] A news bulletin on the occupied Iranian ambassador's residence just outside Stockholm:

Just after half an hour ago Swedish police stormed the residence and forcibly removed the 30 unarmed occupiers. All the occupiers, students and all members of two leftwing groups, were demanding a press conference at the residence before they released the ambassador, his wife and another embassy official.

The 30 said they wanted to condemn the fascist executions in Iran, as they put it. That's the end of the special bulletin.

EDEK PROTESTS SHOOTING DOWN OF LIBYAN AIRCRAFT

NC230808 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 23 Aug 81 p 10

[22 August statement by the socialist party EDEK]

[Text] The Central Secretariat of the socialist party EDEK strongly condemns the violation of Libya's sovereign rights and the shooting down of two Libyan aircraft by airplanes of the U.S. 6th Fleet.

This U.S. action constitutes an aggressive action against the people of Libya as well as against all the small countries, particularly the Mediterranean countries, and it is proof of the threat against the Mediterranean people because of the U.S. military presence in this sea. The aggressive U.S. action against Libya stresses the need for the mobilization of all the peace-loving forces in the Mediterranean and the world for the withdrawal of all the imperialist fleets and of all the imperialist troops, for the dissolution of foreign bases in the Mediterranean region, and the conversion of the Mediterranean into a sea for peaceful cooperation among its people.

The central secretariat of the socialist party EDEK declares its anti-imperialist solidarity with the people of Libya and their leadership, and states that it will intensify its struggle against the aggressive U.S. policy, and for national independence, people's sovereignty, human dignity and for a people's peaceful and free Mediterranean.

AKEL Protest

NC230814 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 23 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] In connection with the shooting down of two Libyan aircraft by the U.S. Air Force over Libya's territorial waters, the AKEL secretary general has sent the following cable to the UN secretary general:

"The Cypriot people strongly protest against the provocative gangster-like shooting down of two Libyan planes by the United States. This aggressive action imperatively raises the question: What are U.S. warships doing thousands of miles away from the United States? The people of the Mediterranean demand the removal of the U.S. fleet from the Mediterranean and its conversion into a sea of peace and cooperation among people."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA ON REPLY TO TURKISH PROPOSALS

NC230758 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 23 Aug 81 pp 1, 10

[Text] While the preparation of the Creek Cypriot side's aide-memoire to the Turkish side--which will give a written and detailed reply to the Turkish proposals--is in its final stage so that it may be delivered at the next meeting of the intercommunal talks, reports from authoritative sources say the following: In its reply, the Greek Cypriot side will stress the need for the withdrawal from Cyprus of all the settlers [from Turkey] within the framework of "security" for the inhabitants of Cyprus that the Turkish side has been overstressing.

Our information specifically says that our side's reply to the Turkish side will approximately stress the following:

"The best security for all the inhabitants of the island is the unity of the state, the establishment of a strong and effective central federal government, the securing of human rights for all the people, the demilitarization of Cyprus, the withdrawal of Turkish troops together with the settlers, and the ensuring of sufficient international guarantees. It will be stressed that this would be the best security for the inhabitants of the island for peaceful coexistence and happiness."

It is understood that the Greek Cypriot side's aide-memoire will not accept "the principle of security" which is referred to in the Turkish proposals, but will stress that this "principle" is in no way included in the two summit agreements or in the UN resolutions on Cyprus.

The government spokesman stated that the president of the republic has given the party leaders a copy of the Greek Cypriot side's draft reply. The spokesman also stated that the president of the republic will receive the party leaders, most probably at the beginning of next week, in order to exchange views in connection with the reply to the Turkish Cypriot proposals.

In the meantime, our information reiterates that our side's aide-memoire to the Turkish side will explain the reasons for which the Turkish proposals have been found to be unsatisfactory and unfeasible in serving as basis for negotiations for the solution of the Cyprus problem. In this connection, it will be stressed that the acceptance of the Turkish proposals would mean an advance acceptance of a solution for a confederation of two states--such a thing would frequently bring about deadlocks and fresh problems between the island's two communities.

Our reply will also reject "the principle of numerical equality" which the Turks suggest and will stress that their territorial concessions are insignificant.

A large part of the aide-memoire will be devoted to a critique on the Trukish proposals; that is, it will cite our conclusions and appraisals in connection with the study of the Turkish proposals, and their unacceptability will again be stressed.

Among other things, the critique is expected to refer to the following:

About Famagusta

In connection with the question of Famagusta, according to the 19 May agreement it should be given priority as a gesture of good will. On the contrary, there is no such provision in the Turkish proposals.

The Turkish proposals provide for the return of only 29 percent of the city. In this area, only 16,190 Famagusta refugees would be able to settle; this figure does not represent even half of the city's population. Moreover, this area would be deprived of a basic infrastructure and essential services--such as a hospital, police and fire stations, installations of the Cyprus telecommunications authority and the electricity authority of Cyprus, the harbor, the administration's buildings and so forth.

Moreover, the same area would only include 21 percent of the city's industrial installations, which would make it possible to only employ 18 percent of the city's labor force. The area would also include only 52 percent of the hotels, a very small part of the orange groves and would leave out archeological sites and, in general, tourist sites.

General

According to the Turkish proposals, the number of refugees who would not return [to their homes] would be 150,000, while the Turkish side would keep 33 percent of the territory.

The Turkish side would actually include 70 percent of the resources and 57 percent of the coast. All on this despite the fact that the percentage of Turkish Cypriot ownership is--according to land registry figures--hardly 12.3 percent of the territory of the republic.

ALITHIA REPORT ON GENSCHER TALKS IN ATHENS

NC241025 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 24 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Telephone dispatch by ALITHIA correspondent in Athens Dh. Zannidhis]

[Excerpts] Athens, 23 Aug--FRG Foreign Minister Genscher made specific recommendations to the Greek Government for the continuation of the inter-Cypriot dialogue.

At the same time, Athens stressed to the FRG minister that Ankara had acted deceptively because Turkmen had assured Mitsotakis that the Turkish side would submit a different form of proposals than what it finally submitted.

Karamanlis stressed to Genscher that Greece as a guarantor power and an interested country, would not cosign a settlement of the Cyprus problem that was based on proposals of such a form and that, in any case, it would not accept any faits accomplis. He also recalled to his interlocutor the Turkish invasion and the presence of Turkish troops on the island, and stressed that Greece would not remain disinterested in a new provocation.

Characteristically, Karamanlis is reported to have said to Genscher that "1974 was a different era."

During his talks in Athens, the FRG foreign minister admitted that the Turkish Cypriot proposals had put the Cyprus Government in a difficult position, and he not only insisted on the continuation of the dialogue but also promised diplomatic initiatives toward Ankara on an appropriate revision of the proposals that would lead to a satisfactory solution of the Cyprus problem. The Federal Republic of Germany will undertake this initiative with the support of the EEC as has been done in the past.

Genscher recalled the Schmidt formula for the Cyprus problem which envisaged a settlement with the Turkish community whereby it would keep 28 percent of the land. Ankara had discussed that formula at the time of the U.S. [arms] embargo. Turkey was receiving arms from the FRG and for this reason was amenable to West German pressures.

The Schmidt formula had been rejected by Makarios, who had insisted on the percentage being reduced to 24-25. It is believed that the FRG initiative will be manifested in the middle of September. Genscher will not go to Ankara but he will meet with his Turkish counterpart at the NATO meeting in Brussels.

The FRG arguments to Turkey will be similar to those expressed to Greece, but there will be the added argument of a possible government change in Greece and the assumption of power by a government that would view the Cyprus problem from a different perspective.

GREEK COMMERCE MINISTER ARRIVES FOR VISIT

NC232012 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 23 Aug 81

[Text] Greek Commerce Minister Aristidhis Kalantzakos arrived in Cyprus this evening on a 20 day official visit for talks related to Greek-Cypriot commercial and economic relations. Kalantzakos was received at Larnaca Airport by Commerce and Industry Minister Kittis, Greek Ambassador Zakharakis and other officials.

In a statement at Larnaca airport, Kalantzakos said he brings warm greetings from Prime Minister Rallis to the people of Cyprus. His visit, he added, reconfirms the unlimited interest of the Greek Government in the development of commercial and economic relations between the two countries.

Kalantzakos expressed satisfaction over development of commercial transactions between Greece and Cyprus which have showed considerable progress during recent years. The entrance of Greece into the European Community, he continued, opens great possibilities and prospects for the expansion of commercial relations between Greece and Cyprus. Kalantzakos added that during his stay in Cyprus he will have the opportunity to confer with Commerce Minister Kittis on matters of joint interest, and that together they will seek ways and methods for utilizing the new European economic frontiers of Greece.

In his statement, Kalantzakos also wished for the fulfillment of the desires and expectations of the Cypriot people.

Addressing his Greek counterpart, Kittis mentioned that during his visit to Athens in November 1980 he established the strong interest of both Kalantzakos and the Greek Government to assist and contribute toward the balanced development of commercial transactions between Greece and Cyprus. We had agreed, he added, that what was needed were the practical methods and processes which would utilize this interest. In the meantime, Kittis added, the entry of Greece in the EC has introduced certain processes which require more complicated apparatus and more delicate manipulations in order to achieve the goal set by the two sides. Kittis said that all repercussions will be discussed at a first stage and all commercial relations generally will follow, in an effort to establish the sectors where more handling is necessary to bring about the set goal.

GUNAYDIN ON GREEK CYPRIOT REJECTION OF PROPOSALS

NC211014 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 19 Aug 81 p 12

[Resat Akara report from Nicosia]

[Text] It has been reported that the Greek Cypriot side, which has rejected the meaningful and comprehensive Turkish Cypriot proposals for the settlement of the Cyprus dispute, will soon seek recourse to the United Naitons again.

Commenting on Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou's statement that "the Turkish Cypriot proposals cannot form the basis for the intercommunal negotiations, but we shall continue the intercommunal talks and at the same time participate in international conferences," foreign observers say: "The Greek Cypriot side's continuing to attend intercommunal talks is only tactical. Because they believe that when the Greek Cypriot side resorts to the United Nations, the Turkish Cypriot side will object to this and probably discontinue the negotiations. This would give the Greek Cypriot side a chance to argue that it was the Turkish Cypriot side that has walked out. This will form a basis for propaganda."

On the other hand, whereas all the political parties in the Greek Cypriot sector as well as the press media have adopted a common attitude in suggesting the 'rejection of the Turkish Cypriot proposals," the Turkish Cypriot side is having extensive discussions.

However, following Democratic People's Party leader Nejat Konuk's statement that "if the Greek Cypriots reject our proposals, we may take new decisions," it is believed that this party--which holds the key to the settlement of the government crisis--will submit a motion to the TFSC legislative assembly for the "declaration of independence."

TURKMEN NEWS CONFERENCE ENDS VISIT TO NORTH

TA241158 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has said that the constructive attitude of the Turkish Cypriot community and the comprehensive proposals submitted to the Greek Cypriot side has created a positive impression on world public opinion.

Mr Turkmen was speaking at a press conference this morning before his departure for Ankara at the end of a 4-day official visit to the federated state. He repeated that the main aim of his visit was to further strengthen the solidarity between Turkey and the Turkish Federated State. He stated that his contacts in the federated state with government officials and opposition party leaders had been very beneficial. Mr Turkmen said that, as his visit had coincided with the turning point of the Cyprus intercommunal talks, he had also exchanged views on them. He stressed that if the other side also showed the same constructive attitude shown by the Turkish Cypriot community, the solution to the Cyprus problem could easily be found. Mr Turkmen expressed pleasure at also being able to have a beneficial exchange of views with the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Hugo Gobbi, during his visit.

Asked what he meant by a turning point, Mr Turkmen recalled that the Turkish Cypriot side had submitted comprehensive proposals on all aspects of the Cyprus problem in good faith and was now awaiting the Greek Cypriot response to make an assessment of the situation. When reminded that in their recent statements, the Greek Cypriots had mentioned a crusade against the Turkish Cypriots and whether a new status for the Turkish Cypriot community was being considered, Mr Turkmen repeated that the comprehensive Turkish Cypriot proposals had informed the world of the good faith of the Turkish Cypriot community and no propaganda could wipe out this impression. He added that the talks had reached a critical phase and it would be better to make an assessment of the situation after seeing the formal reply of the Greek Cypriot side to the Turkish Cypriot proposals. Replying to another question, Mr Turkmen said that the Turkish side was not afraid of the Cyprus problem being brought to the United Nations General Assembly. He added that such an action by the Greek Cypriot side would not conform to the principles they had accepted for the continuation of the Cyprus intercommunal talks and that this would be seen by all.

When asked to comment on press reports that he had given certain undertakings to Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, Mr Turkmen said that they had both given such undertakings and these were to make all efforts for the constructive continuation of the intercommunal talks. Mr Turkmen leaves for Turkey about now.

KARAMANLIS SETS ELECTION DATE FOR 18 OCTOBER

NC241926 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] President Konstandinos Karamanlis has accepted a prime ministerial recommendation for holding the parliamentary election on 18 October. The presidency issued the following statement on the matter:

The president of the republic today received Prime Minister Rallis, who presented a letter explaining the reasons the government recommends idssolution of the Chamber of Deputies and the speeding up of the forthcoming election. After also listening to the verbal presentation of the prime minister's views, the president stated that he accepts in principle his recommendation and that within the day he would make known to him his answer in writing. This was done this afternoon. The texts of the two letters are as follows:

To his excellency the president of the republic, Konstandinos Karamanlis, Presidential Palace, Athens:

Mr President, in accordance to the provisions of the constitution and the election law, the next election must be held during the second half of December and, specifically, on 20 December. This period, however, is totally unsuited to the conduct of an election, both because of weather--a considerable proportion of the voters would be prevented from coming to the polls--and because the coincidence of the election with the holidays would affect the commercial and economic transactions of the country which are particularly at a high level at this period. To this must be added the fact that a lengthy preelection period would have adverse effects on the functions of the state, particularly at a time when pressing problems await solution.

For all these reasons, Mr President, the government believes that the election must be speeded up, and it considers the third Sunday of October as the most suitable date. If this recommendation is accepted, the government, in its effort to facilitate the conduct of the authority vested in you by Article 38 of the constitution, intends to submit its resignation at the beginning of September. Consequently, it would be best that the date of the election be announced now to facilitate the parties in the comfortable conduct of their election campaign.

With respect, Yeoryios Rallis.

The president of the republic sent the following letter to Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis:

Dear Mr Prime Minister, I considered your recommendation for the dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies and the proclamation of an election with particular attention. I appreciate the reasons you give for speeding up the election, particularly since they are also supported by other parties and particulary by the official opposition party. Consequently, I accept your recommendation for holding the elections on 18 October.

It is also known that the president of the republic, in accepting the resignation of the government in accordance to Article 38 of the constitution, has a duty to appoint a new government and to give it the mandate to either dissolve the Chamber of Deputies immediately and to conduct an election or to present itself to the Chamber and to ask for its confidence. Selection of one of the two provided solutions is the prerogative of the president of the republic. Because, however, in the given instance, the second solution is impossible in itself, it is my intention to entrust you with the mandate to form the new government for the dissolution of the Chamber and the holding the elections, particularly since you continue to enjoy the avowed confidence of the Chamber of Deputies. Consequently, I request that you submit to me the resignation of the government by 15 September so that the election may be held on 18 October and within the time limit provided by Article 41, paragraph three of the constitution.

I am certain, Mr Prime Minister, that the election will be conducted in a way which will confirm the smooth function of our democratic institutions. If, as I believe, high tempers and excesses are avoided, because they benefit nobody and harm the country, if the election is held with the necessary responsibility from all sides, this will prove the effectiveness of our democratic institutions and the political maturity of our people. All of us, parties, the press and the people, have a lengthy and painful experience from the past, both recent and more distant, and we consequently know what we must do and what we must avoid to protect the democracy, security and progress of our country from new adventures. If we ignore this bitter, as I have said, but also valuable experience, we certainly will not need any ameliorating excuse that we were mistaken.

With particular esteem, Konstandinos Karamanlis.

ATHENS PRESS REACTIONS TO U.S.-LIBYAN INCIDENT

NC241153 [Editorial Report] The Greek-language Athens press for 20-21 August comments on the U.S.-Libyan air clash over the Mediterranean.

On 20 August, I AVYI carries a KKE-Interior statement on its front page "unequivocally condemning the new provocative, aggressive U.S. act against Libya" that was "manifested through the downing of two Libyan planes a few miles from their country's shores." The statement concludes: "We express our solidarity with the Libyan anti-imperialist stance and once again stress the need for the withdrawal of the U.S. fleet and foreign bases from the Mediterranean."

RIZOSPASTIS on 21 August notes in a front page editorial "The Arsonists of War," that "the new act of gangsterism by the U.S. imperialists,in the Mediterranean this time, has raised an international hue and cry." The editorial points out that "they organized a provocative display of military force in an area that Libya considers its own--to 'test its reaction' as the U.S. NEWSWEEK previously reported.'" The editorial concludes: "And what about us? What should we do when war's abominable shadow moves so close to our country? Shall we accept our country to be the anchorage of the contemporary pirates? The first casualty of adventurist operations? No, and again no, even though the right may persist on its short-sighted ancestral subjugation. There is no other road for Greece; out of NATO. Greece [should be] nonaligned, actively pacific."

On 21 August, I AVYI carries another frontpage editorial "Arsonists in the Mediterranean" noting: Why did the U.S. imperialists provoke Libya? There is no doubt that it is a provocation." "Furthermore," the editorial continues, "the provocation does not concern Libya only. It concerns the Soviet Union too, with which Libya maintains close relations, and it concerns all of the Mediterranean people who are struggling for their independence." "Consequently, we should not view the downing of the Libyan planes as an isolated incident but as a calculated movement by the U.S. imperialists aimed at Libya and the antiimperialist struggle of the people who have risen against the neutron bomb."

On 21 August, AKROPOLIS carries a commentary "The Fear of War" stressing that "the dynamic policy President Reagan has inaugurated has made Al-Qadhdhafi and the pro-Soviet people understand that in the future it will not be possible to ignore the world's primary power which is no longer prepared to accept provocations without protest." "It is obvious that from now on America will not be a spectator of events but will defend the Western world's interests when these are in danger. This delicate and fragile situation that has been created in the Mediterranean area demands self-restraint and moderation by all sides in order to avoid the creation of dangerous complications. However, nobody doubts that from now on a dynamic U.S. policy will 'mark' the international atmosphere."

MESIMVRINI carries a commentary on 21 August in the "positions" column on the front page which notes that the "relief from having avoided worse developments does not imply an automatic dispelling of apprehension, because both humiliation (which Libya must be feeling as intensely as it used to display its cockiness) and arrogance (into which America can easily fall through the use of its overwhelming strength) are bad advisers." The commentary concludes by noting that. "Perhaps the lesson that was taught over the Mediterranean was useful in supporting international legality and repulsing provocativeness. However, it would be criminally preposterous if, instead of instruction, any side were to attempt to draw benefits beyond that."

On 22 August, the PASOK newspaper EXORMISI in its "Political Issues" column carries a commentary headed "A Provocative U.S. Act." The column points out the "U.S. decision to organize navy exercises on Libya's boundaries--in the Gulf of Sidra--and to down the Arab country's two military planes which were following the exercises, certainly constitutes a blatant provocation not only for the Libyan people but for the pacific people of Europe and the Mediterranean." In addition, the column notes that "this act is also dangerous when it takes place in an area that already is a seedbed of clashes owing to the bellicose policy followed by Israel in the Middle and Near East.

"Obviously, in order to consolidate detente and peace, the superpowers must end their provocations--whether these take place in the Mediterranean or the Baltic. They should respect the rights of little sta es. As regards the Mediterranean, it can become a sea of peace and progress only through the withdrawal of fleets and the dismantling of all military bases. This is the goal of all progressive forces in the area. Only then will the peoples of the Mediterranean live without the fear of destruction."

LIBYAN PILOTS COMPLETE TRAINING AT IZMIR BASE

HURRIYET QUESTIONS OPTIMISM ON CYPRUS TALKS

NC250705 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 22 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Hoping in Vain for a Positive Development..."]

[Excerpt] Although in his message to the Congress in July 1981 President Reagan had stressed that "the Cyprus issue was progressing toward a settlement," and although Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen and Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis have made statements stressing the "good will" of both Turkey and Greece and that they were desirous of finding "a settlement for the Cyprus dispute"--yet we cannot say we can be too hopeful of the outcome. We cannot share the optimism that the intercommunal talks this time will be able to bring a final solution to the Cyprus issue.

We say we cannot share the prevailing optimism mainly because the concrete, substantive and comprehensive proposals of the Turkish Cypriot side have not been submitted to people who would wish to study them carefully and reach an understanding. But rather they were submitted to a shifty and unreliable man, like the head of the Greek Cypriot administration, Kiprianou. All he is planning to do now is to explore ways and means of dispelling the positive point the Turkish Cypriots have won throughout the world because of their proposals and to instigate world opinion against the Turks in the September session of the United Nations."

The fact that Kiprianou has been unable to say "we reject these proposals" soon after examining them, indicates that he has been cornered this time. But his statement that he would oppose these proposals being adopted as a basis in the intercommunal talks proves once again this time too he is devoid of good will.

However, there is one point which Kiprianou has to assess very seriously: The Turkish Cypriot community is now in a position to declare its independence. This may prove to be costly both for the Turkish Cypriots and for Turkey. But undoubtedly, the Greek Cypriot side's loss will be much greater.

FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES TOUR OF NORTH CYPRUS

TA221657 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said today that the Turkish Cypriot community must view the future with confidence. Turkmen, who is continuing his tour of the TFSC, today visited the mass graves of our kinsmen who were killed following the Greek Cypriot massacres in the villages of Murataga [Maratha], Sandallar [Sandalaris] and Atlilar [Aloa] in 1974. According to the Turkish Radio and Television bureau in Cyprus, in a statement during his visit to the Murataga and Sandallar martyrs cemetery, Turkmen said: The Turkish Cypriot community is no longer oppressed. It will continue to live in freedom and security. Turkman and the delegation accompanying him will return to Ankara on 24 August.

SCHMIDT VIEWS ON DOMESTIC, FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

DW241420 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Reinhard Appel interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Brahmsee; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You are governing in the so-called unlucky seventh year.

[Answer] No, in the eighth.

[Question] In the eighth, sorry. Then the picture is wrong. But I am still going to ask my question. When things become explosive in domestic and foreign policy, do you sometimes consider resigning?

[Answer] No, I don't. By the way, the unlucky seventh year is over. We crossed that threshold some time ago, at least 3 months ago.

[Question] The letter which FDP Chairman Genscher sent to his fellow party members and in which he expressed specific demands creates the impression that the coalition might fall apart because in this letter he also uses the formulation crossroads.

[Answer] The letter also contains other formulations and expressly recognizes the seriousness of the efforts of his Social Democratic partners in the talks that have been held so far. But I think you shouldn't assess the letter the way you have. Mr Genscher and I have worked together for 12 years, and we cooperate closely with mutual respect and trust. If Mr Genscher tried to find a way to end the coalition, he would certainly do it in a different way and would not send an open letter to the members of his party's leading bodies. I definitely reject what you just said. But I think that this misunderstanding which you are under is a general misunderstanding which has spread in the German media in recent days, as if the FDP and its Executive Board today had more room for action with regard to Social Democracy and the federal chancellor. This is an error. I have studied the famous opinion poll very closely.

[Question] It was published earlier this week and has enhanced this impression above all with your fellow party members and voters.

[Answer] That may be. I think the one who published it has rendered his own party, the FDP, a disservice because the opinion poll is based on as few as 1,000 persons. This means that 80-90 FDP voters were asked to give their opinion about the desired coalition partner. With 80-90 persons interviewed, there is thus a 15 percent margin of error for all of the Federal Republic. But even excluding the margin of error, only a good 25 percent of these FDP voters said that they would prefer a CDU coalition for the FDP. Almost 75 percent of the FDP are for the SPD coalition. This was so, this is so at present. Considering the great respect expressed by FDP voters in other opinion polls for the present federal chancellor and the much lower respect for certain leading CDU personalities--let alone the CSU chairman--this entire structure of thought about more room for action collapses. In addition, I in no way see the FDP leaders seeking such room for action. The whole thing is a result of the summer theater. As my friend Minister of State Huonker has said, somebody has made a mountain out of a molehill. No, it is even being blown up and will soon burst.

[Question] Expressing it more concretely, what do you think about the tough controversy--I am not talking about between Mr Genscher and Mr Schmidt but between the SPD and the FDP--over the special levy or the much more delicate issue of unemployment benefits?

[Answer] None of these subjects have been commented on by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and SPD Bundestag faction Chairman Herbert Wehner. I haven't commented on them either. For us the matter itself is the most important thing and not public polemics and journalistic tactics. I have no intention of joining in. The most important thing for me is the goal of enabling the Federal Bank to gradually lower interest rates in Germany, if the foreign trade area is ready for this, meaning, if our balance of payments problems decline. They are declining at present. Exports are increasing and the deficit is decreasing. If we, the state and above all the laender and the communities--not just the state--make fewer demands on the credit markets, interest rates will be reduced despite the incredibly high U.S., French and Italian interest rates which are giving us so much trouble and which are the main reason for the economic difficulties we are all in.

[Question] But, Mr Federal Chancellor, the United States not only keeps us busy as a result of its high interest rates but also because of some other tough decisions, I would say. For instance, the decision on the production of the neutron weapon is at least irritating. Or do you find the signals coming from the United States soothing?

[Answer] No, I don't find them soothing. I think we should recommend to our American friends that they always keep in mind what effect political statements made there have on Europeans. We must not reach a point where the Italians and the Dutch, the Scandinavians and the Germans some day believe that the Soviet Union is more willing to negotiate and more willing to reduce its armament than our own allies. We must watch out lest such a totally lopsided and misleading conclusion offers itself. It is also necessary for U.S. politicians and U.S. journalists, as well as their European partners, including important sections of the Bonn CDU/CSU opposition, to become aware that what matters is not to increase the fear of the Europeans but to give them more security against possible future eventualities.

[Question] The opposition leader charges that you as the chairman of the Federal Government's Security Council approved the decision on a possible deployment of the neutron weapon in central Europe.

[Answer] If Mr Kohl said it that way, it is wrong. He is at least wrong, if not worse. The Federal Government and the Federal Security Council dealt in 1978 with the neutron weapon problem. At that time we put down three points for good reason:

First, the question whether such arms shall be produced must remain a sovereign decision of the Americans or the French--who pursue such developments--or the English. It cannot be that the FRG and its Federal Government will have a say with regard to production. It would mean for us to pretend to be a nuclear power. For God's sake, we may not do that. It would be fatally dangerous for us to create the impression to be a nuclear force with a say on the production of nuclear arms.

Second, we said: If the Americans or somebody else in the alliance.

[Question--interrupting] The French.

[Answer] That is possible--decided to produce such arms, it is necessary to introduce the nuclear weapons in arms control negotiations between the West and the East. Arms control or arms limitation is an important part of security policy.

Third, this point of the common 1971 decision was the following: If no decision on mutual limitation should be achieved after a U.S. decision to start production and after arms control negotiations, the Federal Government would consider deployment in Germany under two prerequisites, two further prerequisites.

These are: One, it must be a common decision of the whole alliance; and two, not only the Federal Republic of Germany must be considered as the country of deployment.

In other words; if we stick in an unchanged way with these three points, and I see no reason why we should not, it would mean that deployment in Germany would not at all be considered at the moment.

[Question] It could in no case be considered against our will; also not with regard to the troop stationing treaty?

[Answer] The troop stationing treaty is a very old document that has come about under completely different conditions. It still smells a bit of the occupation statute. No, I am most certain that deployment against the will of the Federal Government would certainly not be considered, certainly nobody would consider that seriously.

[Question] What effect do the neutron production decisions have on arms limitation negotiations?

[Answer] U.S. policy tries to give the impression of utter determination to reestablish the balance. I myself do not see that the balance is actually upset on principle. I am for maintaining the balance. I am for it for more than 20 years. But I would be strictly against it if the West wanted to produce superiority. I am against superiority of the Soviet Union, but I am equally against superiority of our own alliance.

USSR PIPELINE CONTRACT STILL BEING NEGOTIATED

LD251224 Hamburg DPA in German 1040 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Duesseldorf, 23 Aug (DPA)--The mixing up of two different contracts was evidently the reason for a sharp rise for a short time in Mannesmann shares at the stock exchange. A TASS report led dealers to assume that the spectacular pipe deal between Mannesmann and the Soviet Union, known as the Yamal project, had been settled. According to a Mannesmann spokesman, it is only the order for 550,000 tons of pipes, concluded with the Soviets in April, that has been signed. This order is not connected with the Yamal deal. Deliveries under the order now signed are already on their way to the Soviet Union.

Mannesmann has for years been delivering between 500,000 and 1 million tons annually of large diameter pipes to the Soviet Union. Since 1970, it has fulfilled contracts for over 7 million tons.

Negotiations have not been concluded about the much quoted natural gas pipes deal, to be financed by a German credit originally of DM10 billion. It provides for the construction of a new 5,000 km gas pipeline from the Yamal Peninsula in western Siberia to Western Europe, and is to supply 40 billion cubic meters of gas annually to various countries in Western Europe, including 12 [billion] cubic meters to the Federal Republic. Since the Soviets refuse to pay interest at the rate demanded by the Western side, the financing of the project is still open. So is the price of the gas to be supplied by the USSR in payment of the pipes and associated equipment.

Failing agreement on the rate of interest, the "meat" was taken out of the project by excluding the pipes so that the deal is worth only DM5 billion. The quantity of pipes and finance are to be negotiated annually. Negotiations on the equipment have still to take place. AEG/Salzgitter has submitted an offer as well as Mannesmann. Foreign firms are also interested. The overall project, including the pipes, depends on whether the customer for the gas, Ruhrgas AG, and the suppliers of the material can provide an offset for the lower interest rate desired by the Soviet Union, if necessary by setting their prices accordingly.

CHEYSSON STATES WILLINGNESS TO MEET WITH 'ARAFAT

NC251941 Paris AFP in English 1932 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Aug (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said today that he would "gladly" meet Palestine Liberation Organization Chief Yasir 'Arafat during his forthcoming visit to Lebanon. Interviewed on French television, Mr Cheysson said, "If I have the chance to meet Mr 'Arafat, I will do so gladly."

He noted that France had been increasing its contacts with the Middle East. President Francois Mitterrand is to meet Jordan's King Husayn and Qatar head of state Shaykh Khalifah ibn Hamad Al Thani tomorrow, and Mr Cheysson is scheduled to make stops in Jordan, Syria and Lebanon during a tour beginning later this week.

The minister reaffirmed that France recognized the PLO "as being representative of the Palestinian people, but not as the representative of the Palestinian people. This is the longtime position of France and all European countries," he said.

ELYSEE DENIES COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON ANGOLA VISIT

PM251322 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] France's "sole concern is to attain full and urgent implementation" of UN "Resolution 345" in favor of Namibia's independence, according to an Elysee communique issued in the afternoon on Tuesday 11 August. This explanation confirms, as the Quai d'Orsay had stated the previous day, that Mr Guy Penne and Mr Regis Debray, respectively adviser to and envoy of the president of the republic "signed no joint communique with their Angolan interlocutors during the visit they made to Luanda on 8 August."

During their African trip, the Elysee envoys were received by the heads of state of the countries they visited, with the one explanation of Angola, where they only had talks with Mr Carlos Fernandes, presidential secretary for external relations, in the presence of Mr De Almeida, Angolan ambassador to France. Mr Fernandes apparently handed the national press a document of which his French interlocutors categorically deny any knowledge and which the Angola agency presented as a "joint communique."

This document, which condemns the support given by "the Reagan Administration and some Western countries" to the South African regime, which is described as "arrogant and intransigent," caused particular surprise since it was not worded according to the traditions of French diplomacy. Mr Guy Penne told us that no joint communiques had been issued after his visits to the other African capitals.

LE MONDE VIEWS GOVERNMENT'S BUDGET PLANS

PM251052 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Aug 81 pp 1, 21

[Paul Fabra report: "A Revival To Be Ensured Through Big Increase in Budget Expenditure"]

[Excerpt] It is through a big increase in budget expenditure that the government intends to ensure economic revival and combat unemployment. It was decided at last Wednesday's Cabinet meeting to increase it approximately 23 percent compared with the 1981 budget.

In order to make it easier for a number of enterprises to resume their activities in the postsummer break period, which is likely to be difficult, the government intends to continue to seek to reduce the interest rate. It believes that it could reduce it further--by 1.5-2 percentage points--compared with its present level.

The 1982 budget is to provide for a much faster increase in public expenditure than in the GNP expected next year. Compared with the 1981 finance bill (FR617.9 billion), the increase is to amount to 27-28 percent, raising the new total to some FR790 billion. It has been stated in official circles, however, that the 1981 budget has been underestimated and it would, therefore, be more appropriate to compare the 1982 budget with the finance bill plus the extraordinary credits voted in July (FR34.3 billion), to which will be added the smaller extraordinary credits traditionally voted in December, which the government will not forgo.

Compared with the 1981 budget as actually implemented, the increase is to amount to some 23 percent, a figure much higher than the expected GNP growth rate of 15.5-15.8 percent. The way in which this growth rate has been calculated may be seen as rather unrealistic since it relies on an increase in the volume of the GNP amounting to 3.3 percent (compared with a probable 0.5 percent increase this year) and a price increase of only 12.5 percent (compared with a probable 13.5-14 percent increase for 1981). The 12.5 percent figure, which seems rather an underestimate even to official experts, has been arrived at, these experts add, on the basis of all the econometric calculations made on the government's behalf.

As for the structure of the expenditure, it will be oriented, as we know, in accordance with the imperative recalled by the head of state on the occasion of the 23 July Cabinet meeting--priority for employment. Consequently, priority has been given to expenditure whose "boosting effect," the government experts assert, should be the biggest possible without pressing too heavily on the overseas balance of payments. This is why the biggest efforts will be made with a view to saving energy, as well as to research, and especially aid in the investments sphere. However, it is also necessary to take into account increases in operational costs and some other spheres in which increases are automatic. In particular, this applies to the servicing of the national debt, whose cost is to increase some 50 percent.

Under such conditions, the experts admit, it will be difficult to limit the deficit to the FR90 billion which the government had originally in mind. The figure mentioned in the finance bill will be of the order (see our yesterday's edition) [as published]. This sum is to amount to approximately 2.8 percent of the GNP (compared with 2.26 percent this year), that is, a figure similar to the German percentage. This means that the deficit planned for 1982 is to be nearly twice as big as the deficit planned for 1981 in connection with the July extraordinary credits (FR56.8 billion). It is to be three times as big as the 1980 deficit.

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON LIBYAN AIRCRAFT INCIDENT

[Editorial: "Desire To Show Determination"]

[Text] The incident in which U.S. aircraft were pitted against Libyan aircraft in international airspace is a consequence--a logical one, as it were--of the state of exasperation which has marked U.S.-Libyan relations for some months. At least in the official sphere, since the oilmen and businessmen who live in Libya seem to be able to work there without being molested in any way. However, even though they have not broken off diplomatic relations, the two governments have reached a stage close to hostilities and consequently the smallest incident could degenerate into an open conflict at any moment. This is what happened during maneuvers held by the U.S. 6th Fleet off the Libyan coast to "test" Tripoli's reaction.

What strikes you about the U.S. version of the incident is an imperturbability stemming from the Americans' belief that right is on their side--U.S. fighters are attacked; far from avoiding any fight, they respond forcefully; far from getting excited, Washington waits several hours before informing the President about the skirmish, as if the F-14 aircraft had performed a routine mission in accordance with some quite precise instructions. Everything has happened as if Washington has henceforth adopted the doctrine that any challenge with which it may be faced, wherever it comes from, must immediately be taken up. Making all due allowance, Mr Reagan has acted in a similar manner to the U.S. air traffic controllers, who were ordered to resume work within 48 hours. When they failed to comply, they were immediately dismissed and it is even possible their trade union will lose its "license."

We may have to wait for more examples before we can be quite certain that the time of Washington's vacillations is really over and that Mr Reagan is determined not to let anyone "push him around" and even not to avoid any trial of strength. He believes that to restore U.S. power--the primary objective of his election program--it is, first of all, necessary to show that the United States will not hesitate to use its power wherever anyone seeks to challenge it. Jimmy Carter's hesitations and scruples have been consigned to the attic. However, this does not necessarily mean that the United States has gone back to a policy of intimidation. The difficulties which it has encountered in its efforts to formulate an overall foreign policy involving something more than massive anti-Sovietism have shown that it has still not made up its mind with respect to a number of issues. What is certain, however, is that henceforth no one will provoke it with impunity, even if this means laying oneself open to provocation.

Reactions to the air incident last Wednesday are bound to encourage it in this course. It appears that foreign capitals have accepted the U.S. version of a case of "legitimate defense." So far, neither Moscow nor Algiers has reacted violently. As for Europeans, they seem to be secretly pleased to see that the Americans are prompt in response. This may be rather a far-reaching conclusion to draw from one contest between fighter aircraft which ended to the Americans' advantage but it was certainly a lesson in "dissuasion" which Washington meant to teach both international opinion and any government which might still have doubts about the United States' willingness to take strong action if it believed that either its interests or its security were at stake. It remains to be seen whether such a permanent "alert" will not go wrong some day and lastingly replace diplomacy.

COLOMBO STRESSES EUROPEAN UNITY IN SPEECH

AU242019 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] Rimini, 24 Aug (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, in a statement to open the second day of work of the meeting for friendship among peoples underway in this Adriatic resort town, declared that, "Europe cannot fail to become a protagonist in debate on the balance of nuclear forces in the world and on East-West relations."

Colombo also warned that Europe cannot afford to be uninvolved "in the security problems with bearing on neighboring areas" like the Middle East and the Persian Gulf. "On the ground of the European presence in international policy, especially in coming to terms with the tensions which disturb the present balance and threaten peace, there will be a measure of the urgency of pushing forward with political unity and of the capacity to relaunch European unity."

The foreign minister said that, "in Europe there is a reality beyond that on the national level and this reality is represented by the European Community. The ten nations of the Community have a precise responsibility to their peoples and to other Western democracies bound by duties of solidarity for world balance and peace in these countries and, especially, in the emerging nations which look to Europe as the single point of reference aside from the two superpowers"!

The foreign minister again stressed the urgent nature of "relaunching a united Europe" and cautioned against the advice of those who "recommend a united Europe distanced, if not opposed, to the United States and other Western democracies. This is a negative characterization of the European identity," Colombo said, "which fatally slides towards neutralism and inevitably leads to transforming Europe into an area of confrontation for the big powers and not an active subject in policy and history. We do not share in this view."

LIBYAN GOVERNMENT RETURNS TWO IMPOUNDED TRAWLERS

AU251948 Rome ANSA in English 1902 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Mazara del Vallo (Trapani) 25 Aug (ANSA)--Two Italian trawlers intercepted by Libyan patrol boats and impounded by Tripoli port authorities in July 1980, have been turned back to their shipowners, the Libyan envoy in Palermo announced today. The "Poseidone Primo" and "Argonauta" were seized along with their 23 crewmen while plying the waters of the Sicilian canal, the strip of the Mediterranean between Sicily and Tunisia.

Twenty-one mates were sentenced by a Libyan court to one year in jail but were pardoned by Libyan strongman Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi shortly thereafter, in September 1980. The two captains, Vincenzo Russo and Francesco Perlotti, were sentenced to two years and were pardoned in March 1981. Local sources said today that the Libyan Government had not requested a fine in return for the two vessels.

L'UNITA: MOSCOW STREET NAMED FOR PCI'S LONGO

PM251040 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 31 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] Moscow--A fine, spacious Moscow street in the verdant Sokol area of Leningradskiy Rayon has been named for Luigi Longo. The ceremony took place yesterday morning and was attended by a large crowd. Paolo Bufalini and Gianni Cervetti attended the event at the CPSU Central Committee's invitation. The CPSU was represented by R. Dementyeva, secretary of the Moscow City Committee, (Enrico) Smirnov of the Foreign Affairs Committee [as published] and other leaders.

Until yesterday, Luigi Longo Street was called "Peschanaya Ulitsa." Now alongside the old name plate there is a brown and gray marble tablet (by the sculptor A.K. Tikhonov) carrying the following inscription: "Luigi Longo Street, named in 1981 in memory of the eminent leader of the Italian and International Communist Movement and PCI chairman, 1900-1980." Beneath the tablet, Young Pioneers and Komsomol girls placed large bunches of red and white roses and carnations. During the ceremony, the following spoke in memory of Longo: P.P. Afanasyev, Secretary for Leningradskiy Rayon; A.D. Pedosov, deputy director of the CPSU Central Committee Institute of Marxism-Leninism; L.N. Tolkunov, chairman of APN and board member of the USSR-Italy Society; V.S. (Zemichin), worker; and Gianni Cervetti, of the PCI Central Committee.

Cervetti thanked the CPSU leaders and the Moscow municipal authorities for this significant act of recognition dedicated to Luigi Longo, and stressed the role which Longo played in the long years of his Communist Party membership, emphasizing how he managed to combine his action in defense of national interests with the action motivated in him by his consistent internationalist spirit. Internationalism and an original quest for national paths for developing democracy and socialism, the defense of the autonomy of the PCI and of every country's working class political groups and a consistent struggle against the threats of war; these are the elements, supported by profound links with the ideals of the October Revolution, which characterized the Italian Communist leader's entire life.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA BANS ENTRY OF SPANISH PAPERS

LD222018 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1900 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] The authorities of Equatorial Guinea today banned the entry of Spanish newspapers into its national territory and are preparing a decree which will limit the activities of correspondents and journalists in this former Spanish territory. Any Equatorial Guinean citizen found in possession of a Spanish newspaper or magazine will be sentenced to 6 months in jail and fined 50,000 to 250,000 pesetas. The step appears to have been taken because, according to official circles in Equatorial Guinea, the foreign press and the Spanish press in particular, have been publishing reports which are described as tendentious and defamatory against the country's institutions.

PEREZ-LLORCA VIEWS GIBRALTAR, EQUATORIAL GUINEA

LD251454 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Hector Arenas report from Barajas airport]

[Text] Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca returned to Madrid this afternoon at the end of his summer vacation. He made a statement in which he did not deny that the Spanish Government has in the past few days proposed to the British Government that Gibraltar be turned into a NATO military base as a way of finally resolving the problem once Spain has joined the Atlantic alliance. Perez-Llorca said that there is no contradiction between joining NATO and a final settlement to the problem of the rock. I pressed him to say whether this statement meant that Spain has made such a proposal.

[Begin recording] [Arenas] Do these first words on Gibraltar mean that Spain has indeed proposed... [interruption by another journalist]..that Gibraltar be turned into a military base?

[Perez-Llorca] I have merely been announcing a matter of principle, namely that the two issues--joining the Atlantic alliance, and the problem of Gibraltar--do not, from the Spanish point of view, enshrine any contradictions. On the contrary, they are complementary. It is now a question of making the most of this. On the more specific questions, the government will inform parliament in due course. [end recording]

Apart from the Gibraltar question, we also asked Minister Perez-Llorca what repercussions there might be to our relations with Equatorial Guinea following that country's ban on the Spanish press.

Perez-Llorca replied that the problem is on the way to being totally resolved and that relations with Equatorial Guinea are good.

Foreign Ministry 'No Comment'

LD241310 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] The possibility that Gibraltar could be turned into a NATO base has met with a "no comment" from the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The Foreign Ministry denies the report published by the Sunday TIMES.

The statement by Claude Cheysson, the French foreign minister, in support of Spanish entry into NATO and the Sunday TIMES report on the installation in Gibraltar of a NATO military base highlight the NATO issue.

Precisely this issue has been silenced by the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. A spokesman told national radio: We are not commenting, we have nothing to say.

Sir Joshua Hassan, the chief minister of Gibraltar, told us a few minutes ago that the Foreign Ministry has categorically denied the report in the British newspaper. Then he added:

[Begin Hassan recording] What is clear is that Spain's intention of requesting membership in NATO must raise [word indistinct] the question of Gibraltar, the question of the frontier fence, the question of [word indistinct]. All this must be raised in this context and, therefore, I suppose that any idea which is put forward will be given all due attention.

TERRITORY MINISTER ON AUTONOMY PROCESS PROBLEMS

PM251511 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 7

[Vladimir de Semir interview with Spanish Minister of Territorial Administration Rodolfo Martin Villa: "Some Catalonians Must Surmount Feeling of Constant Offense"; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Has the zigzag in the autonomy process ended?

[Answer] I believe that we achieved the autonomy agreement for some purpose; precisely in order to end what you term a zigzag. The fact is that it was extremely difficult from the outset to act correctly in this issue. The political transition took place, and in Catalonia it took place to the sound of that slogan about "freedom, amnesty and an autonomy statute...." It was known very clearly what lay behind the first two, but perhaps not so clearly what lay behind the third. In any event, autonomy was presented as the panacea. This caused an agreed formulation of the constitution, which in itself had to be rather ambiguous, to be far more so in Title VIII, concerning the autonomies, and caused people to have an unclear idea, apart from sentiment, of what the autonomy setup should be like.

Then the drafting of the statutes took place at a specific time in Spanish political life, and their contents did not avoid another dose of ambiguities; and even the more recent process of transferences abounds in these ambiguities and a failure to delimit areas of jurisdiction. Therefore, organization of the autonomy process was absolutely necessary, both for those Spanish peoples still awaiting the drafting of their statutes, and for Catalonia, the Basque country and Galicia.

Idea of Governability of State Imperative

[Question] From a Catalonian--and Basque also, of course--political viewpoint, it has been believed on the basis of historical reasons that autonomy here should have a certain preferential treatment, so to speak. It seems to follow from the recent agreement that the autonomy ceilings will be very similar when the final stages are reached. Is there cause for Catalonia feeling aggrieved?

[Answer] Preferential treatment has occurred; the constitution already lays down a special system for handling the statutes. Moreover, the peculiarities will remain...; those differences and peculiarities which we have all recognized; those stemming from an individual culture and language, different from that which is expressed in Spanish--a matter which principally concerns Catalonia--and those others of a foral [concerning the "fueros"--local privileges] nature with an individual economic system--principally in the Basque country--and others which are clear because of geography, such as those of the islands. But you must realize that the state must function and, of course, a certain homogenization at the end of the process is essential. In this respect, the idea of the governability of the state is imperative.

Reach Bottom of Truth

[Question] And yet, accusations of "depersonalization of the autonomies" and reaffirming of "traditional Spanish centralism" have been leveled....

[Answer] In a society which is becoming increasingly complex--and as is its administration, therefore--it is natural that there should be certain homogenizing principles. Let us bear in mind that we are heading toward the Common Market, as a result of which Spain's own sovereignty will be limited to some extent, since certain decisions will be made within the context of Community decisions. We are engaged in that process, and so to speak of internal autonomies is to go against the current when even Spain's sovereignty will be reduced in part. This is at the economic level; at the cultural level, it is obviously necessary to aim at equality for all the country's cultures. To this end I want all Spanish children to be taught the same history, which is perhaps not the history which you and I were taught, but should be a history which will include all the contributions of all of Spain's peoples. I would like some Catalonian sectors to surmount the feeling of constant offense. Some people have the idea that the conflicts between the two administrations--that of the Generalitat [Catalonian Government] and that of the state--constitute an offense or wrong--as you mentioned earlier--to Catalonia. When a decision of mine is disputed, I have no cause to say that this is an offense to Spain; in any event, it will be a decision or criticism against a Spanish leader. As soon as a decision of the Generalitat of Catalonia is disputed, this is regarded as an offense, when it is merely the disputing of a decision of Catalonia's leaders. It is not an affront. This is a matter which is sometimes exploited excessively, because while today offenses are "decreed," within a fortnight it is "decreed" that those offenses have diminished in order to continue to boast of having influence in Madrid. And this is detrimental to the Catalonians' own dignity. It gives the impression that there is constant manipulation, and so it is necessary to clarify ideas and objectify the issues. This is what the autonomy agreements mean, and I am prepared to accept any dialogue with the Catalonian politicians to reach the bottom of the truth.

DEATH SENTENCE DEMANDED FOR 141 LEFTISTS

TA241720 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Text] The Istanbul Martial Law Command military prosecutor has started legal proceedings against 425 members of the illegal Revolutionary Left organization. The prosecutor is demanding the death sentence for 141 of the 425 suspects.

The martial law military command military prosecutor, Col Suleyman Takkeci, held a news conference in Istanbul where he explained the indictment for the trial. He talked about the establishment and activities of the organization which is called Dev Sol for short. He explained that the organization was set up by Dursun Karatas, Pasa Guven, Huseyin Karci, Irfan Yavru, Bulent Uluer, Abdullah Aksakal, Huseyin Solgun and Celalettin Can in 1978. Colonel Takkeci said that Dursun Karatas, who was the leader responsible for Turkey, divided Turkey into six main regions and planned the organization's activities in accordance with the regional division. The prosecutor said that an underground activities committee had been set up which, through cooperation with the important leaders of the underground world, undertook smuggling activities as well as illegal dealings involving foreign exchange.

He also explained that the organization's other sources of income were from smuggling and selling narcotics, robberies, several businesses and the people's consumption cooperatives.

Colonel Takkeci stated that the Dev Sol's aim was to divide the state and assume power and then establish a socialist order which would bring a proletarian dictatorship. Noting that the organization had relations with the Palestine People's Liberation Front [PPLF], the military prosecutor disclosed that the Dev Sol leaders had reached an agreement with the PPLF representative in Istanbul under which the PPLF would supply them with 1,000 14-mm pistols, 300 Kalashnikov rifles, 300 automatic pistols, 500 hand grenades, 200 smoke bombs, 20 silencers, 10 small radios, 10 small missile launchers, ammunition and other equipment.

Colonel Takkeci said that the Dev Sol militants against whom legal proceedings were started had carried out 303 activities at various dates, including 87 murders, 54 attempted murders and wounding incidents, 44 robberies, 77 explosions and shootings and 41 placard hangings.

The prosecutor said he was demanding the death sentence for 141 of the militants for trying to change the constitutional order by use of force and prison terms ranging from 5 to 15 years for the remaining 284 suspects for collaborating with this crime, for setting up an illegal organization, for being members of an illegal organization, for aiding armed gangs, for premeditated murder and for carrying weapons.

Pointing out that total exports for this year are also expected to increase by some 50 percent and reach $4.5 billion, which is above the target figure, Ozal noted that exports of industrial products increased by 96 percent compared with last year.

Ozal said the rate of inflation will be kept below 40 percent in accordance with the planned target and added: We will continue to view this as our most important problem. Ozal also expressed the hope that loan interest rates will decrease following the decrease in the rate of inflation and the increase in savings.

ARAYIS CALLS FOR COMPREHENSIVE CYPRUS SOLUTION

NC251015 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 15 Aug 81 p 21

[Article: "The New Proposal Package"]

[Excerpts] The TFSC submitted a package of proposals to the Greek Cypriot side at the beginning of this month for the purpose of securing a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus issue.

We gather from the press that the new package of proposals is similar to the one submitted in 1978, which can be summed up as follows: The Cyprus issue should be viewed comprehensively. If it is going to be resolved, it will have to be resolved as such. "Solutions" which suggest a fragmentation policy do not in fact contribute to the settlement of the dispute in a righteous and lasting manner. They can only further deepen the dispute in Cyprus, which is situated in a strategic position of the eastern Mediterranean, and make the relations between the two communities living on the island more complicated. They may even lead to new complications.

In his report to the Security Council last May, UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim too had recommended that the Cyprus issue should be tackled as a whole for a comprehensive settlement. This is a very realistic approach and if the United Nations as well as those who are, in one way or another, concerned with Cyprus wish a just and lasting solution they must identify themselves with this realistic approach.

Meanwhile, Greece too seems to be taking an active interest in the settlement of the Cyprus issue. The recent visit which the Greek Foreign Minister has paid to Cyprus is fairly significant. As a matter of fact, if a just and lasting solution is to be found to this issue Greece must act as constructively as Turkey and it must try to influence the Greek Cypriots. But, for such a solution to be found, the Greek Cypriots must, before everything else, accept living peacefully with the Turkish Cypriots under the roof of a federal state built on a bicommunal and bizonal basis. The Greek Cypriots must see this reality and they must abandon their dream of establishing a unitary Greek Cypriot state over the entire island. Greece can help the Greek Cypriots to appreciate this reality. In this respect, Greece bears a great responsibility.

So long as the Greek Cypriots do not change their general attitude it is impossible to expect a positive result from the intercommunal talks. The Greek Cypriot side must abandon their policy of gaining land from the Turkish Cypriot community by installments.

The most important point to be taken into account in efforts to find a comprehensive and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem is the structure of the federal state--in other words, the federal constitutional order to be introduced. The public is completely in the dark as to what the new Turkish Cypriot proposals envisage regarding the constitutional issue. The peaceful coexistence of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities under the roof of the same federal state depends on the federal constitutional order to be established and on the security to be provided in this respect. Those who experienced the bloody events between 1963 and 1974 must draw a moral lesson from those events and they must dwell seriously on this important issue.

MILLIYET ON KONUK'S ANKARA VISIT, CYPRUS ISSUE

NC211122 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 19 Aug 81 p 8

[Nilufer Yalcin report from Ankara]

[Text] Nejat Konuk, president of the TFSC Legislative Assembly and leader of the Democratic People's Party [DPP], completed his 3-day visit in Ankara and has returned to Cyprus, after having called on Gen Necdet Oztorun, deputy chief of General Staff, last night, and Gen Haydar Saltik, secretary general of the National Security Council, this morning.

During these contacts, certain aspects of the political crisis in the TFSC were frankly discussed. Political circles in Ankara now have the impression that "this crisis has been solved at least for the next 3 months and that no internal skirmishes will take place in the Turkish Cypriot sector during this most important stage of the intercommunal talks."

The minority government of the National Unity Party [NUP], the former party in power, after the elections, stands a chance of remaining in power a bit longer despite a "no confidence" debate scheduled for the first week of September. If both Konuk and Kotak of the DPP or only one of them, refrain from taking part in the voting, the opposition cannot muster the 21 votes necessary to topple the government.

Military and civilian authorities in Ankara unite on the following point: "Free and democratic elections have been held in the TFSC, and NUP, emerging as the biggest party, has been asked to form the government. It is natural for the opposition parties to perform their duties as members of the opposition and even to seek to topple the government so as to form a multi-party or a tripartite coalition government. However, the outcome of such a crisis cannot be determined and no one can say how long such a crisis will last, or what internal skirmishes and friction it will provoke. The TFSC and Turkey have, for the first time, brought comprehensive and positive proposals to the negotiating table for the decisive and just solution of the Cyprus issue. The Greek Cypriots are worried because these proposals cannot easily be rejected. It appears that they are having difficulty in determining certain new tactical and strategic moves. The greatest hope of the Greek Cypriots at this moment is the continuation of the political skirmishes and divisions as well as continued divergence of opinion among the Turkish Cypriot side which will weaken the adversaries. Such a government crisis will serve no purpose other than securing certain advantages for the Greek Cypriot side. For example, during the first few days when the Turkish Cypriot proposals were submitted, Kiprianou had said that "the proposals are such that it won't be easy to reject them," but the other day he changed his mind and argued that "these proposals could be discussed but they could not form the basis of intercommunal talks."

"The more the political skirmishes protract in the TFSC the more the Turkish Cypriot community stands to lose. Therefore, the best thing to do is for the political party leaders to act responsibly and with tolerance, brush aside futile skirmishes, maintain unity and soidarity and take care of their cause during the settlement of this extremely vital issue."

Kiprianou's statement of the other day on the Turkish Cypriot proposals did not surprise Ankara. This confusion on the part of the Greek Cypriot leadership, which so far has rejected each and every proposal, is considered as natural and it is believed that instead of submitting detailed counterproposals, the Greek Cypriot side may concentrate on procedural issues.

BANI-SADR FOLLOWERS TO BUY ARMS 'SECRETLY'

AU251239 Vienna KURIER in German 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Iran's exiled ex-President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr is obviously preparing a putsch against Khomeyni--and a substantial part of the arms for it are to come from Austria.

As KURIER has learned exclusively, representatives of Bani-Sadr posing as businessmen are secretly trying to buy arms in Vienna. They have offered to pay hundreds of millions of schillings.

The exiled Iranians are interested primarily in weapons that are particularly suited for underground struggle: revolvers, pistols, sniper rifles, handgrenades, antitank mines, antitank grenade launchers and mortars.

Since the arms buyers cannot directly approach Austrian firms--primarily the "Voere," "Steyr" and "Assmann" companies--they are trying to contact producers through a trade agency (its name and address are known to the KURIER editor), and through arms dealers.

Last week Bani-Sadr's brother (at present exiled in Paris) is said to have been in Vienna to speed things up. A KURIER reporter was witness to a telephone conversation in which details of the arms deal were discussed and the amount to be spent on the planned arms purchases was fixed.

To date the prospective putschists have not, however, found any arms dealer in Austria who would be willing to circumvent the Austrian regulations. Since the fuss over Austrian arms deliveries to Syria and South America, arms dealers obviously cannot be enticed every by the prospects of fat profits.

ROESCH, PAHR COMMENT ON 'CSSR SPY' HODIC CASE

AU251522 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 25 Aug 81 p 4

[Summary] Vienna--In reply to a parliamentary inquiry submitted by Austrian People's Party deputies, Interior Minister Roesch declared that CSSR spy Dr Josef Hodic, who had been granted Austrian citizenship and who later returned to his homeland, had been given access only to "open" material at the National Defense Academy. "Whenever Hodic showed up at the academy, special security procautions were observed. He used only materials to which other scientists also had access. The contacts with him were confined to military-scientific topics connected with his work for the Austrian Institute for International Politics," Roesch said.

The minister pointed out that the Defense Ministry saw no reason to recommend priority action on Hodic's naturalization, but that in May 1980 the government endorsed the Foreign Ministry's opinion that Hodic's scientific work was highly important and was to be regarded as an extraordinary achievement, as required under the provisions of the naturalization act as a prerequisite for preferential granting of Austrian citizenship.

"Foreign Minister Pahr declared in reply to an inquiry--submitted by Socialist Party floor leader Heinz Fischer--that his ministry regarded the CSSR authorities' statement that Hodic's activities were not directed against Austria but were merely for the purpose of observing Czechoslovak emigres, as completely unsatisfactory and therefore refused to accept it. The fact that the CSSR Government to date has not been ready to clearly dissociate itself from the activities of its secret service on Austrian territory, which are contrary to international law, overshadows the relations between the two countries, Pahr stated."

KREISKY: U.S. SHOULD SOLVE NUCLEAR WASTE PROBLEM

AU261345 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 26 Aug 81 pp 3-4

[Chief Editor Manfred Scheuch interview with Chancellor Kreisky in Bad Woerishofen--date not given]

[Excerpt] Kreisky: I am not considering the question of a coalition government at all, least of all in connection with our energy policy. I deliberately broached this question [the need to start up the Zwentendorf nuclear power plant] before the summer because I felt, and still feel, that many people in Austria are not aware of the situation in which we find ourselves. Out of sheer political demagogy the Austrian People's Party [OEVP] is arguing against Zwentendorf although it was originally an OEVP government which initiated Zwentendorf and which praised that as a step into the next millenium.

I am saying this because people in Austria should realize that the major part of our energy supply consists of Soviet gas, Polish coal and Arab oil, and that to renounce an alternative form of energy such as nuclear energy further increases our dependence. Regarding deliveries of Polish coal, we depend on whether Polish miners are sufficiently supplied with food and whether they produce enough. Regarding deliveries of Soviet gas, we are dependent on the good will of the USSR. Regarding deliveries of Arab oil, we are dependent on whether things are quiet in the Gulf and no open conflict has broken out. Yes, the people must certainly be informed about this in good time so that they can eventually fully recognize the whole irresponsibility of the OEVP policy.

In this context, however, I would like to say onething very clearly: I believe the people are entitled to demand that we come up with an answer to the question of the final storage of nuclear waste. And there is no denying that I believe that if the American side now criticizes the European states for this dependence on energy imports, the United States should also come up with an answer to our question of how the nuclear waste storage problem can be solved, and we should ensure that we have some say in this matter.

Second, the United States has gigantic hard coal reserves. Hence it should make these tremendous energy reserves available to Europe to a larger extent than in the past, on the one hand by modernizing American mining and on the other hand by modernizing the American ports; and third by making available a sufficient tonnage to permit shipments to Europe on acceptable conditions. That is something one has to tell our American friends very clearly and, incidentally, all that could become a source of new economic prosperity for the United States.

Finally, we know that tremendous progress has been achieved in the field of coal processing in South Africa, a country with whose political system we are not very happy. South Africa, which owing to the boycott of the Arab oil suppliers was compelled to tackle coal liquification on a large scale, is already meeting 60 percent of its entire gasoline requirements in this manner. Three more large plants are about to go into operation, and very soon the country's entire gasoline requirements will be met from domestic production. And I have been assured that coal processing in this manner causes far less pollution.

CHOLERA OUTBREAK SUSPECTED IN ROMANIA

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--About 1,000 tourists on the Romanian Black Sea coast have fallen ill with diarrhea, presumably a variety of cholera. To date 5 Romanian citizens have died. The disease has mainly affected tourists staying at the "Neptun" Hotel. So far the Romanian authorities have neither officially informed the World Health Organization nor the home countries of the tourists concerned.

GENSCHER CONDEMNS SOUTH AFRICAN ANGOLA ACTIONS

LD261333 Hamburg DPA in German 1308 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 26 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today condemned the South African invasion of Angola as "unacceptable," the Bonn Ministry of Foreign Affairs said. The Federal Government's view was communicated to the South African ambassador, who was summoned to the Ministry today. Genscher advised him of the Federal Government's expectation that South African troops would be withdrawn from Angola "without delay." Already last night, Genscher had telephoned U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig on this question.

The South African invasion, which according to unconfirmed reports extended up to 300 kilometers into Angolan territory, was evidently the main topic of Genscher's talks today with an OAU ministerial delegation. The delegation, led by Kenyan Minister of Foreign Affairs Robert Ouka and including representatives from Algeria, Nigeria, Tanzania, Rwanda and Zimbabwe, is touring Europe and the United States.

GENSCHER, SOVIET ENVOY MEET IN BONN 26 AUG

LD261444 Hamburg DPA in German 1358 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Aug (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today had a broad exchange of views on current international issues with Soviet Ambassador Vladimir S. Semonov. The Bonn Ministry of Foreign Affairs said afterwards that the talks also served to prepare for the meeting to be held in New York next month between Genscher and his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko.

Genscher welcomed U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's proposed talks with Gromyko and expressed the expectation that the talks would lead to the early opening of negotiations on the deployment of medium-range missiles. Genscher also welcomed President Ronald Reagan's expressed readiness for a dialogue with Soviet party chief Leonid Brezhnev. The federal foreign minister spoke of the importance which the Federal Government attached to the early adoption of a "precise mandate" for the calling of a conference on disarmament in Europe. Genscher also explained the Federal Government's attitude on the neutron weapon as expressed in recent interviews by the federal chancellor and himself. Other topics of his talks with Semenov were Afghanistan and economic aid for Poland. The conversation reportedly took place at the Soviet ambassador's request.

PAPER NOTES FEASIBILITY OF NATURAL GAS FROM U.S.

DW261109 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 26 Aug 81 p 19

[Helmut Maier-Mannhart article: "Natural Gas From the United States--a Promising Deal?"]

[Excerpts] Munich, 25 Aug--At the Ottawa summit, President Reagan made vague and noncommittal remarks about U.S. energy supplies for Europe as an alternative to additional Soviet natural gas imports. But these remarks were enough to make the German gas industry aware that a glance to the other side of the Atlantic would be really worthwhile because there is a growing volume of natural gas in the United States and also a number of firms which would like to make such a deal. Forecasts therefore indicate that by the end of this decade, U.S. natural gas will be available in Europe.

Reagan's suggestion that Europe make use of U.S. energy resources instead of doing further business with Moscow had a very political aspect. In his view, the natural gas agreement which will be concluded shortly will make Western Europe too dependent on the East for energy, even though the deal will not have the originally planned volume.

Irrespective of the fact that Bonn would like to see the supply contract with Moscow signed and that considerable economic interests of the enterprises concerned like Mannesmann (pipes) and AEG (compressors) are connected with it, we should be aware that natural gas from the United States could be an interesting alternative or supplement to the volume of German purchases. Unlike several years ago when strict price controls for natural gas paralyzed exploration activities, there is plenty of natural gas in the United States today. The rapidly growing drilling activities have had an effect.

Experts in the gas industry say that a considerable part of the infrastructure for gas exports already exists. At Cove Point, Maryland, a complete natural gas terminal was built some time ago. There the tankers were to dock which were to bring liquefied gas from Algeria to the United States. This deal, which was not completed because of Algeria's exaggerated demands, dates back to the time when gas was in short supply in the United States. These terminal installations which are now mothballed would be the ideal starting point for supplies for Europe, if they are supplemented by a liquefaction plant. As a rule, such supplies start being profitable when they reach a level of 10 billion cubic meters per year.

The Ruhrgas Ag in Essen, the biggest European gas importer, reportedly has thought little of buying natural gas in the United States. However, this could change in the next few years because Ruhrgas apparently is n[illegible] too happy with the planned treaty with the Soviet Union. Its reserved attitude was [illegible]nalled by remarks of the board to the effect that the deal with Moscow was not [illegible]ge[illegible]y needed for the German energy supply. In addition, in connection with the profitability of natural gas purchases, the following rule applies; up to a distance of some 3,000 km, the costs of transport by pipeline is more favorable, but for longer distances the transport by liquid gas tankers is more advantageous. Considering that the projected pipeline from Siberia to West Europe will be roughly 5,000 km long, it can be concluded that compared to possible U.S. supplies, Soviet natural gas is not the best alternative regarding cost.

German gas industry circles say that a probable deal with the Soviet Union does not rule out the purchase of U.S. natural gas in the years to come, at least not as far as the market is concerned. In the nineties, some contracts will expire for which replacement contracts should be concluded soon. This could be the moment for natural gas imports from the United States.

DIE WELT COMMENTS ON U.S. MILITARY BUDGET CUTS

DW260937 Bonn DIE WELT in German 26 Aug 81 p 2

[Horst-Alexander Siebert commentary: "Seven Percent Is Not There"]

[Text] After 7 months in office, President Ron[illegible]d Reagan is being increasingly confronted with true economic facts, as the social-liberal Walter Eucken called it. The U.S. stock exchange market has plummeted because investors no longer believe that the federal budget can be balanced by 1984 or that interest rates will soon decline enough to make investments attractive.

Wall Street stares at the budget deficit which can be reduced in the coming fiscal year by $42.5 billion only if defense expenditures are also cut. Actually, $10-$20 billion should be cut annually. Social security, public health and other welfare programs cannot be the only ones to bear the cuts.

A decision may be made today when Budget Director Stockman, Secretary of Defense Weinberger and Reagan's right hand man, Meese, meet for talks in Los Angeles. At any rate, the President cannot continue with his wish to increase the military budget in real terms by 7 percent annually, that is, in addition to inflation.

Stockman apparently is considering not starting out as planned with the 1982 budget which envisages $222 billion for defense purposes. The basis will rather be Jimmy Carter's 1981 military budget which is about $30 billion lower.

If you calculate all that, America's real defense expenditures would increase next year by only 2-3 percent in real terms. The deficit brings Reagan under pressure to make a move. Politically, he can hardly allow the Dow Jones index to drop to 850 points.

PAPER DISCUSSES EUGENE ROSTOW'S DEFENSE IDEAS

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Compulsion To Be Reasonable"]

[Text] Arms control as a necessary goal to be aimed for, but not with wild confusion--that was the issue of a talk between this paper and Eugene Rostow, the arms control expert of the Washington government. Rostow leaves nothing unclear about the cold formula of this aim: Both superpowers must agree on how to keep armaments under control. It is not just a matter of preserving peace, it is also a matter of economic necessity. The material battle of a world war is being fought not only abstractly, but with the expenditure of enormous means in peacetime, and both giants are interested in reason and in turning back prior to reaching exhaustion.

Rostow insists on the argument of compulsion to be reasonable. Most of all, he sticks with the demand that negotiations on "medium-range arms" must be included in the SALT round, which means that they will not be transferred from the thus far undiscussed gray zone to a special field of negotiation. It also means a limitation of the Europeans' say in the matter, let alone the utopian suggestions that the topic can be evaded at the main front of confrontation between both superpowers. If the matter is included in SALT, however, it would mean negotiations would last for a long time. The European peace movement's pressure for time serves only the war of nerves unleashed by Moscow, and Moscow can also then create better basic positions for long bargaining. Rostow also confirms a German conception that the disclosure of data on both sides is the prerequisite for firm agreements on arms control to stabilize peace again. As regards the argument presented with demagogic intensity that the Americans could wage "limited" nuclear war in Europe, (a "scenario" not presented by the doctrine of the Soviet side), Rostow maintains irrefutably that the presence of highly developed nuclear arms in Europe increases the hostage function of the U.S. forces stationed in Europe.

Rostow's statements are just the beginning of necessary U.S. efforts to supply a proper basis for the European will for defense and peace amid a flurry of discussions. The visit by Secretary of State Haig to Bonn ought to contribute to further consolidation.

Meanwhile, President Francois Mitterrand said that when Mr Cheysson visits Jordan, Lebanon and Syria at the end of this week, he will be seeking "ways of peace in the respect of the traditional friendships" in the Middle East.

He added that the Cheysson visit will be concerned "to guarantee the security of the state of Israel in its recognised frontiers and to recognise the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people." It was a question, Mr Mitterrand said, of "preserving a careful balance between antagonisms and to retain the confidence of both sides in this region."

MITTERRAND MEETS WITH AMIR OF QATAR 26 AUG

NC261856 Paris AFP in English 1624 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Aug (AFP)--The amir of Qatar, Shaykh Khalifah ibn Hamad Al Thani, met with French President Francois Mitterrand over lunch here today for talks on the Middle East and bilateral relations.

The amir, who is on a private visit to France, said afterward that the discussions focused on the Palestinian problem and the Saudi Arabian plan for a Middle East settlement. He said the Saudi proposals reflected the desire of Arab states for "a just and durable peace conforming to international laws and charters and to United Nations resolutions." He said the two heads of state and their entourages, which included French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, also discussed the "positive role that France could play" in the area.

Mr Cheysson leaves on Saturday for a tour of Jordan, Lebanon and Syria.

The amir said the talks included "the security of the Gulf which must remain an area of peace, security and stability", as well as North-South dialogue and bilateral relations between France and Qatar. The amir, who arrived in Paris on Saturday from Geneva where his son took part in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) conference, returns home at the end of the month.

Amir Press Statement

GF261846 Doha Domestic Service in Arabic 1530 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The amir, Shaykh Khalifah ibn Hamad Al Thani, met with French President Francois Mitterrand at 1530 today. Following the meeting, the amir, Shaykh Khalifah ibn Hamad Al Thani, made the following press statement:

I am very pleased at the meeting with President Francois Mitterrand. We exchanged views on the international situation and bilateral relations. Our discussion dealt with the Middle East situation in general and the Palestinian issue in particular, which is the crux of the dispute in the region. We believe that it is the responsibility of the international community as a whole to work immediately for a just solution in accordance with the principles of right and justice. This solution must guarantee Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied in 1967, including Jerusalem, and the recognition of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and to establish an independent state in their homeland.

The amir added: The discussion also dealt with the Saudi initiative, which reflects the Arab nation's genuine desire to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in accordance with international agreements and UN resolutions. It also dealt with the important and positive role France can play in establishing this peace. We also discussed the issue of Gulf security. I stressed its importance to the Gulf countries and to the entire world. I also emphasized that the Gulf should remain an area of security, peace and stability. Our talks also covered the current North-South dialogue and the need to support all efforts being exerted to cement mutual cooperation among the industrialized countries and the Third World. We also discussed the necessity that this cooperation establish bases that will help achieve further progress and prosperity for humanity. I am pleased to say that my talks with the French president were useful and constructive.

They were conducted in an atmosphere of friendship and frankness, which reflects the close relations linking the two countries in various fields.

PS CONDEMNS 'BRUTALLY REPRESSIVE' IRANIAN REGIME

PM261400 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Aug 81 p 2

[French Socialist Party communique: "The PS 'Condemns the Acts of So Brutally Repressive a Regime'"]

[Text] The French PS published on Friday, 14 August, the following communique: "The dramatic development of the situation in Iran, one of whose consequences has been the deterioration of the relations between France and the Iranian authorities, has caused concern to the PS. The process which has led to the removal of President Bani-Sadr and the appointment of his successor has been marked with a sudden increase in executions. Among the people executed have been both young, male and female, activists and people who were imprisoned and tortured under the shah. This process has also been marked by an increasing number of attempts on the lives of political personalities. Iran, which is waging war against Iraq and, at the same time, is engaged in an internal fight against the aspirations of certain national minorities, especially the Kurds, is now faced with the possibility of a civil war. And, finally, diplomatic isolation has been compounded by serious economic difficulties.

"Political and religious intolerance has greatly disappointed hopes for freedom and justice, for which the Iranian people have been fighting for so many years. This situation can in no way justify the theses of the champions of the imperial regime, which can largely be blamed for this negative development. But the PS, which consistently denounced the shah's dictatorship, wants to state clearly that it condemns the acts of so brutally repressive a regime.

"The PS," the communique concludes, "is concerned over the risks to which this tension may expose peace in that part of the world, and it restates its commitment to a strict respect for international principles."

LE MONDE HITS VACILLATING U.S. MIDEAST POLICY

[Editorial: "Mr Reagan's Shillyshallying in the Near East"]

[Text] The decision to lift the U.S. embargo on the supply of F-15 and F-16 aircraft to Israel which was announced Monday 17 August was predictable and even expected. Indeed, since Washington refrained from officially condemning the raid on the Tammuz power station and the bombing of Beirut, the "sanction" constituted by the embargo was bound to have merely a symbolic and hence temporary nature. The moral pressure which Israel exerts on the United States either directly or through the U.S. Jewish community has once again proved stronger than that which U.S. policy is capable of exerting on the Jewish state. Hence the latter has no hesitation in presenting Washington with faits accomplis.

It will have taken an exceptional combination of circumstances for the United States to finally impose on Jerusalem a cease-fire between Syrians, Palestinians and Israelis in Lebanon, but the success of Mr Habib's mission does not imply that Washington is prepared to act as arbiter between the Israelis and Arabs.

Nonetheless, this is the role which Egypt and Saudi Arabia, the two most faithful U.S. allies in the Near East, would like to see it play; these two countries maintain "special relations" with the United States and these relations are playing a growing part in the balance of forces which Washington must take into account.

Cairo is now counting solely on U.S. intervention to break the deadlock in negotiations with Israel on autonomy for the occupied territories. For its part, Prince Fahd's plan proposing the establishment of a Palestinian state bordering on Israel whose peaceful intentions would be confirmed by an international guarantee, although deemed unacceptable by Jerusalem, bears witness to Saudi Arabia's desire to make its voice heard in the Israeli-Arab uproar.

But whether it is a question of autonomy or independence, the objectives to be attained presuppose that the United States should at some stage talk to the PLO. However, it has sworn not to talk with the Palestinian organization until it has openly recognized Israel's right to existence. This attitude may not rule out the possibility of sounding out the situation indirectly through intermediaries, but at present this has no chance of leading to dialogue while Washington remains dependent on Jerusalem's "go-ahead." However, Mr Begin is less prepared than ever to recognize the PLO as an interlocutor.

Therefore, there is complete stalemate. The United States may be using this as an excuse in that the Israeli veto absolves it from thinking up an original solution to the problem. Had it not hoped, so to speak, to drown the problem in the anti-Soviet "strategic consensus" which Mr Haig went to propose to the Gulf countries this spring? The failure of that attempt at diversion could have given Washington food for thought, but in light of recent events, it seems that Mr Reagan prefers to confine himself to shortsighted empiricism.

Moreover, the tougher Israeli line reflected in the recent Knesset elections would require a considerable effort by the United States if it were to play the role of mediator, but as time passes, it will be more difficult to obtain from Israel concessions which might open up prospects of a lasting settlement in the Near East.

ISRAEL'S NAVON RECEIVES MESSAGE FROM MITTERRAND

TA251757 Tel Aviv ITIM in Hebrew 1750 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Jerusalem, 25 Aug (GPO)--President Yitzhaq Navon today received a message from French President Francois Mitterrand, in which the latter thanked Navon for the congratulations he had sent him on his election as the French president. Among other things, Mitterrand wrote:

"I would like to ensure you that my most sincere desire is that friendly and open relations develop between our two nations. You are well aware of my desire to make a substantial contribution to a just peace in the Middle East. In order for such peace to be long-lasting, it must guarantee security for Israel within secure and recognized borders founded on guarantees, as well as the right of the Palestinian people to have a motherland the shape of which it will decide upon by its own choosing. The president of Israel will, of necessity, play a significant role in this aspiration toward peace. Please accept my most noble respects and sincere wish for the well-being and prosperity of the people in Israel."

Mitterrand concluded his message in a warm personal greeting to President Navon, which he added in his own writing.

DEFENSE MINISTER LAGORIO ON CRUISE MISSILES SITE

PM261314 Rome LA REPUBBLICA inItalian 9-10 Aug 81 p 2

[Giorgio Battistini interview with Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio: "Lagorio Discusses the Cruise Missiles"; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Minister, why was Sicily chosen? Why Comiso, near Ragusa on the island's southernmost tip? Is this a gun aimed at the most turbulent areas of North Africa?

[Answer] The program was decided in December 1979 by the Italian Parliament in conjunction with NATO to remedy the East-West imbalance of forces which had arisen. The work will take from 1981 to 1986. The cost will be 200 billion, paid for by the U.S. Treasury and NATO and hence by Italy, too. Of course, these missiles are a deterrent. The key to a system of peace lies in the balance of forces. By restoring this balance, a mechanism is set in motion which could lead us to detente in a framework of mutual security.

[Question] Yes, but Moscow recently announced that it is prepared to reduce its nuclear warheads in Europe in exchange for the NATO countries' agreement not to deploy new missiles. Is the choice of Comiso Italy's reply?

[Answer] After the NATO decision in 1979, we gradually witnessed a thaw on the Soviet Government's part; just as it had previously been inflexible and in some cases even threatening, its position now became gradually more flexible, up to the recent PRAVDA article by Defense Minister Ustinov. The most significant aspect was probably the meeting between Brezhnev and Brandt, who visited Moscow in his capacity as chairman of the Socialist International. On that occasion, Brezhnev suddenly put forward the idea of a moratorium in the following terms; the USSR would suspend production of its SS-20 missiles and hence freeze the situation; the Western countries would proceed with production of the U.S. cruise missiles, they would prepare bases in Europe, but only the outcome of the negotiation would establish whether, on what scale, when and where these missiles can be deployed. These are, therefore, objective conditions which give no reason to despair of negotiations, and the Italian Government attaches particular importance to these glimmers of light.

[Question] But meanwhile, let's deploy missiles in Sicily....

[Answer] I think it is necessary to examine history and see what happened in our country when the naval bases were constructed in La Spezia and Taranto, what happened in the early sixties when the Jupiter missile ramps were installed in Puglia. Fortunately, shortly after that a period of detente began and the devices were withdrawn and destroyed.

[Question] Thus, while awaiting negotiations, with America pressing for rearmament, urged on by a resurgent arms industry, we are deploying 112 nuclear missiles in Sicily, turning the island into a target for nuclear attacks. Moreover, we are allowing the Americans to have the final word on the use of these devices.

[Answer] No, just a moment. From 1962, Italy has always secured the double-key principle. The use of the bases does not depend exclusively on the U.S. command but on a joint agreement by the Italian and U.S. authorities. Of course, if conflict breaks out, the final word falls to the commander in chief of all the forces. As for the dangers, it has been said that the base is a target for possible reprisals. From the military viewpoint this is not the case. In a crisis period, the base moves immediately and the squadrons of the cruise units move over a very vast area, dispersing like needles in a haystack. Why do you think we chose an airport as a base? The missiles are cylinders 5 meters long and 50 cm wide, fit perfectly into aircraft and can be mounted on a truck. From the military viewpoint they do not increase the risk for the population. This base is less exposed than others.

Additional Lagorio Comments

PM261417 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 23-24 Aug 81 p 3

[Paolo Guzzanti interview with Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio: "What Do You Think of Reagan?"]

[Text] Rome--[Question] Mr Lagorio, what do you think of Reagan? Do you approve of the way in which the U.S. President challenged Al-Qadhdhafi?

[Answer] There are different ways of doing things. Last year I too sent warships into the waters that Al-Qadhdhafi claims to have annexed....

[Question] That was to defend the Italian ship Saipem, was it not?

[Answer] Yes. Libyan aircraft were buzzing it and I sent two of our warships to that part of the sea. Then the company which owned the Saipem, Texaco, decided to withdraw and to submit the matter to the court at The Hague.

[Question] So you approve of using the tough approach with Al-Qadhdhafi?

[Answer] I repeat; there are different ways of doing things. It is a matter of degree. President Reagan is quite right to defend the principle of the freedom of the seas, which has facilitated relations among the peoples. But having said that, the golden mean should always be observed. Would you light a cigarette in a powder magazine? You are entitled to smoke, but not to cause an explosion.

[Question] Did the Americans warn you that an element of risk existed?

[Answer] On this occasion, the Americans simply notified us of the exercises. This is normal practice.

[Question] But Italy is also the country which hosts the 6th Fleet....

[Answer] Yes, but that adds nothing, from the legal viewpoint. We also have dealings with countries that send their warships into the Tyrrhenian Sea, close to our territorial waters, and they do not inform us at all. Soviet warships often pass between Elba and Corsica. Now in the case of the 6th Fleet, we are dealing not with a legal problem but a problem of intentions.

[Question] As defense minister, were you informed by the Italian admirals and generals of the special nature that this U.S. exercise might have?
[Answer] Definitely not.

[Question] Reagan has said that he put the Libyans to the test. The word "test" conflicts with the expression "routine exercise." Were you and the Italian Government at least advised of the intention to carry out this test?

[Answer] Reagan said that he resumed a practice that had been dropped at some point by the Carter Presidency.

[Question] When?
[Answer] I do not know exactly, but I believe last year.

[Question] According to a Foreign Ministry note, Carter had no less than seven exercises held in those waters and vetoed two.

[Answer] Precisely: Reagan said that his predecessor suspended the practice of those maneuvers and that he decided to reintroduce it.

[Question] So there was an intention of reintroduction, or whatever you want to call it. The Italian Foreign Ministry was not informed or it and neither were you nor the top military echelons. Is this so?

[Answer] The commander of the NATO naval forces in the Mediterranean is an Italian, Admiral Monassi. I did not hear anything from him either, but you could ask him whether or not notification of the exercise was sent to him too. And whether or not he perhaps drew any political conclusions from it. Perhaps he too thought that beyond 3-12 nautical miles the waters are international.

[Question] The fact remains that you, the Italian defense minister, were kept in the dark.

[Answer] The Foreign Ministry was informed. The most senior authority, the foreign minister, was kept in touch.

[Question] Informed or misinformed? The U.S. notification spoke only in terms of "routine."

[Answer] It could not have been otherwise, since the exercise took place in international waters. Whether or not behind this there an tention on Reagan's part to sound out the Libyans' reaction, it was certainly not notified to the Foreign Ministry.

[Question] Did you discuss it with Minister Colombo?
[Answer] No, he knew nothing of such intentions, either.

[Question] So, according to what President Reagan said after the incident, you and Colombo were not informed of the U.S. ally's political intentions.

[Answer] I believe that the Americans merely went too far in a situation in which they were in the right. I myself behaved not very differently when Saipem II's drilling operations were being disturbed by Libyan ships; I sent an Italian frigate and corvette.

[Question] We risked an incident at that time.
[Answer] Nothing happened; some Libyan submarines appeared but there were no clashes.

[Question] Why do you say that Reagan is lighting a cigarette in a magazine?

[Answer] Because in my opinion there is an error of tone, of excess, of defiance, albeit in defense of an absolutely legitimate right, namely to sail in waters recognized as international.

OFFICIALS REPORT SEIZURE OF LEBANESE HASHISH BOAT

AU261618 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] Bari, southern Italy, 26 Aug (ANSA)--The 33 quintals (over 36 tons) of hashish seized Tuesday aboard the Lebanese motor vessel, Lucas Sky, moored in this Adriatic port city, were earmarked for the Dutch, West German and French markets, port authorities reported today. They also disclosed that along with the huge cargo of hashish, one hundred liters of hashish oil was found by customs police searching the holds of the ship.

The value of the illegal cargo was put at some 25 million dollars and investigators speculated that these earnings would have been used to pay for weapons for a European terrorist organization.

Police and magistrates here were reportedly convinced that the Lucas Sky, sailing under another name, was the ship which unloaded the Soviet-made rocket launchers at another Adriatic port two years ago found in the possession of a leader of the ultra-leftwing Autonomia Operaia (Workers' Autonomy), Daniele Pifano.

According to the initial investigation into the movements of the ship, the Lucas Sky developed motor trouble in the Otranto Channel, between Italy and Albania, and the captain abandoned ship aboard a lifeboat after instructing the Italian first mate to radio for a tug to tow the vessel to the port of Bari.

Earlier this week, customs police turned up a number of irregularities including a Spanish flag flown by the vessel of Lebanese registry when the ship was underway, and incomplete identification documents for the six members of the crew. Police confirmed today that these crewmen were under arrest and identified them as Moussa Malko Moussa, 25 years old, and two more Lebanese nationals, 31 year-old Youssef Hanna Fouad and 24-year-old Georges Boutros Sanir, Turkish national Jellou Daoud, 55, and two Italians, Diego Superina, 24, and Giuseppe Savino, 32.

The thirty-three quintals of hashish were wrapped in waterproof packages and were apparently prepared for shipment so that the packages could be tossed into the sea, if the need arose, and later recovered.

TRADE DELEGATION GOES TO LIBYA FOR MEETINGS

AU261958 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] Rome, 26 Aug (ANSA)--An Italian delegation led by Undersecretary for Foreign Trade Baldassare Armato is currently on a visit to Tripoli to prepare for the planned third session of the Italo-Libyan mixed commission. During the meetings there, the major topic will be bilateral trade with special reference to petrochemicals, energy problems, and banking cooperation.

Another major issue will be the precise identification of projects which could be executed by Italian companies in the Libyan development plan. This will involve discussing ways of promoting the transfer of technology to the North African state, as well as openings for joint ventures both there and in Italy.

PCI OUTVOTED ON BOLOGNA CITY HALL RESOLUTION

AU270833 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Text] Bologna, 27 Aug (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI) was still reeling here today from the blow of having been outvoted for the first time in the city hall it has ruled for thirty-five consecutive years. The blow was dealt by the Socialist Party (PSI), which sided with the neofascist MSI Party and its own four central government partners--the Christian Democrats, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals--on a document decrying Soviet "rearmament" and "military aggression."

The resolution was pushed through with a 28-21 vote.

It was the PCI which summoned the special city hall meeting into session with an agenda calling for talks on the problems of world peace and the arms race. This model city in central Italy has become something of a European showcase for communists administrative talent.

LA REPUBBLICA VIEWS ON U.S. POLICIES, REAGAN MOVES

Commentary on N-Bomb

PM250823 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Sandro Viola commentary: "A Very Dangerous Confrontation"]

[Text] Barely 7 months after Reagan's installation in the White House, the communist world seems to be facing the strongest pressure experienced from that quarter in 20 years. Indeed, in a relatively short time, there have been two events which in recent years would have been considered pure hypothesis by some U.S. experts--a hypothesis which, if put into practice, would have returned America to the levels of political and military power it enjoyed in the fifties and placed the USSR in an extremely difficult position.

What are these two events? The first, prior to Reagan's election, was the unleashing within the borders of the "Soviet empire" of a wave of social and political agitation (the Polish case) capable of spreading to the other communist countries. The second was the U.S. launching of an arms race of such scale and intensity that the USSR is now forced to make agonizing decisions; either it decides to keep pace, in which case it will set back the standard of living in Soviet society by 15 years, or it abandons the race and hence accepts the restoration of U.S. superiority in the world.

The White House's announcement of the decision to proceed with assembling the neutron bomb is merely another move to speed up the U.S. race toward the deterioration of the Soviet economy and consequent military superiority. In this, as in other spheres, Reaganism is showing undeniable consistency.

First, the new administration decided to double the defense budget between now and 1985, increasing it from $158 billion to $336 billion, with an increase which in the first year (1981-1982) will be around 30 percent. Thus, it has started work on a series of impressive projects; increasing the battle fleet from 150 to 600 units; the new Stealth bomber; the Trident type nuclear submarine; the new MX intercontinental ballistic missile system; the resumption of projects on ABM antimissile missiles, and now, the neutron bomb.

Accompanied by appropriate political stances (the refusal--hitherto--of any dialogue with the USSR, the decision to sell offensive weapons to China), the U.S. rearmament and, more generally, the "Reagan line" have now produced their first results. The USSR seems uncertain, extremely worried, and even seems to be backing down already. You only have to look at the Euromissiles question; starting from an intransigent position (no negotiations on the nuclear balance in Europe unless NATO abandons the decision to deploy the new generation of missiles), an initial concession was made in February (the proposal for a moratorium), and the Kremlin now seems prepared to negotiate while production of the ershing II and cruise missiles is in progress. For around 2 months, one monotonous message has been coming from Moscow (talk, negotiate) and the message becomes more anxious with each week that passes.

The result of this is that the image of Reaganism is now more than that of a rising star. The strength which the new administration has shown at every level (full control of Congress, the toughness in relations with the Soviets, the spirit of authority with which the air traffic controllers' case has been handled) has now struck the West's imagination as an authentic American rebirth. It is not simply because of high interest rates that capital is flowing into U.S. banks. It is not for purely monetary reasons that the dollar was quoted at 1,271 lira yesterday. Reagan's America seems energetic and secure; the crises of confidence which the country had experienced for a whole decade is clearly over.

However, the impression is that applause for this "new" America might at present only be American applause. Indeed, Reaganism brings with it two serious consequences for the European allies and for the international balance. On the one hand, there is the extremist attitude toward the Soviet Union; on the other hand, there is the lack of consideration and ill-concealed arrogance toward Europe.

From this viewpoint, the decision to manufacure the neutron bomb within 6 to 8 months is very negative. Indeed, as regards relations with the USSR, it is important to remember that the announcement on the neutron bomb came at a time when there was a little less than a month to go before what was to be the first real resumption of U.S.-USSR contacts, in other words, the Haig-Gromyko meeting at the United Nations. If there was a way of creating the worst possible situation for this meeting, it has been found. From this, the conclusion that has to be drawn is the confirmation that the U.S. Government is at present not really interested in the idea of negotiations with Moscow likely to reduce (once the recent advantages had been acquired) an international tension which has now reached dangerous levels.

But let's turn to relations between America and Europe. The decision on the neutron bomb provides a whole series of indications in this sphere.

1--Though Reagan spoke of the need for continuous consultation with the European allies in his first few months in office, it must be pointed out that this consultation does not exist. The statement which Prime Minister Sapdolini made yesterday in which he explained how and when the Americans informed him of the neutron bomb revealed the acute discontent of a man faced with a fait accompli.

2--The statements that, once manufactured, the neutron bombs will remain in the United States and that the decision is hence a purely internal matter are excessively glib. The neutron bomb, a weapon to be used as a response to a ground attack, would be entirely useless, an inordinate expense, if it were not intended to be deployed on European territory. In this context, the story of an "internal decision"--which concerns the United States alone and not its allies--borders on arrogance.

3--There is equally disturbing indifference to the European governments' political problems. When Schmidt is facing a wave of neutralist feeling and is trying to maintain control over an SPD in which rejection of the new missiles is widespread; when the Italians have just learned that the inhabitants of Comiso are now a target for the Soviet S-20 milliles; when governments in Belgium and the Netherlands are being formed and collapsing over the Euromissile problem, Reagan's arms race could have been conducted with more consideration for these difficulties, with more caution.

In short, Reagan's America is a success, is going full steam ahead, but is showing a little too much interference. It is asking everything of the European allies. It is asking them to put up with the dollar's rise, with all the damage it is causing to the old continent's economies, and at the same time to increase military spending. It is asking them to reduce trade with the communist world and now to prepare to receive on their territories a type of nuclear weapon on which that there has been no consultation.

The Washington government seems rather more considerate toward its own citizens. When the new MX missiles (intercontinental missiles) were going to be deployed in Utah, the Mormon Church made a great fuss and the Pentagon then began to study the possibility of keeping the MX on board special aircraft. However, there is no sign that the Pentagon might accept the protests of Comiso's priest tomorrow.

Comment on Libyan Incident

PM261047 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 20 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Sandro Viola commentary: "Another Show of Strength"]

[Excerpt] Should it be inferred that the shooting down of two of Al-Qadhdhafi's aircraft constitutes the first step in a U.S. intervention in Libya?

Probably not: We have not (or not yet) reached this point. But what is certain is that the incident in the Gulf of Sidra is revealing increasingly clearly a tough image of Reagan's United States. Diplomatic cautions seem to have been set aside and the dominant impulse is still to "show the flag," to demonstrate U.S. global strength.

Nor is this happening only in the Mediterranean. The recent visit to Latin America by Mrs Jeane Kirkpatrick, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, showed very clearly the mental attitude behind the policy of the "New America." Fidel Castro, Mrs Kirkpatrick says, is "a subject for psychological examinations," whereas General Pinochet is perfectly acceptable and indeed "our two governments are perfectly on the same wavelength." So the U.S. friends and clients are on one side (even when they are people whose presence would be embarrassing for any civilized person) and its adversaries on the other.

But the incident in the Gulf of Sidra does not only bear witness to this policy or roughness toward whoever is not friends with the "New America." Indeed, it has at least a couple of other worrying aspects. First, it constitutes another blow to the prestige of the USSR, which, though not an ally, is certainly friendly--and how--with Al-Qadhdhafi's Libya. The Kremlin will almost certainly not (according to its practice) react openly to the shooting down of the Russian-manufactured aircraft. But its leaders will regard the events as another U.S. show of strength, a further deterioration in the international climate, yet another obstacle to the attempts to resume the East-West dialogue.

Second, the not entirely innocent encounter between the Nimitz and the Forrestal in the waters overlooking the Libyan coast cannot leave the U.S. European allies, and particularly Italy, indifferent.

Rightly or wrongly, the Italian Government has maintained good relations with Al-Qadhdhafi, prompted in this attitude by the sizeable interests of our industries in Libya, and by the presence of a very large Italian community. How will our government react to what now seems like a definitive break (and perhaps the prelude to an intervention) between our major ally and the Tripoli regime?

What is certain is that many serious difficulties face the Spadolini government in this regard (as was apparent from the lengthy and unsettled talks among Colombo, Spadolini and Pertini on the one hand, and between the Italian Foreign Ministry, Paris, Bonn and London, on the other. Therefore it is legitimate to ask the following question: Does the hard line adopted by Reagan's United States take sufficient account of its allies' interests?

Of course, considerations regarding events in the Gulf of Sidra and possible U.S. responsibilities must not make one forget who Al-Qadhdhafi is and what he has represented over the years--as a factor of instability, as the instigator of absurd and most dangerous adventures--in Africa and the Mediterranean. But yesterday's events are worrying above all as an indication of the new U.S. line. Because, of course, it is possible that Washington's version of events, namely that the U.S. aircraft were attacked by the Libyan ones, is true. Naturally, anything is possible. But according to military experts, SUKHOI 22's (the Libyan aircraft) cannot attack U.S. F-14s unless they are piloted by Kamikazes, and memories of the "Tonkin incident" teach us to remain suspicious.

More on Libyan Incident

[Paolo Guzzanti report: "Americans Lied"]

[Text] Rome--The questions raised by LA REPUBBLICA yesterday have been answered today by the Foreign Ministry in a note released to news agencies. Before reproducing the text of the document, let us sum up some of the questions raised by our paper, for readers' convenience.

Did or did not the U.S. Embassy notify the Italian Government of President Reagan's intentions before the Gulf of Sidra incident in the same terms that the President used after the event? Was the NATO Command for Southern Europe informed? If so, in what terms? Were Italian NATO officers informed of the real nature of the initiative? Did they in turn notify the Italian Defense Ministry? Why did the Americans assure the Italian foreign minister of the "purely routine" nature of the exercise, which, however, according to Reagan's subsequent remarks should have been regarded as a military test of Al-Qadhdhafi's Libya?

The Foreign Ministry has specified as follows: "1--prior notification concerning the exercises was in fact supplied on 14 August; 2--the normal nature of the air and sea exercises, as stressed by the U.S. Embassy in Rome, is confirmed in the Washington government's official communication to the UN Security Council, in the part that mentions 'routine peaceful naval exercises' and has been confirmed in Brussles by Americans within the NATO council; 3--previous U.S. exercises in the same area took place in July 1977; March, July and September 1978; April and July 1979; and June and September 1980.

"With regard to the international legal status of the waters in which the U.S. maneuvers, which were national--not NATO--maneuvers," the Foreign Ministry note continues, "in accordance with the foreign minister's statements to the lower house on 21 August, attention is drawn to the fact that, in October 1973, Italy expressed the greatest reservations concerning the legitimacy of Libya's unilateral measure to extend its territorial waters, which reservations were repeated in January 1974 in the United Nations. Moreover, this stance coincides with that of several other states, including the USSR, for instance, which in December 1973 informed Italy that it had communicated to Libya its unwillingness to recognize the legitimacy of such unilateral measures."

We asked the U.S. Embassy in Rome in what form and what terms the Italian Government was notified of the imminent holding of the exercises. We learned that Embassy First Secretary John Willet visited the Foreign Ministry on 14 August and delivered the communication to official Moscato. The text of that communication explicity uses the word "routine." Mr Willet also announced that the Libyan Government had been informed through the usual channels. The U.S. Embassy repeats that the expression used is the same as the one used by Secretary Weinberger and states that it is not aware of any other political or military interpretations of the events.

So much for the versions of events supplied by the Italian Foreign Ministry and, informally, by the U.S. Embassy. They confirm the good faith of our foreign minister, Colombo, when he stated that he was informed of the routine nature of the notorious exercises.

But the accounts supplied by the Foreign Ministry--and even more so by the U.S. Embassy--are more than incomplete. Indeed, the U.S. account seems openly false, by omission.

Why? What factors make it possible to question the credibility of the word "routine" contained in the diplomatic notification of the 6th Fleet's naval maneuver? Let us see.

1--No mention is made of the fact that in July a U.S. Security Council meeting took place at the White House, attended by Reagan and commander of the 6th Fleet Vice Admiral Rowden, during which an examination and careful assessment was made of the possibility of reintroducing the entry (abolished by Carter) of the U.S. fleet into the waters claimed by Al-Qadhdhafi.

2--During the meeting, not only was Vice Admiral Rowden ordered to cross that line, but an examination was made of what measures should be adopted in the event of the Libyans risking a military response. On that occasion, President Reagan said that any attack must be countered without hesitation.

3--The U.S. Embassy fails to mention, or feigns ignorance of, the fact that last Thursday, speaking at Republican Party headquarters at Costa Mesa in California, near Los Angeles, President Reagan said verbatim: "For the last couple of years, for whatever reason, our navy has been ordered to hold its maneuvers but to stay on the other side of that line and not challenge that."

He continued as follows: "The exercise properly requires crossing to a certain extent that line and I approved that we would do that." [Reagan's remarks quoted in English and followed by Italian translation]

This quote is taken from yesterday's HERALD TRIBUNE, under the headline: "Reagan Says He Knew Risk of Libyan Exercise."

4--The importance of this statement is clear; Reagan says that Carter, his predecessor, abolished "for various reasons" [as published], the practice of holding exercises in the waters claimed by Al-Qadhdhafi. He goes on to say that he decided to resume that practice, thus breaking away from his predecessor's custom.

We have also seen that to assess all aspects of this innovation, Reagan decided it was advisable to convene a special Security Council meeting.

One is therefore prompted to wonder what significance to attach to the two statements hitherto confirmed--one claiming that this exercise was purely routine, and the other duly listing the air and sea exercises "in that area" over the past 2 years.

Unless President Reagan is lying (and one cannot see why he should be), the exercises held over the past 2 years by the 6th Fleet under Carter's presidency must, according to the note issued by the Foreign Ministry yesterday, be regarded as taking place "on that side" rather than "on this side" of the demarcation line illegally defined by Al-Qadhdhafi.

The conclusion is obvious. We are talking not about whether or not Reagan was right to challenge Al-Qadhdhafi's claims, but about whether or not he lied to his allies (and primarily Italy, which hosts his fleet) by passing off as "routine" a military operation involving "a calculated risk" that could have involved the members of the alliance. It seems to us that proof of the lie on this point has been reached beyond any reasonable doubt.

BALSEMAO BEGINS CONTACTS TO FORM NEW GOVERNMENT

LD252122 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Text] Pinto Balsemao, already designated by President Ramalho Eanes to head the eighth constitutional government, has told reporters that he will start contacts immediately with a view to putting his cabinet together. Balsemao was speaking after a 90-minute meeting this morning with the president of the republic. In the afternoon the prime minister-designate received Christian Democratic leader Freitas do Amaral, the third such meeting since Balsemao was chosen by the Social Democratic Party to lead the eighth government.

MINISTRY CONDEMNS S. AFRICAN ANGOLA ACTION

LD262030 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] The Portuguese Foreign Ministry issued a communique this morning setting out the Lisbon government's official stand on the South African military actions against Angola, in which it stated: The Portuguese Government expresses its clear repudiation of South Africa's action, regrets the loss of human lives, reaffirms the right of the People's Republic of Angola to its sovereignty and territorial integrity, (?voices its support for) the ban on resorting to armed force in keeping with the UN spirit and, in this case, its support for the independence of Namibia provided for in Security Council Resolution 435.

Condemnation of South Africa's attack has already been voiced by the PCP, the Popular Monarchist Party, the Independent Social Democratic Association, the Popular Democratic Union and the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy.

Eanes Contacts Dos Santos

LD262040 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Text] Joaquim Letria, spokesman for the Presidency, today read the following communique:

[Begin Letria recording] The president of the republic today sent a cable to President Jose Eduardo dos Santos firmly condemning the military attack carried out by the Republic of South Africa against the integrity of the People's Republic of Angola. The president also condemned the South African aggression and expressed his deep solidarity with the Angolan people. He further condemned the use of violence and the violation of territorial integrity of states. In a telephone call to President dos Santos, the president also voiced his concern over the situation now created in South-West Africa (?as a result of) this military action on the part of South Africa against Angola.

Four basic reasons prompted the president to take these steps: First respect for the principles of peaceful coexistence and justice in relations between states; second the special nature of the relations between Portugal and Angola arising from the links between the two peoples established in the course of a centuries-old relationship; third the need to contribute to reinforcement of the stands adopted by the present Cabinet while it is in office in a caretaker capacity; fourth defense of Portugal's interests in Angola and in southern Africa.

The president continues to watch closely the development of the military situation in Angola as well as the various reactions which South Africa's armed action are prompting in Portugal and in the rest of the world. [end recording]

PRIME MINISTER ON ALLEGED PSOE-CPSU PACT

PM251526 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 20 Aug 81 p 9

[Text] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo said on his arrival at Barajas Airport Tuesday evening at the end of his vacation that his party--the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD]--acted thoughtlessly in leaking the alleged agreements between the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] and the CPSU. "I do not believe a secret agreement with the CPSU can seriously be attributed to the PSOE," Calvo-Sotelo said. "That attribution seems to me an indiscretion, and reproducing it in a news bulletin another indiscretion."

According to news agency reports, Calvo-Sotelo learned of the letter sent to him by opposition leader Felipe Gonzalez in connection with these alleged agreements when he returned to his office yesterday morning, although the letter was sent 14 August. Felipe Gonzalez had stated that he would seek from the government a public denial of the UCD report, which stated that the PSOE and the CPSU had signed secret agreements whereby the Soviets would support the Spanish Socialists in attaining power in return for the latter's frontal opposition to entry [by Spain into NATO].

The Soviet paper PRAVDA and the director of the APN agency in Spain have denied the alleged secret agreements. The PSOE has threatened to begin an antigovernment campaign if such assertions concerning the alleged agreements are not denied.

UCD SECRETARY GENERAL DENIES FACTIONS IN PARTY

PM251238 Madrid ABC in Spanish 7 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] Logrono--"The 31 senators are prepared to cooperate in the party. That is what they said at the Executive Committee meeting, and I do not believe they intend to do the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] any harm; they are party comrades who adopt a stance of support for the prime minister and in favor of fulfilling our election commitment, and I do not believe the matter goes beyond that."

These were [UCD Secretary General] Rafael Calvo Ortega's words when an EFE journalist asked him about the UCD's stance on the signing by 31 UCD senators of a telegram sent to Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun in which they support everything endorsed by 39 deputies in the manifesto termed the "Moderate Platform."

As regards his party's overall situation, he said that "the UCD has problems like any other party, and ours is no exception; we have the political will to resolve them and we intend to go ahead with the pledge we made to the Spanish people."

With respect to the differences existing in the UCD, he stated that "the Executive Committee discussed this at its latest meeting, and the signatories of the document themselves formally stated that it is not a matter of an organized faction. Our rules ban these groups or factions."

The UCD secretary general added that the party is experiencing a stage of growth, with a very strong intake and setting up of local committees, and there are the normal problems. "In the democratic parties which recognize a certain internal pluralism," he said, "that internal democracy leads them into major internal debates, but that is not negative; a democratic party must be like that and not otherwise."

"The UCD's internal problems," he stated, "like those of any party, are surmounted by enhancing democracy, but it seems to me that too much importance is being attached to the UCD's problems when all the parties have the same problems; ours are less than they have been on other occasions."

Calvo Ortega concluded by asserting that "there is no secret coalition government; they are merely autonomy pacts, but nothing else. I can also state that we will not go so far as a federation of parties."

Calvo Ortega visited Logrono to attend the burial of UCD Youth Executive Committee member Juan Carlos Martinez, who was killed in a road accident in Corunna. Party Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun also went to Logrono.

U.S. N-BOMB DECISION USHERS IN 'REAGAN ERA'

PM241428 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 13 Aug 81 p 3

[Ismael Lopez Munoz article: "Where Are You Going, Reagan?"]

[Excerpts] The truce that seemed to have been reached between the two major powers with the disappearance of the previous U.S. President, Jimmy Carter, has been broken. The Reagan era is making a violent start this August 1981 with revival of the neutron bomb on the basis of a so-called "integrated battlefield strategy" which the Pentagon is formulating to assuage, on one hand, the appetites of the powerful U.S. military industry and on the other the political fears of an administration that wants to demonstrate to its Soviet rivals its readiness for any contingency and to maintain its world supremacy.

The Kremlin, which in 1978 succeeded by means of intensive and powerful propaganda to restrain an indecisive Carter, who ordered the manufacture but not the assembly of parts of the neutron bomb, has now been surprised by a decision that affects it mainly in its economy, since it must devote a large proportion of its resources to production of the weapon, which it has already tested, and once again neglect the light industry needed to improve the living standards of its citizens.

The Soviets felt humiliated in 1979 in their relations with the other major world power because the SALT II agreements, which seemed to have such excellent prospects following the kiss between Carter and Brezhnev in Vienna, never reached a satisfactory conclusion. NATO decided to deply 562 medium-range missiles. A few days before the end of the year the Soviets compensated for these displeasures with its coup in Afghanistan, leaving the U.S. President indecisive. His only response was on the domestic plane: a grain embargo and opposition to the Olympic games. The grain shortage was offset by purchases from other countries, mainly Argentina and Brazil and, via third countries, even from the United States. The Olympics maintained a high standard despite the absence of U.S. athletes, who in fact suffered the most.

With respect to last November's elections, Moscow backed Reagan; despite his being "reaction's" representative, its experiences with Carter disposed the Kremlin toward the newcomer, from whom it was hoping for a steadier negotiating stance than that displayed by the previous administration. In the first few months of Reagan's term a flirtation on both sides began which aroused hopeful speculation. But Reagan is using the summer to begin his era. The manufacture of the "N" bomb deals detente a mortal blow. There is now, since 6 August, a renewal of the arms race, a return to the umpteenth cold war and preparation for a nuclear confrontation. In a word, coexistence has been lost.

Now it will also prepare its neutron bomb to deploy it in the Warsaw Pact countries, just as the Atlantic alliance countries will have theirs. As an initial measure it is possible that the tense situation in Poland will be resolved by means of "convincing" measures. In this duel begun by the old Western movie hero, the worst thing is not "who shoots first"; what is certain is that the faster man will cause some deaths which are not in the screenplay. But the pro-NATO Europeans seem to like this version. At least they accept it. So the question is not "Where are you going, Reagan?" but "Where are you taking us?"

NORDIC PAPERS COMMENT ON U.S.-LIBYAN CLASH

PM261315 [Editorial Report] Nordic newspapers of 20, 21 and 22 August comment in their editorial columns on the incident between U.S. and Libyan aircraft in the Gulf of Sidra. Much is made of the international legal background to Libya's claim to 200 nautical miles of territorial waters--a claim which all the newspapers reject as unreasonable. The remaining discussion is devoted to speculations about the motives of the countries involved and the possible consequences arising from the clash.

Helsinki's HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish of 21 August publishes a Rafael Paro editorial which speculates on the reasons for the U.S. action: "The interlude in the Gulf of Sidra was an indication of a new U.S. determination, and this signal was addressed to many parties.

"It can be presumed to have had the greatest impact in the Middle East and in the countries around the Mediterranean. There are many governments which have either openly or more discreetly hoped for a tougher U.S. policy in the area than President Jimmy Carter displayed. These are governments which have feared communism, Arab socialism, Islamic fundamentalism and other movements inimical to the West. These government circles will probably also be prepared to applaud Reagan and his pilots--although discreetly.

Other newspapers concentrate more on the role of Libya in the incident and see this as an example of the "expansionist" policy pursued by Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi. Copenhagen's BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish of 22 August writes: "On the African Continent the Libyan expansionist endeavors have created fear and concern in many countries. The large desert nation with its tiny population and its many petroleum billions has beome one of the world's most dangerous troublemakers under Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi's leadership. The episode in the Gulf of Sidra is just one of several examples of this."

Stockholm's SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish of 21 August warns, however, against giving Al-Qadhdhafi a satisfying role to play: "Al-Qadhdhafi might seem to be a suitable object on which to demonstrate a new, tougher U.S. foreign policy. He is a man with few real friends, but with all the more enemies. His expansionist ambitions have given rise to great concern in Africa. It is true that Libya receives arms from the Soviet Union, but relations between the two countries are hardly intimate. The ideological differences are too great.

"Despite this, the outcome of the continued propaganda war between the United States and Libya is by no means certain. Playing David against the U.S. Goliath could turn out to be a rewarding role for Al-Qadhdhafi."

Oslo's AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian of 21 August voices concern over further developments: "The drama in the Gulf of Sidra has led to considerable international diplomatic activity, which indicates how explosive the situation is that has now arisen. Further developments will primarily depend on Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi's reactions, and he is an unpredictable and unbalanced political leader with ruthless ambitions and eccentric views."

Stockholm's DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish of 20 August warns of the dangers of letting the interlude assume inflated proportions: "Armed interludes between two countries are sometimes events outside the control of the governments involved. Both sides can nevertheless later choose between allowing the situation to escalate or relaxing the tensions. They determine themselves how they will exploit what has happened. It would be madness on their part to allow Wednesday's air battle to be the overture to a major new dangerous armed confrontation in the Arab world."

GOVERNMENT REACHES AGREEMENT ON DEFENSE SETTLEMENT

[Christian Broendum and Lisbeth Knudsen report: "Defense Settlement Completely Home"]

[Text] After the recently agreed defense settlement, the government has a completely free hand in the negotiations with NATO on Denmark's depot and reinforcement policies. This is clear from the final text of the defense settlement, on which agreement was finally reached last night by the Social Democrats, Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party. The settlement will be presented to the parties' Folketing groups for their approval today.

The text simply states that "the parties give their support to the government's reply of 7 May 1981 to the supreme commander of NATO forces in Europe about the latter's second draft for a reinforcement plan, stating that on the basis of the existing groundwork the government is ready to try to fix the conditions which will apply to receiving and supporting the troops which were proposed for our area in the plan."

This draft, to which the text of the settlement refers, does not mention proposals for depots in Denmark but leaves this question to bilateral negotiations between the donor and the receiver nations. These negotiations are only in their initial stages.

One of the parties involved in the settlement, the Christian People's Party, yesterday congratulated the prime minister that the Social Democrats had returned to the grouping within the Folketing, "which is needed to create stability surrounding defense and security policy." The prime minister replied: "We are also very glad that we were successful. But I would also like to express my satisfaction that some others who had moved far from us have returned to the path of reason."

Folketing Group Discussions

PM251516 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "A New Settlement"]

[Text] Poul Schlueter [Danish Conservative Party Folketing group leader] had no choice in the lsst round of talks on a new defense settlement, and he was honest enough to say "we want influence. That is why we are saying 'yes'." And so he had to accept the government's "final offer."

Especially after the discussion of the matter in the Social Democratic Folketing group, it was clear that the limit had been reached. The defense budget will increase by between 365 and 369 million kroner in the next 3-year period, and this is a considerable figure in a time of savings, but there has also been talk of making the defense forces credible and of introducing rationalizations, which could be the beginning of a necessary restructuring.

NATO's budget wish was for a 3-percent annual increase. The defense settlement will mean around a 1.5-percent increase. The last nonsocialist attempt to put pressure on the government involved an average annual increase of 2.7 percent--rising to a 4-percent increase in 1984. Of course, the total defense budget is a burden for a hard-pressed state exchequer, but it is also a consequence of the wish for continued NATO membership in a worrying time. The settlement represents what was politically possible in the present situation. Now the defense forces must show that they can live up to expectations.

COOPERATION PROGRAM CONCLUDED WITH BULGARIA

PM250921 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 20 Aug 81 p 9

[Text] Economic cooperation between Finland and Bulgaria will be expanded in the next few years, especially in the fields of forestry, mining, the construction industry and tourism.

The framework for all this is contained in the long-term program signed in Helsinki on Wednesday by Bulgarian deputy government head Andrey Lukanov and Finnish Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola.

The cooperation program, which will remain in force until 1985, makes particular mention of agriculture, the food industry, the chemical industry and cooperation on electricity supplies.

"The cooperation agreement offers excellent possibilities for more effective cooperation," Lukanov said.

According to him, the agreement means that, compared with today, trade between the countries will at least double.
